Heroic Chicago Officer
Awarded Soldier's Medal

WASHINGTON, D. C.--For heroism displayed at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., on June 27, First Lieutenant Edward J. Haynes, field artillery, of 4541 Indiana avenue, Chicago, has been awarded the Soldier's Medal, the War Department reported today.

The citation states that, "while engaged in hand grenade practice, a soldier pulled the pin and released the lever, arming the grenade. Becoming excited, he neither dropped or threw it. After an unsuccessful attempt to get him to throw it, Lieutenant Haynes, at the risk of his life, grasped the man's wrist and whirled his arm so as to fling the grenade out of the pit. The grenade exploded before clearing the parapet, seriously wounding the lieutenant and the trainee."

MOSCOW—General Charles DeGaulle of France awarded the coveted Croix de Guerre to Marcel Sauvage, a brown-skinned Martinique fighter pilot serving with the "Normandie" escadrillo on the Russian front, in an impressive ceremony here last week in the French embassy.

Pilot Sauvage has been fighting Germans in the air in Russia for about a year. In awarding the order, Gen. DeGaulle kissed Sauvage on his cheek.

During the same ceremony a large group of French personnel of the Normandie escadrille received battle awards from the Soviet government. The awards and medals were presented by Chief Soviet Air Marshal Novikov.

When De Gaulle arrived here recently, Lorenzo Taezas, Ethiopia's envoy to Russia, was one of the outstanding foreign officials in line to welcome him.

Minister Taezaz was educated in France and said his few greeting words in perfect French. I watched their warm handshake as I stood beside De Gaulle's train in the sheds of Moscow's Kurski railway station. 12-23-44

LONDON, England — (S N S)—The first Victoria Cross to be won in this war by a non-European soldier, and the first to be won by a non-white colonial, has been awarded posthumously to a Fijian corporal who deliberately sacrificed his life to save his comrades in action on Bougainville, Solomon Islands, according to the London Gazette of November 4.

He was Sefanaia Sukanaivalu, of the Third Battalion of the Fiji Infantry Regiment. His surname with tragic irony, means "Returned from the War," for he was born in 1919 when men of the Fiji Labor Corps returned after serving in the last war in France and Italy. 12-8-44

WON HIGH PRAISE

The Fiji Military Forces, composed solely of volunteers from the British Fiji Islands, have many times before won high praise for their gallantry and skill. The American forces, with whom they are now fighting, have paid tribute to them on many occasions.

The citation published in his honor follows:

"On June 23rd 1944, at Mawarada, Bougainville, in the Solomon Islands, Corporal Sefanaia Sukanaivalu crawled forward to rescue men who had been wounded when their platoon was ambushed and some of the leading elements had become casualties. 10-8-44

"After two wounded men had been successfully recovered, this NCO, who was in command of rear section, volunteered to go on further alone to try and rescue another one, in spite of machine gun and mortar fire, but on the way back he himself was seriously wounded in the groin and thighs and fell to the ground, unable to move.

BARED HIMSELF

'Several attempts were made to rescue Corporal Sukanaivalu, but without success, owing to heavy fire being encountered on each occasion and further casualties caused. This gallant NCO then called to his men not to try and get to him, as he was in a very exposed position, but they replied they would never leave him to fall alive into hands of the enemy.

"Realizing his men would not withdraw as long as they could see he was alive and knowing that they were all in danger of being killed or captured. Corporal Sukanaivalu, well aware of consequences, raised himself up in front of Japanese machine-gun fire and was riddled with bullets.

"This brave Fijian soldier, after rescuing two wounded men with greatest heroism and being gravely wounded himself deliberately sacrificed his own life because he knew that it was the only way in which the remainder of his platoon could be induced to retire from a situation in which they would have been annihilated had they not withdrawn."

SMALL 'DUNKIRK'

The action in which Corporal Sukanaivalu died has been called by a correspondent a "small-scale Dunkirk." The Fijian battalion, with an American field artillery battery and engineers, set out to raid a Japanese position many miles beyond the Allied perimeter. After penetrating deep into enemy territory they ran into fierce opposition from a superior Japanese force and the commanding officer decided it would be necessary to fall back to the nearest beach and withdraw by sea.

In response to a radio appeal, the American corps commander sent landing barges and escort vessels to the point indicated and the first platoon of the battalion reached beach just as darkness was falling. The last platoon did not arrive until nearly two hours later, and throughout that time the Japanese were making desperate attempts to cut off the Allied forces.

GAVE HIS LIFE

An officer said: "Men came out with all their arms, some walking wounded, others staggering along helping one another, some carrying dead and wounded on their backs." Men came in section by section and waited patiently for their turn to board the barges. It was during this withdrawal that Corporal Sukanaivalu sacrificed his life.

Corporal Sukanaivalu's home was on the island of Yathata in the Fiji group, where his father still lives. He went to the Davuilevu Technical school near Suva in 1938 and afterwards worked as a carpenter first in Suva and later at the gold mines at Tavua. He enlisted in 1942.

Lt. Lackey First Med Officer to Win Award

Baltimore Md

4 SILVER, 10 BRONZE

One Soldier Gets 30 Germans in One Day

By ART CARTER
AFRO War Correspondent with U.S. Troops in Italy

[Copyright, Reproduction in whole or in part expressly forbidden.]

WITH THE 92nd DIVISION IN ITALY—(By Cable)—A medical officer and former all-CIAA football star were among fourteen 92nd Division soldiers honored on Friday for gallantry in action as the division commander awarded four silver stars and ten bronze stars at a ceremony punctuated by the echo of artillery shells.

First Lt Lawrence S. Lackey of 928 Sixth Avenue, Ardmore, Okla., a member of the medical detachment with the division, was the first medical officer to receive the award. He received the silver star along with Pvt. Jake McInnis of Prentiss, Miss.; 2nd Lt. Albert E. Seay of Brooklyn, N.Y., and 1st Lt. Walter L. Vaughan of Roanoke, Va., the latter white.

Lackey lived three days and nights of hell, evacuating seventeen wounded soldiers October 7-10. He led a litter squad over a narrow mountain passage open to hostile fire to an improvised hospital in an old bomb-battered building with borrowed blankets, then leaving the wounded in the care of technicians, he returned to the rear, picked up supplies and remade the trip with the ration train.

Saved Many Lives

Two men were wounded on the return trip, but Lackey continued his hazardous journey to deliver the food and medicine, later reconnoitered for a safer route and evacuated the wounded via a new path to waiting ambulances, thereby saving many lives.

A Langston graduate, Lt. Lackey said: "I appreciate this award, but there are dozens of medical men out there doing better jobs. Every night some of my men brave enemy fire to evacuate the wounded."

McInnis displayed iron fortitude October 12 when, single-handedly, he inflicted thirty German casualties while repulsing six vigorous enemy attacks from his mountain positions. Given, a machine-gun position on a mountain top, McInnis was the target for everything in the German books—machine-gun fire, machine pistol, rifle and artillery fire—but he stayed, shot for seven hours, killing eight Nazis in one counter-attack.

He inflicted the casualties with his M-1 rifle after discovering that the traverse afforded by his tripod machine gun failed to cover all approaches of the enemy.

Lt. Seay led the patrol which wiped out an enemy machine-gun nest November 7. He was slightly wounded on the mission and the patrol was forced to withdraw without him, but he rolled and crawled back to his own lines within two days.

Ten Get Bronze Stars

T/4 Clarence M. Palmer, formerly of 1307 Division Street, Baltimore, but now of 617 Grant Street, Durham, N.C., all-CIAA tackle on the N.C. State College football team, 1932-33, was one of the ten receiving bronze stars.

Others included: T/5s Leon V. Miller, Dayton, Ohio; Louis R. Hammonds, Memphis; Cpl. Floyd Jones, NYC; Pvt. Elmer E. Patrice, Poughkeepsie, N.Y.; Sgts. Sylvester Badgett, Sumner, Miss.; Nathaniel J. Johnson, Baltimore; Robert L. Johnson, Amherst, Va., and two white officers, 2nd Lt. Ralph W. Rhodes, McLouth, Kan., and Maj. Wallace M. Hanes, Dallas, Tex.

Palmer, the division commander's clerk, went on foot four miles through shell fire to deliver a message when a reconnaisance party was pinned down for three hours by enemy artillery. His delivery of the message enabled the party to get protection and reach its objective.

Cpl. Jones, who returned to the rear echelon for spare tires and changed three tires while shells burst dangerously close, and Pvt. Patrice, who saved a jeep, were decorated for their action.

Johnson Gets 7 Krauts

S/Sgt. Johnson of Amherst was so busy trying to halt an enemy counterattack on a hilltop October 12 that he didn't hear the order to withdraw. He stayed with one wounded soldier and two others though the spot was untenable, so he deployed, directed his rifle and inflicted seven casualties before withdrawing without further casualty to his company.

Sgt. Nathaniel Johnson of Baltimore led a detail of 13 men on October 13 while delivering ammunition to another company. En route, his party was pinned down by small arms fire and he received a wound in the hand. Disregarding the wound, he continued under fire, located his unit, then led his men successfully back to their own company before going to an aid station for treatment.

T/5 Miller, communications wire chief, waded across a river to another point with a jeep completely laying a line.

T/5 Hammonds was cited for evacuating a wounded comrade under fire on November 7, and Sgt. Badgett for destroying an

NEGRO VOLUNTEERS WIN NAVY CITATION FOR FEATS ON PELELIU

The People's Voice

Washington, D. C., Nov. 28 (AP).—Volunteer services of a Negro Seabee battalion in the first hours of the 1st marine division's landing on Peleliu have won for the unit the coveted commendation "well done!"

The unit was the 17th special United States naval construction battalion serving under Lt. Comd. Moses E. Berry, Gulfport, Miss.

The first section of the battalion, the navy reported today, landed with the 1st division on Peleliu two hours after the first wave of marines hit the beaches. On the first night there was a call for volunteers when a shortage of ammunition was reported in the forward lines. Virtually the entire battalion volunteered and carried ammunition to the front and brought wounded back. The Seabees also fought when the marines became shorthanded in one sector. Some manned 37 mm. guns.

WITH THE 93RD DIVISION IN THE SOUTHWEST PACIFIC--For heoric services in the Southwest Pacific area, one colored soldier has received the Soldier's Medal and five ohters have been given the Bronze Star Medal, the War Department reported last week.

Pfc. Styman Clayton, Thomasville, Ga., recipient of the Soldier's medal, who dashed into a blazing ammunition dump near his gun position and attempted to extinguish the blaze by tossing sand and dirt on the flames, was cited for displaying quick judgment and gallantry. He sustained minor burns.

Recipients of the Bronze Star are:

Chief Warrant Officer Leon Mosby, Hamilton, Ohio; Sgt. Arthur G. Williams, Marshall, Texas; Cpl Rudolph S. Roberson, Atchinson, Kans.; Cpl. James L. Vernon, Wilcoe, W. Va.; and Pfc. Elijah Vinson, Hartsville, S. C.

They Outwitted The Enemy

Cpl. Vernon's patrol was suddenly brought under intense enemy fire while on an approach to an enemy-held ridge. During the withdrawal of the patrol the enemy succeeded in placing accurate knee mortar fire on the iron section.

The corporal located the mortar and crew, immediately crawled forward and threw a grenade which completely destroyed the enemy mortar. His voluntary action undoubtedly saved the lives of several members of the patrol.

Pfc. Vinson was a member of a patrol advancing toward an enemy-held ridge, when the patrol was suddenly fired upon from the front and flanks. Although wounded and still the object of intense enemy fire, he succeeded in silencing the enemy machine guns, allowing his patrol to withdraw.

WITH THE ALLIED FORCES IN FRANCE—(ANP)—The Soldiers Medal, sixth ranking U. S. decoration, has been awarded to Cpl. Luther J. Goodall, member of a service unit in the ETO and son of Mrs. Ruby Forbes, 1268 Bolton street, Norfolk, Va., for heroism while on duty in the Italian theater last summer.

Norfolk

Cpl. Goodall is credited with saving the life of Pfc. Robert E. Ellsworth, white, Charleston, W. Va., while in swimming behind the fifth army lines last July 11.

CAUGHT IN CURRENT

It happened during one of those "rest periods" near Marine de Grossette, Italy. Pfc. Ellsworth of Fifth Army headquarters was swimming when he noticed an increasing undertow. He started to swim back to shore but was unable to make it, so strong was the current.

He called to a nearby swimmer for help but the man continued to swim towards shore. The first to awaken to Pfc. Ellsworth's plight was T/5th Clyde T. Cummins, white, one of the swimming party who called to Pvt. Leonard Enolow who was asleep on the beach.

Pvt. Enolow grasped the situation at once and dove into the water and started to swim out to Ellsworth. The swift current and the 100 yards that he had to swim tired him out by the time that he reached the drowning soldier.

PLUNGED INTO SURF

The attention of the 19-year-old Goodall, was attracted to the plight of his fellow soldiers. Without any regard for his own safety he plunged into the treacherous surf and went to the rescue. Between himself and Pvt. Enolow they succeeded in bringing Ellsworth to shore. It would have been impossible for one of them to have brought the drowning victim in.

Goodall also holds the Good Conduct Medal for exemplary conduct. Prior to his induction in June, 1943, Cpl. Goodall was a heavy truck driver. He is a former student of a Norfolk, Va., vocational training school where he studied cabinet making and was a member of the football team.

Also promoted to captains were Robert L. Sweeney, Englewood, N.J., and Lemuel A. Penn of Washington, D.C. Captain Sweeney played an important part with the fighting elements of the division as a regimental motor officer. In the Army before Pearl Harbor, he came up from the ranks.

HOWARD ALUMNUS

Captain Penn came into the service with a B.S. and a M.S. degree from Howard university. Now a company commander, he has held many important positions in the regiment prior to his upgrading.

For heroism in a vain attempt to save the lives of their drowning comrades on separate occasions, Pvts. Willie M. Murray, Vicksburg, Miss., and James Williams were awarded the Soldier's Medal. With complete disregard for their own personal safety, both soldiers dived into deep water when their buddies lost footing on boarding YP boats and fell into the sea. The heroic efforts of the two soldiers were in keeping with the highest traditions of the Army and reflect great credit upon the men.

THREE BRONZE STARS

By direction of the President, Capts. Francis R. Brannan, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Frederick A. Harris of Utah, and 1st Sgt. Henry Neal were awarded the Bronze Star medal for meritorious service in support of operations against the enemy. Sergeant Neal is perhaps the oldest soldier in the division. He enlisted in the Regular Army in November, 1914, and served with the 9th cavalry in the Philippines seven years. Since that time he has seen service with the 10th cavalry, coming to the 93rd to help organize the present battery. Completing 30 years continuous service this month, Neal will retire to his home in Pasadena, Calif.

For meritorious service with the fighting Tan Yanks, Brig. Gen. Leonard R. Boyd was awarded the Legion of Merit and Lt. James C. Roberts of Texas, the Bronze Star.

The division now has a total award list of two Legion of Merit awards, one Silver Star, 30 Bronze Stars, four Soldier's medals and two Air medals. It has over 800 combat infantry badges and many citations, while 20 per cent of the division has received Good Conduct medals.

The Tan Yanks greeted the news of the Philippine invasion in jubilant surprise, considering it the biggest news yet. Crowded around special service radios, thousands of them listened, collected bets, and pinned new hopes on the meaning of the latest drive. A cross section interview brought out the fact that most of the men regretted missing the initial thrust. However, they take it as a wedge that will ultimately enable them to get at the enemy and help end the gigantic struggle.

Legion Of Merit Award For Soldier In England

(Defender London Correspondent)

LONDON (Somewhere in East Anglia)—At the recent dedication of the 26 who had no previous engineering experience. The presentation of the award was made by Major Cecil R. Moore, of the most complete airdrome ever to be turned over to the Air Force by American construction troops, Technical Sergeant Lawrence Hardy, of Dundee, Miss., was awarded two years at Clarksdale Agricultural high school, Clarksdale, Miss. the Legion of Merit for performing "outstanding services" in his extra- ordinary mastery of all heavy construction equipment assigned to his farm. His father and mother, John Oliver and Florence Hardy, still work the unit, although he had chief engineer. In lauding the efforts of the members of the two Negro aviation battalions, who were standing in dress parade on their field facing the platform of high-ranking officers, Major Generals Moore and Curtis and Lemay praised the efforts of the units for constructing in less than a year 74 per cent of the airdrome, in which record time the enlisted men of the two battalions voluntarily sacrificed time off and worked long hours.

The airdrome, now ready for immediate operation, has already furnished haven for six Marauders returning from operations over Europe and a number of emergency landings have been made on the field. On the reviewing stand giving invocation was Captain William M. Perkins, chaplain of one unit. Captain Perkins is a graduate of Lincoln in Pennsylvania; his home is at 213 North Horton street, West Philadelphia, Pa. Formerly pastor of the Second Baptist church in Hinton, W. Va., he is well known for his organization of the battalion's 200-voice choir that sang in Albert Hall with Roland Hayes and all over England. 5-27-44

Benediction was given by Lieutenant Henry C. Boose, chaplain of one battalion. His home is 1311 Grannis street, Port Arthur, Texas, and he is a graduate of Gammon Theological Seminary. The phenomenal work completed by the outfit was related.

They poured 280,000 square feet of concrete from six to eight inches thick, constructed 15,000 feet of drains, laid 15,000 feet of water lines, and built the operations block containing 160,000 bricks. The buildings constructed include: a Red Cross club, post theatre, post exchange, combsight stores, parachute stores, roads and tunnels and aviation and gasoline stores, brick crew rest, drying and locker rooms, transit sheds and many other housing installations. 5-27-44

Both battalions, resplendent with unit colors, gave a colorful pass in review, led by the 25-piece band. The bandleader is Sgt. Nelson, New York City, formerly with Lucky Millinder's orchestra as trumpeter before his induction. A battery of news cameramen and newsmen caught the memorable scene as huge trucks and grading equipment and road builders and armored trucks and mobile machine guns followed the marching units over the 750 acres of the airfield.

Correspondents toured the field in jeeps and were guests at tea at sergeant's mess, where this correspondent had chocolate ice cream, his first knowledge of this delicacy since leaving the States. Even the late arrival of Joe Louis failed to dull the enthusiasm of the unit. Joe was scheduled to present on behalf of Negro troops a scroll to Sgt. Alfred R. Tucker of Bunnell, Fla., Sergeant Major of heavy bombardment group. Despite transportation facilities, Joe's plane dramatically landed on the newly-dedicated field at the close of the ceremonies, and to the proud troops Joe said, "We colored troops will show Hitler with this and other work that we will win soon."

Chicago members of the unit are Sgt. Robert Woolidge, 6008 South Parkway; Mack Williams, 18 W. 45th place; Essie Collum, 6050 South Parkway; Buck Ellington, 3106 South Parkway; William Fambro, 42nd and South Parkway; James Traywick, 4758 Indiana; Alfred Cohn, 58th and Calumet; Corporals Harry Carter, 5656 South Parkway; Fred Taylor, Alfred Ford and Joe Rochelle, 5808 Michigan avenue.

Besides having one of their number receive the Legion of Merit, the battalion also boasts of Pvt. James Burnham, 51 Horace street, Dayton, Ohio, for having received "The Soldier's Medal" as a reward for heroism in 1943 and winner of Anglo-American sports award in East Anglian town. The battalions having a Red Cross club on the post and another in close neighboring town were jubilant and happy in the celebration in which many townspeople came out in trucks and by bicycles to cheer their efforts and view the ceremonies.

Led by Sgt. Jimmie Daniels, who left his famous New York night spot to become a member of this outfit, all joined in singing rollicking songs as Joe Louis took off in a plane to join his exhibition group at another base.

Sgt. Mandy James Is New GI Hero; Wears Bronze Star

By HASKELL COHEN, Courier War Correspondent

WITH 92nd DIVISION—S/Sgt. Mandy James is a hero. Members of his regiment knew long in advance that James was going to prove himself a hero. When the editors of the division infantry magazine needed a subject to illustrate their front-cover last July 15 James was an unanimous choice. He was asked to pose for this cover in all the accoutrements of a charging soldier. No explanation or caption was necessary under this picture, the troops knew instinctively that here was a perfect soldier. The editors tried to imply by picture only that here was the perfect type and were eminently successful.

PERFECT SOLDIER TYPE

Not long after the appearance of that picture Mandy James was put aboard ship and in short time was placed in the line on the Fifth Army front. In no time he proved why he was chosen to depict the perfect soldier type. A little older than the average G.I., James at 32 showed a coolness under fire and a fine sense of judgment on patrols. His commanding officer learned immediately that James was a fine hand in leading daily patrols. These patrols are sent out for four or five hours a day to contact the enemy. How they manage and what they do is up to the boys individually and as a group. A shrewd leader can be a big help on these nerve racking assignments and James was just the type.

RELATES EXPERIENCES

Your correspondent had occasion to listen to James describe some of these patrols to a group of GI's herded about the stove in press headquarters, shortly after James was awarded the Bronze Star for heroism under fire. Mandy is an unassuming fellow who speaks easily and naturally. There is no deceit or conceit about him. He knows soldiering from A to Z and likes to talk about it. In reality the fellow is a splendid raconteur and his tales of early days on the Fifth Army front really held the "hot stove" boys for the greater part of an evening.

Many of these stories were of the hair-raising type and probably are better left untold. However one story that James told about his patrol might serve to illustrate how the 92nd Division troops work under combat conditions.

ITALIAN GIRL GIVES CLUE

One evening around six o'clock, Mandy and his crew were stealthily picking their way along a roughly surfaced road when they spotted a young Italian girl, with basket on head, several hundred yards ahead, making her way toward a house that apparently was deserted. James motioned the boys to fall in line and followed the girl along the roadside. When the young woman reached the door of the supposedly deserted house a German officer appeared and took the basket from the girl. James withdrew his squad but returned to the road the next evening at the same time with a mortar squad and set up his guns within easy shelling distance of the house.

Mandy ordered the boys to wait until the girl had left her basket and was a good piece down the road before firing. Evidently the girl didn't get enough distance between herself and the farmhouse for when the firing squad bracketed the domicile with mortar fire the girl fell mortally wounded. A quick look around revealed three dead Germans who had been making their headquarters in the abandoned home.

CITATION READ

When James returned to his base he informed his commanding officer of what had transpired. The officer commended Mandy for fine leadership. Actually the action was so minute to James that he didn't deem it necessary to consult a superior officer on a plan of operation. Of such material, heroes are born. It was only a matter of time before Sergeant James received his first decoration, a Bronze Star, for leading a group of men under intense machine-gun fire to rescue his wounded commanding officer. "His heroic action, under heavy machine-gun fire, at grave personal risk, is of the highest traditions of the military service," read his citation.

The men of his regiment have taken this citation in stride, for after all, didn't they themselves pick James as the hero type back in July. He was only bearing out their wisdom in choosing him. It seems that heroes are born, for if ever a soldier was born a hero Mandy James is that man.

COLORED AIRMEN IN WHITE OUTFITS

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.

Going into Greensboro (N.C.) last week to award an Air Medal to a mother whose son lost his life while serving as a Flying Fortress gunner over Italy a year ago, the War Department was surprised to find her to be a colored woman.

One explanation was that T/Sgt. William S. Mears was fair enough to join a white bomber crew and did so.

This raises the question whether or not colored soldiers who can "pass" should do the same thing. There are arguments on both sides. 5-6-44

A light-skinned colored boy in a white outfit gets whatever promotion he earns. He learns first hand the general attitude of individual white soldiers towards colored people. He has a chance to change that attitude as much as one man can have influence. He constitutes in himself a living exhibit that segregation is based on color alone rather than worth and merit and is, therefore, asinine.

He convinces himself and his followers that with the same opportunity he is as good a soldier and companion as any of them.

These considerations, in our judgment, outweigh the chief argument on the other side, namely: a light-colored soldier in a white outfit deserts his race.

We hope that many more colored boys will not be squeamish about "going over to the other side" and becoming vocal. 5-6-44

They can do us more good there than anywhere else. Word has come to the AFRO of at least half a dozen colored boys who have followed Sergeant Mears's example. AFRO readers probably have their own lists too.

Wins Soldier's Medal For Saving Pal's Life

HEADQUARTERS, TWELFTH AIR FORCE, North Africa—Although painfully burned, S/Sgt. (then sergeant) Robert Lee Thomas, of Dallas, Texas, smothered the flames engulfing a fellow soldier with his own body and ripped off the burning clothes with his bare hands, the War Department learned this week.

For his heroism, the 38-year-old non-commissioned officer recently received the Soldier's Medal in the presence of his Military Police battalion drawn up in formation at a North African air base. Quite embarrassed by the display, Sergeant Thomas blushed boyishly and muttered "I'm mighty proud" as Major Melvin V. Engstrom, of Rawlins, Wyoming, base commander, presented him with his decoration.

"As the victim ran out into the open, fanning the flames, Sergeant Thomas pursued him and flung him to the ground,' the citation reads. "Although painfully burned in the process, Sergeant Thomas smothered the flames with his own body and tore off the burning clothes with his bare hands.

"Sergeant Thomas' heroism and devotion to duty reflect great credit upon himself and the military service of the United States," the citation concluded. 4-1-44

U. S. BOMBER BASE, EAST ANGLIA.—(ANP)— The Legion of Merit was awarded T/Sgt. Lawrence Hardy, 22, of Dundee, Miss., Saturday for devotion to duty that was an inspiration to his regiment in an aviation engineer battalion. Hardy is believed to be the first Negro so honored in this theatre of war.

Hardy mastered the operation and repair of several kinds of machines used in the building of airdromes, the job of aviation engineers, although his preinduction experience had been limited to work on his father's farm. He has been in the army two years.

According to the citation, read before his regiment while he was decorated by Maj. Gen. Cecil R. Moore, chief army engineer in Great Britain, Hardy perfected mechanical skill in one year's time and because of the shortage of mechanics he often volunteered to work both shifts of long working days designed to rush priority airfield construction.

Hardy and his regiment have materially shortened the highway to Berlin by their brilliant fast work, Maj. Crustise E. LeMay, leader of one of the 8th air force's heavy bombardment divisions, told the unit.

Gen. Mark Clark Lauds Unit For 'Unswerving Devotion'

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa 4-1-44

WITH THE FIFTH ARMY, ITALY—A Negro service unit is the first to be presented with the Fifth Army Plaque, an award of merit established several months ago, the War Department announced. The unit is one of three others which have been similarly recognized for service rendered at the same time. In the citation which accompanied the award, Lt. Gen. Mark W. Clark, commanding general of the Fifth Army, wrote:

"Often in the face of serious obstacles and always with unswerving devotion to the supreme purpose of destroying the enemy, you have established an outstanding record in the performance of services invaluable to the Fifth Army. Each of you should feel justifiable pride in a job well done, and in your comrades and in your unit. Especially you should take pride in having so active a part in protecting and maintaining the principles for which we fight."

IN ITALIAN HARBOR

The award was in recognition of the unit's activities at an important Italian harbor. Each evening during December the service group provided the smoke which screened the harbor and its installations from air observation, and in many instances performed that function under heavy attacks from enemy aircraft. Using smoke pots and special smoke generators, the men remained on duty throughout the night, keeping vigil against sneak air raids.

The following enlisted men are members of the group:

WITH ELEMENTS OF THE 93rd AT BOUGAINVILLE — Elements of the 93rd, winning battle stars and scars on this former Japanese-held island, have entered society of hard fighting war vets. Many of them in a different branch of the service are of the same race and are winning a place in the history of fighting men for Tan Yanks of the present and future. Such a group is the Air Base Security battalion of the 13 AF Service Command. These men gladdened the hearts of our people last week when they were singled out for War department honors.

WITH THE 15TH AIR FORCE IN ITALY—Capt. Harold E. Sawyer, 24, son of Mr. and Mrs. Carrol H. Sawyer, Columbus, Ohio, has been awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross for extraordinary achievement in aerial flight. Captain Sawyer is a P-51 Mustang fighter pilot in the all-Negro fighter group which is actively engaged in long range escort for the 15th AAF heavy bombers and has participated in the strafing of enemy ground targets and installations.

The citation reads: "On July 25, 1944, while on an escort mission to Lins, Germany, Captain Sawyer was the element leader of the last flight of his squadron entering the target area. This squadron was attacked by more than 40 Me-109s, enemy aircraft. Sighting the enemy, Captain Sawyer instantly seized the initiative, turned with his wing man and closed in almost immediately.

"He was informed that the guns of his wing man's plane were not functioning. Fully realizing the responsible position into which he had been thrown, Captain Sawyer with calm efficiency took upon himself the protection of his comrade against overwhelming odds.

"Not only did he succeed in this endeavor, but also managed to thwart the effectiveness of the enemy's inital attack and to repel another attack that six Me-109s were making on the bombers. In the encounter he destroyed one Me-109 and severely damaged two others.

RETURNS TO BASE

"Finally, after all of his ammunition had been expended he broke away from the enemy and with his wing man returned safely to base.

"Captain Sawyer has demonstrated this same extraordinary courage, devotion to duty and steadfastness throughout his outstanding record of 70 successfully completed missions against the enemy. His superior leadership and flying ability have reflected great credit upon himself and the Army Air Forces of the United States of America." 12-16-44

Captain Sawyer is a veteran combat pilot with the group, having been overseas more than ten months before he returned recently to the United States on leave. He has been previously awarded the Air Medal with seven oak leaf clusters for meritorious achievement in aerial flight as a pilot of fighter-type aircraft.

A graduate of Tuskegee institute in 1942, where he received his Bachelor of Science degree, he was gradauted from the Tuskegee Army Flying school April 29, 1943, as a fighter pilot in the AAF. The fighter group now lists 17 winners of the Distinguished Flying Cross.

KILLS 200 GERMANS TO WIN SILVER STAR

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.

Pittsburgh, Pa. 12-30-44

WITH THE U. S. THIRD ARMY—Many stories of heroism and bravery developed about the 761st Tank Battalion, the first Negro armored unit to enter combat, during its first ten days of battle with Maj. Gen. Williard S. Paul's 26th Division. The tankers served as one of the spearhead elements in the division's drive to its initial objective, which was taken November 20.

Among them, the feats of S/Sgt. Ruben Rivers, Tecumseh, Okla., son of Mrs. Lillian Rivers, stand out like a beacon. The daring tank commander was awarded the Silver Star following the slaying of an estimated 200 or more Germans. He took his tank into the thick of every battle and it became a popular theme that when Company A entered battle, "Rivers led the way," for he was always there first.

ACCURATE GUNNER ACCOUNTS FOR 20 12-30-44

A few days after Lt. Col. Hollis A. Hunt, commander of the 761st, pinned the Silver Star on Sergeant Rivers, his unit again went into battle at Guebling, a key communications point for German lines between Chateau-Salins and Saarburg, Rivers' tank hit a mine and was knocked out. He climbed out of the disabled tank, got into another, and continued fighting.

Pfc. Obie J. Smith, a quiet young fellow who came to the Army from the little town of Leevale, W.Va., is the gunner of a light tank in Lt. Richard English's company. On "D-Day" for the unit. Smith, one of the most accurate gunners in the company, personally accounted for 20 Germans killed. He is married to Mrs. Marie Smith of Leevale, and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Isom Smith, reside at Laing, W.Va.

Sgt. Warren Creecy of Corpus Christi, Texas, won the reputation of being the most fearless man in his company by his repeated exposures of his person to enemy fire as he rescued fellow tankers, provided protection for infantry units, and performed other feats of valor which have won commendation for him.

BRILLIANT PERFORMANCE

On November 10 at Morville, the battalion's tough spot, Sergeant Creecy returned through enemy positions under heavy artillery to get aid to his men after his tank had been disabled by anti-tank fire. He then led other tanks to a point from which destructive fire could be brought upon the enemy.

A few minutes later he mounted the "ack-ack" gun of another vehicle and while still under fire aided in the annihilation of enemy artillery observers who directed the fire that pinned down our infantry. This permitted the ground units to move forward. 12-30-44

The day before, Sergeant Creecy had moved ahead of the infantry without regard for his personal safety and destroyed German machinegun positions and Jerry rocket-launcher teams. Then when his own tank was mired down in the mud, he dismounted and performed operations leading to the extraction of the tank. He then mounted the rear of the tank and held his AA gun on enemy positions to protect an infantry unit. He personally eradicated the enemy guns.

OFFICERS SPUR MEN TO ACTION 12-30-44

Crew members of Sergeant Creecy's tank include Sgt. Roy L. Robinson of Spartanburg, S.C., the driver, and Pfc. Raymond G. Johnson, Evanston, Ill., gunner.

In the same area, the crew of tank commander S/Sgt. Jack Gilbert, dismounted and recaptured their tank after it had been hit and taken by the Germans. With him were Gunner, Pfc. Judge Favors, Plant City, Fla.; bow gunners, Pfc. Albert D. Fulwood, Huntington, W.Va., and driver, Sgt. James C. Harris, Detroit, Mich.

Spurring his men to keep moving forward, Lieutenant English, commander of the company, took a tommy-gun from one of the tanks, and proceeded on foot to perform reconnaissance to direct the movement of his unit. He is a former instructor in the Hoffman school, New Orleans, and made his home at 705 Vernon street. A graduate of Dillard university, he is married to Mrs. Loretta English, and is the father of three sons, Richard, Jr., Ernest and James.

Characteristic of the attitude of these new arrivals to the combat scene was their reaction when Jerry AT guns or bazooka teams knocked out tanks in Capt. Irvin McHenry's company. The crews would leap out, get under the tank and continue their fire with machine guns. One German company facing Captain McHenry's unit near Morville, was practically annihilated by this small arms fire. 12-30-44

FORM CREWS INTO DEFENSE TEAM

1/Sgt. Samuel J. Turley, Bronx, New York City, demonstrated his sterling leadership qualities by organizing his tank crews into defense teams when his vehicles had been hit and set afire. By this strategy several crews were permitted to escape from their burning tanks.

S/Sgt. Frank C. Cochrane, Brockway, N.Y., assisted in evacuating the tank gunner, Cpt. Carlton Chatman of Pembroke, Va., and tank commander, T/5 George Collier, Tampa, Fla., after their tank had been hit. While under direct fire, he assisted T/5 Collier into his own tank, saving his life.

Gunner Dwight Simpson, Rock Island, Ill., rescued T/4 Horatio Scott, Lynn, Mass., from his burning tank. 12-30-44

These and many other deeds of valor marked the first ten days of combat for the first Negro tank battalion and gained for the entire unit the praise of the division commander. Lt. Gen. George S. Patton, Jr., has manifested personal interest in the tankers on several occasions. An appropriate citation is being recommended for the battalion for its services with the 26th Division.

WINS SOLDIER'S MEDAL FOR SAVING WHITE SOLDIER IN ITALY

Savannah Tribune 12-28-44

WITH THE ALLIED FORCES IN FRANCE, (ANP)— The Soldier's medal, sixth ranking U. S. decoration, has been awarded to Cpl. Luther J. Godall, member of a service unit in the ETO and son of Mrs. Ruby Forbes of 1268 Bolton street, Norfolk, Va., for heroism while on duty in the Italian theatre last summer. Cpl. Goodall is credited with saving the life of Pfc. Robert E. Ellsworth, white, Charleston, W. Va., while swimming behind the fifth army lines last July 11.

It happened during one of those "rest periods" near Marino de Crosetto, Italy. Pfc Ellsworth of fifth army headquarters with others was swimming when he noticed an increasing undertow. He started to swim back to shore but was unable to make it, so strong was the current. When the youth realized that he was unable to make it, he called to a nearby swimmer for help but the man continued to swim toward shore. The first to awaken to Pfc. Ellsworth's plight was T-5th Clyde T. Cummins, white, one of the swimming party who called to Pvt. Leonard Enslow who was asleep on the beach. Pvt. Enslow grasped the situation at once and dove into the water and started to swim out to Ellsworth. The swift current and the 100 yards that he had to swim tired him out by the time that he reached the drowning soldier.

The attention of the 19 year old Negro soldier attracted to the commotion and the plight of his fellow soldiers. Without any regard for his own safety he plunged into the treacherous surf and went to the rescue. Between himself and Pvt. Enslow they succeeded in bringing Ellsworth to shore. It would have been next to impossible for one of them to have brought the drowning man in.

At the time of his heroic act Cpl. Goodall was a first class private having been promoted to his present rank a month later. Goodall also holds the Good Conduct medal for exemplary conduct. Prior to his induction in June, 1943, Cpl. Goodall was a heavy truck driver. He is a former student of a Norfolk, Va., vocational training school where he studied cabinet making and was a member of the football team.

TASK UNIT 21.14, including the escort aircraft carrier USS CARD and its escort destroyers, the USS BARRY, USS BORIE and USS GOFF, along with its air squadrons, COMPOSITE ONE AND COMPOSITE NINE, was awarded the Presidential Unit Citation for its anti-submarine activities in the Atlantic. 8-4-44

Each man attached to the vessels or squadrons is entitled to wear the ribbon and each received a copy of the citation, which reads:

"For outstanding performance during anti-submarine operations in mid-Atlantic from July 27, 1943. At a time when continual flow of supplies along the United States-North Africa convoy route was essential to the maintenance of our established military supremacy and to the accumulation of reserves, the CARD, her embarked aircraft and her escorts pressed home a vigorous offensive which was largely responsible for the complete withdrawal of hostile U-boats from this vital supply area. Later, when submarines returned with deadlier weapons and augmented anti-aircraft defenses this heroic Task Unit, by striking damaging blows at the onset of renewed campaigns, wrested the initiative from the enemy before actual inception of projected large-scale attacks. Its distinctive fulfillment of difficult and hazardous missions contributed materially to victorious achievements by our land forces." 8-4-44

Highest Award Given Seaman By Roosevelt

Presentation Is Made In Son Pedro, California

(Washington Bureau Of The Atlanta Daily World And NNPA)

WASHINGTON — The highest award to a merchant seaman, "The Merchant Marine Distinguished Service Medal", of which approximately only 70 have been given since creation of the medal by Congress is 1939, was presented Sunday by President Roosevelt to a Negro seaman, Fred C. Archibald, of Columbia, South America, for distinguished service in the line of duty.

The presentation was made in San Pedro, California, on behalf of the president by Telfair Knight, Assistant Administrator in Charge of Training for the War Shipping Arministration. Archibald, who became an American pitizen just nine days ago, was saved from a horrible death or injury in the recent explosion of the Liberty Ship E. A. Bryan at Port Chicago, Calif., on which he was serving, because he was away on leave in San Francisco, to get his citizenship papers when the tragey which killed over 300 men occured. The citation accompanying the award to Archibald, who has been going to sea for the past 29 years, and who was only six days out of Pearl Harbor when the Japs attacked on December 7, 1941, reads:

MANNED GUNS 8-2-44

"The President of the United States takes pleasure in presenting the Merchant Marine Distinguished Service Medal to Fred C. Archibald for distinguished service in the line of duty. For 18 months the ship in which he was serving operated in the Southwestern Pacific under especially hazardous conditions as i was at all times in the danger zones unescorted and only little armed. In the attack on Port Darwin and in the nine succeeding days when most of the crew had left the ship, he with his Captain and four officers and men manned two machine guns and so successfully defended the ship that it was the only one not destroyed. After the first attack this small group protestingly left the ship upon orders of the military authorities, but subsequently returned, got under way and took their ship into the harbor each morning and returned, to the dock each night to discharge cargo so as not to endanger the dock during daylight

"Because of the indominatable determination and courage of these six men, they succeeded in deiverring gasoline so vitally necessary to Army operations His loyalty to his ship and his devotion to duty have added another inspirational chapter to the history of the United States Merchant Marine.

The citation was signed for the President by Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the United States Maritime commission,

FOURTEEN WIN AWARDS WITH 92nd IN ITALY

Pittsburgh Pa.

Pgh. Courier 11-25-44

By HASKELL COHEN, Courier War Correspondent.

WITH THE 92nd IN ITALY—The dull booming of heavy artillery in the background bore strong witness to the nearness of the fighting to 14 heroes decorated last Friday morning in a Liguarian sea battle-front town. As the roaring waves of the nearby sea echoed the cannonading, the commanding officer of the 92nd division handed out four silver stars and ten bronze stars to the gallant members of his force.

AIDS WOUNDED MEN

Two men in the returning ration train were wounded but reached the destination. The next day Lackey returned to the stricken company at the front and brought enough litter carriers. He reconnoitered for a safe route and evacated the wounded to waiting ambulances. 11-25-44

SETS OFF LAND MINE

Lieutenant Seay was the leader of a combat patrol that came under heavy enemy fire. While reconnoitering positions which his unit later occupied, he touched off a land mine and sustained serious wounds. The patrol wiped out one enemy machine gun nest but was forced to return without its leader. Despite his wounds, Seay managed to crawl and roll back to his own lines, two days later.

Lieutenant Lackey on October 7 learned that a company with seven casualties could be reached by one rear route. He mustered a litter squad and reached the group in- tact with his squad. Upon his arrival Lackey found 17 casualties, instead of seven, with no way of evacuation. The lieutenant selected an abandoned hospital site, organized wards, placed the wounded under technicals and returned the next day to the rear for supplies.

On October 12, Private McGinnis was given a machine gun position atop a hill to protect. With an M-1 rifle he stayed in position, receiving enemy machine gun, pistol, rifle and artillery fire. Within six hours he repelled vigorously six enemy counter-attacks. Once, finding that the tripod of his gun prevented him from covering all the approaches, he held the gun on the rocks and caused 13 enemy casualties.

Bronze stars went to Maj. Wallace M. Hanes, white, Dallas, Tex.; 2nd Lt. Ralph W. Rhodes, white, McLouth, Kas.; T/Sgt. Louie Hammonds, Memphis, Tenn.; Sgt. Sylvester Badgett, Sumner, Miss., who is missing in action—his next of kind, Mrs. Emma L. Badgett, has been notified; S/Sgt. Robert L. Johnson, Amherst, Va.; Cpl. Floyd Jones, New York City; S/Sgt. Nathaniel I. Johnson, Baltimore, Md.; T/4 Clarence M. Palmer, Durham, N.C.; T/5 Leon V. Miller, Dayton, Ohio; Pvt. Elmer A. Patrice, Poughkeepsie, N.Y.—all for meritorious service in combat.

Combat infantryman badges went to Lt. Col. George Weber, Capt. Curtis Javey, Sgts. Elihu Jackson, Eddie Lee, Robert Grady, Kelious McDonald, Charles Smith, and Eligia Glass, S/Sgts. Alfred Richards, Elwell Wilson and Keith Goodall, Pvts. Beobrac Moss, Daniel Hewett, Frederick Allseyne, Samuel Lewis, H. L. Lanier, and O. B. Daniel—for exemplary action against the enemy.

Awarded Silver Star For Heroism In South Pacific

12-23-44 N.Y.

YONKERS N. Y. — Friends here are congratulating the family of Corporal Technician Marcus P. Sanchez, 192 Warburten avenue, who has been awarded a silver star for gallantry in action.

The citation accompanying the award said:

On May 29, 1944, he exposed himself to mortar and small arms fire, without regard to his safety, successfully to rescue a platoon of men from a dangerously exposed position in the vicinity of Parai Jetty, Biak Island, New Guinea. A member of the crew of an amphibious truck, he accomplished a mission of evacuating wounded personnel from there and evacuated in an operation requiring two trips. This act, under heavy fire, saved the lives of those men."

First Victoria Cross For Colored Colonial

Tribune — Philadelphia, Pa.

The first Victoria Cross to be won in this war by a non-European soldier, and the first to be won by a non-white colonial, has been awarded posthumously to a Fijian corporal who deliberately sacrificed his life to save his comrades in action on Bougainville, Solomon Islands, according to the London Gazette of November 4.

He was Safanaia Sukanaivalu, of the Third Battalion of the Fiji Infantry Regiment. His surname with tragic irony, means "Returned from the War," for he was born in 1919 when men of the Fiji Labor Corps returned after serving in the last war in France and Italy. 12-9-44

The Fiji Military Forces, composed solely of volunteers from the British Fiji Islands, have many times before won high praise for their gallantry and skill. The American forces, with whom they are now fighting, have paid tribute to them on many occasions.

The citation published in his honor follows: 12-9-44

"On June 23, 1944, at Mawarada, Bougainville, in the Solomon Islands, Corporal Sefanaia Sukanaivalu crawled forward to rescue men who had been wounded when their platoon was ambushed and some of the leading elements had become casualties.

"After two wounded men had been successfully recovered, this NCO, who was in command of rear action, volunteered to go on further alone to try and rescue another one, in spite of machine gun and mortar fire but on the way back he himself was seriously wounded in the groin and thighs and fell to the ground, unable to move.

"Several attempts were made to rescue Corporal Sukanaivalu, but without success, owing to heavy fire being encountered on each occasion and further casualties caused. This gallant NCO then called to his men not to try and get to him as he was in a very exposed position, but they replied they would never leave him to fall alive into hands of the enemy.

"Realizing his men would not withdraw as long as they could see he was alive and knowing that they were all in danger of being killed or captured, Corporal Sukanaivalu, well aware of consequences, raised himself up in front of Japanese machine-gun fire and was riddled with bullets.

"This brave Fijian soldier, after rescusing two wounded men with greatest heroism and being gravely wounded himself, deliberately sacrificed his own life because he knew that it was the only way in which the remainder of his platoon could be inducted to retire from a situation in which they would have been annihilated had they not withdrawn."

The action in which Corporal Sukanaivalu died has been called by a correspondent a "small-scale Dunkirk." The Fijian battalion, with an American field artillery battery and engineers, set out to raid a Japanese position many miles beyond the Allied perimeter. After penetrating deep into enemy territory they ran into fierce opposition from a superior Japanese force and the commanding officer decided it would be necessary to fall back to the nearest beach and withdraw by sea.

In response to a radio appeal, the American corps commander sent landing barges and escort vessels to the point indicated and the first platoon of the battalion reached beach just as darkness was falling. The last platoon did not arrive until nearly two hours later, and throughout that time the Japanese were making desperate attempts to cut off the Allied forces.

An officer said: "Men came out with group, where his fathe all their arms, some walking wounded went to the Davulevu others staggering along helping one near Suva in 1938 another, some carrying dead and worked as a carpente wounded on their backs." Men came and later at the gold tiently for their turn to board the barges. It was during this withdrawal that Corporal Sukanaivalu's home was at Yathata in the Fiji s father still lives. He ilevu Technical school 1938 and afterwards rpenter first in Suva gold mines at Tavua 1942.

Bronze Star For Gallantry

Norfolk - Journal & Guide

Norfolk Va.

Staff Sergeant Mandy James, of Newport News, Va., a soldier of the 92nd Infantry Division, was recently awarded the Bronze Star for gallantry in action October 12 when he, braving intense machine gun fire, gathered a group of men and led them to the rescue of his commanding officer who had fallen painfully wounded during the bloody battle for a mountain on the coastal sector of the Fifth Army front. The men carried the wounded officer from the exposed position, where he had fallen, to a place of comparative safety.

MANY AWARDS GO TO NEGRO SOLDIERS

29 Receive Bronze and Silver Stars and 188 Purple Heart in Europe and the Pacific

Negro soldiers operating tank destroyers in the front lines, constructing airfields in forward areas, baking bread under enemy fire and moving supplies to enable our armies to advance without a "hitch" have won high praise from star rank officers, according to War Department announcements made public yesterday making public the Bronze and Silver Stars to twenty-nine men and the Purple Heart decoration to 188 aviation engineers. 12-18-44

Working under back-breaking schedules, often going for days without sleep, Negro soldiers in the Quartermaster Corps kept gasoline flowing to the front to enable the First, Third and Ninth Armies to maintain their steady advance through France and into Germany. In asking official recognition for men of his unit, one commander summed up their achievement by simply saying: "They deliver."

For "fidelity and proficiency" a Negro engineer aviation battalion, representing nearly every State in the Union, was honored as it moved into forward combat area in the central Pacific. Since it was alerted for overseas, the group has not had a single AWOL case, an almost unbelievable record, more remarkable, according to the battalion's commander, because the average age of the men is 22 years and there is a very high percentage of 18-year-olds.

Master Sergeant Christopher T. Green of 140 Somerset Street, Newark, N. J., sergeant-major of the battalion, rewarded for initiative and ability in the handling of administrative work, won the stripes for the highest enlisted men's grade in the short space of four months. His capability, according to his battalion commander, is not limited to administrative functions, as he is an excellent field soldier as well. 12-18-44

Under hazardous conditions members of the 4353d Quartermaster Bakery Company in France have been turning out bread for 78,000 combat-boun dtroops each day. The special mobile unit consists of eighty-one Negro soldiers who have moved with the Army since Paris was freed. They were baking bread while bullets still were whistling through the streets.

For gallantry and heroism in combat, seven Silver Stars and twenty-two Bronze Stars were awarded to Negro soldiers with the Ninety-second (Buffalo) Division in Italy. Those from the New York area are: 12-18-44

'Red Ballers' Lauded By Ike

Daily World — Atlanta, Ga.

HEADQUARTERS EUROPEAN THEATER OF OPERATIONS—On behalf of General Eisenhower, Major General E .S. Hughes, decorated Corporal Robert F. Bradley, of Lynchburg, Virginia, Negro truck driver on the Army's famed "Red Ball Highway," with a Bronze Star Medal, and lauded the work of the thousands of Negro quartermaster truck drivers who are hauling vital front-line supplies over this 400-mile one-way loop, day and night, to the fighting fronts.

Sixty per cent of the drivers are Negroes. Stopping huge convoy on the outskirts of Paris, Major General Hughes pinned the decration on Corporal Bradley, in a surprise ceremony which caught the entire trucking group unaware. He told me that he would have liked to present all of them with medals, but that "Bradley was chosen as a representative of the whole Red Ball Highway, including the men who repair the roads and bridges, put up the telephone wires and do all the service work in the rear. 10-13-44

General Eisenhower realizes that you men soldom get the same recognition as soldiers in the front line and wants you to know that the part you're playing is vital. His message is for every man engaged on this vast project; the troops at the front couldn't do without you."

The Motor Transport Brigade initiated the Red Ball Highway in August to meet the needs for swifter delivery of supplies to the First and Third Armies in their drive towards Germany.

Major General Frank Ross, Chief of Transportation, Communications Zone, disclosed that the route is four times the length of the Burma Road and that in its first 26 days of operation it hauled and delivered more than 200,000 tons of supplies to advanced depots, where front-line units pick it up with their hauling units. 10-13-44

Speedier supply became acutely necessary when Lieutenant General George S. Patton's Third Army broke through at St. Lo, and rapidity through France. And so the Red Ball Highway came into existence, with thousands of truck drivers pulling 24-hour a day shifts, as the long convoys rolled across specially designated one-way military highways through France. 10-13-44

The vast line has become the biggest chain of supply being maintained by U. S. forces today.

Highest Award Won By Colored Seaman

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—The highest award to a merchant seaman, The Merchant Marine Distinguished Service Medal, of which approximately only 70 have been awarded since creation of the medal by Congress in 1939, was presented last week by President Roosevelt to a Negro seaman, Fred C. Archibald of Columbia, South America, for distinguished service in the line of duty.

The presentation of the award was made in San Pedro, California on behalf of the President by Telfair Knight, assistant administrator in charge of training for the War Shipping Administration.

Archibald, because he was off duty to get his American Citizenship papers of nine days before receiving this honor, was saved from a horrible death or injury in the recent explosion of the liberty ship E. A. Bryan at Port Chicago, California on which he was serving, which killed over 300 men.

The citation accompanying the award to Archibald reads:

The President of the United States takes pleasure in presenting the Merchant Marine Service Medal to Fred C. Archibald for distinguished service in the line of duty.

Defend Ship

"For 18 months the ship in which he was serving operated in the Southwestern Pacific under especially hazardous conditions, as it was at all times in the danger zone, was unescorted ,and only a little armed. In the attack on Port Darwin and in the nine succeeding days when most of the crew had left the ship, he, with his captain and four officers and men manned two machine guns and so successfully defended the ship that it was the only one of twelve merchant vessels in the harbor not destroyed.

"After the first attack this small group protestingly left the ship upon orders of the military authorities, but subsequently returned, got under way and took their ship into the harbor each morning and returned to the deck each night to discharge cargo so as not to endanger the dock during daylight.

"Because of the indomitable determination and courage of these six men, they succeeded in delivering gasoline so vitally necessary to Army operations.

"His loyalty to his ship and his devotion to duty have added another inspirational chapter to the history of the United States merchant marine."

8-12-44

The citation was signed for the President by Admiral Emory Scott Land, chairman of the United States Maritime Commission.

Baltimorean Proves Hero

Lt. Glover, whose mother, Mrs. Claudia Glover, lives at his Baltimore address, won his citation for his successful leadership of an important reconnaisance patrol on the night of November 24, during which he endangered his own life

Gets Efficiency Award

M/Sgt. Parks was awarded the Legion of Merit for his efficiency as operations sergeant of his combat team during the period from July 31 to September 9, during which his efforts made possible the unit's clever operation after its executive officer was killed and additional duties imposed on other staff officers. He was employed in a Washington undertaking establishment prior to induction. He has a wife, Lillian, and no children. Parks is a former Villanova student. 12-30-44

Sergeant Graham was cited for gallantry in action on November 22 when, as radio operator for his platoon, attacking an important objective, he braved intense enemy machine gun and heavy mortar fire alone to climb to a vantage observation post and direct successful counterfire on the Germans by radio, silencing the machine gun and several of their mortars. Unmarried, his mother, Mrs. Irma Graham, lives at his Philadelphia address.

S/Sgt. Crampton was cited for bravery in action while a squad leader of a unit attempting to take an enemy-held hill on December 5. In the face of heavy enemy fire, he advanced alone to a point where he could direct his unit's fire on German positions, aiding in the capture of the objective.

Courage Wins Recognition

T/Sgt. Birdsong won the Legion of Merit for courageous action on the night of August 30 when he was second in command of the first American reconnaissance patrol to cross the Arno River. Birdsong, after his commander and several other members became separated from the unit in darkness, led the remaining men across for the accomplishment of his mission successfully.

Returning, Birdsong found that he was short of one man, so he went across the river again alone, under enemy fire, and directed his companion back safely. He was commissioned as a result of this and his previous exhibitions of leadership qualities. He has been in the Army two years and has a wife, Lottie.

S/Sgt. Davis, the other of the three Legion of Merit winners, which is the fourth highest Army award, was cited for exceptional work in preparing his combat team for action while functioning as operations sergeant. Barely 5 feet tall and weighing less than 110 pounds, fully equipped, Sergeant Davis holds the Combat Infantryman badge and is the smallest man I have seen in combat.

Gen. Truscott Satisfied

He is unmarried and a former case reader in the Department of Public Assistance in Uniontown, Pa. 12-30-44

Following an inspection tour of several 92nd units, General Truscott stated that he was highly pleased with what he had observed and expressed the belief that the men are capable of meeting any test.

Maj. Gen. Edward M. Almond, 92nd commander, at an elaborate luncheon following the ceremony, reminded the men that he desired that the division make its most creditable eorts now so that it will lon gbe remembered after the war. He stressed the fact that worthwhile results and not just good intentions are needed from officers and men.

As a parting thought, General Truscott, veteran theatre campaigner, advised the men that he expected them to keep in tiptop physical condition through knowledge of their jobs from division officers and men, adding that these would determine their accomplishments.

latest winner of the Distinguished Flying Cross, according to an announcement here Sunday. Having been overseas more than ten months, before he recently returned to the States on leave, Captain Sawyer was previously awarded the Air Medal with seven oak leaf clusters for meritorious service with the group.

Downs One; Damages 2

The DFC was awarded as a result of a bomber escort mission over Linz, Germany, last July 25 when his efforts as element leader of one flight of his squadron were credited with successfully driving off forty-odd German planes which were attacking the bombers.

During the attack, the veteran combat pilot destroyed one ME-109 and damaged two others. He now has two air victories to his credit and was among several of the group's pilots credited a few months ago with sinking an enemy destroyer.

Captain Sawyer's DFC citation reads:

"On July 25, 1944, while on an escort mission to Linz, Germany, Captain Sawyer was element leader of the last flight of his squadron. Upon entering the target area this squadron was attacked by 40-plus ME-109 enemy aircraft.

Repels Second Attack

"Sighting the enemy, Captain Sawyer instantly seized the initiative, turned with his wingman and closed in. Almost immediately he was informed that the guns on his wingman's plane were not functioning.

"Fully realizing the responsible position into which he had been thrown, Captain Sawyer, with calm efficiency, took upon himself the protection of his comrades against overwhelming odds.

"In the ensuing battle, not only did he succeed in this endeavor, but also managed to thwart the effectiveness of the enemy's initial attack and repel another attack that six ME-109 enemy aircraft were making on the bombers.

"In the encounter he destroyed one ME-109 and severely damaged two others. Finally, after all his ammunition had been expended, he broke away from the enemy and with his wingmen returned safely to base.

Made 70 Missions

"Captain Sawyer has demonstrated this same extraordinary courage and devotion to duty and steadfastness throughout his outstanding record of seventy successfully completed missions against the enemy.

"His superior leadership and flying ability have reflected great credit upon himself and the Army Air Forces of the United States of America."

Captain Sawyer is a 1942 graduate of Tuskegee Institute and finished the Army Flying School there April 29, 1943. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Carroll S. Sawyer, live in Columbus.

Atlanta Negro Gets Bronze Star For Achievement

12-11-44

An Atlanta Negro boy, a field artillery sergeant, played a part so prominent in keeping American guns and soldiers supplied with ammunition during the "breakthrough" in France and the drive into Germany, that he has been awarded the Bronze Star, one of the higher awards for meritorious service in combat.

He is Sgt. John A. Burns, 23, who went into the Army in Atlanta in 1942. Left an orphan at an early age, he was reared by two aunts, who are as proud a pair of sisters as Atlanta knows today, because of the accomplishments of "their boy." They are Trained Nurse Lena Carter and Cateress Polly May Cummings, who took over the rearing of the boy when his parents died.

He graduated at David T. Howard school and went to Washington High school. Howard school has already had a celebration in his honor.

Sgt. Burns kept the long line of ammunition trucks moving night and day, over roads subjected to frequent enemy air attack, and his feat in keeping plenty of ammunition at the front and not losing a man or a truck, won him the medal and citation which reads:

"Technical Sergeant John A. Burns, Field Artillery, United States Army, for meritorious achievement in connection with military operations against the enemy from 20 July 1944 to 3 October 1944 in France. Sergeant Burns performed outstanding and meritorious services as commander of the battalion ammunition train." 12-11-44

Sgt. Burns, during this period, kept his battalion constantly supplied with ammunition without loss of a man or truck of his detail.

"Due to the initiative and untiring efforts exemplified by Sergeant Burns, the ammunition train kept on operating during the nights despite the congested roads frequently subjected to enemy air attacks. The continuous devotion to duty and aggressiveness displayed by Sergeant Burns reflect great credit upon himself and constitute the highest traditions of the armed forces."

GENERAL EISENHOWER GIVES CITATIONS TO TWO UNITS

, American Negroes may be proud of the citations General Eisenhower has just given to two Negro units which took part in the D-day operations in Normandy. One was an anti-aircraft battalion which landed "under artillery, machine-gun and rifle fire" and despite losses "carried out its mission with courage and determination." The other was a quartermaster company, which also went ashore under fire, salvaged most of its equipment and within three days had 90 percent of its vehicles "operating on a twenty-four-hour basis." Americans who are not of the Negro race may be proud of these men, too.

Nor should there be surprise at the record. The Negro furnished more than 340,000 men to the Army in the first World War. Nearly half of these soldiers worked as stevedores, performing their tasks faithfully, sometimes under fire, but without the glory that came to combat troops. The Negro divisions, the 92nd and 93rd, saw front-line service. Of those two divisions two companions broke in one of the Argonne offensives perhaps because of mistaken orders. Even in those companies three Negro officers behaved so gallantly that they were awarded the Distinguished Service Cross. Both divisions received warm praise from both the American and the French high commands, some entire units received decorations, and many individuals were cited for conspicuous gallantry.

In courage, loyalty and sacrifice there are no racial distinctions among Americans. That was the lesson a quarter of a century ago. It is being taught again.

Steward's Mate Risks Life in Blazing Inferno

By FLETCHER MARTIN
War Correspondent in Pacific

ON THE LEYTE BEACH. — (By Cable) — Because he volunteered to enter a raging inferno which threatened to engulf his ship, Steward's Mate Clement H. Carrington of Brooklyn, N. Y., has been cited for bravery by his ship's officers.

Carrington is one of the few Negroes now participating in the operations in the Philippines.

Enemy aircraft repeatedly strafed the LST on which the Negro has served throughout the war. The fire had spread on the bow. Carrington was the first to dash forward into the blaze and succeeded in halting the flame.

When the blaze was noticed in the first hatch, an officer asked for volunteers to go in and fight the fire with chemicals. He stressed the difficulty of the mission, but stated that the possibility of the ship's staying afloat depended upon it.

Carrington stepped forward, followed by a shipmate. The boy from Brooklyn stayed in the hold until the fire abated and save for minor burns, returned unscathed.

A soft-spoken resident of Brooklyn, Carrington has been torpedoed three times—in the Pacific, in the Atlantic and in the Red Sea. In these narrow brushes with death, he has spent 42 days in lifeboats.

Carrington escaped uninjured each time, although many casualties resulted from the incidents. The Brooklynite has sailed in every war theater from Murmansk to the Philippines. Carrington's superior officers stated that in their years of sailing, they have seldom seen such courage as that exhibited by Carrington.

WITH THE FIFTH ARMY, Italy—It has been said that during the World War Quartermaster units were so far behind the lines that only one member of such units became a casualty, and he, it was ironically stated, was kicked by a mule.

True or false, the record of one Quartermaster Battalion which landed in Italy with the initial combat forces of the Fifth Army in September, 1943, proves, as do many others, that no such statement can be made about the Quartermaster units in this war.

CITED FOR HONOR

The following recommendation from the command to a certain Quartermaster Service Battalion testifies to the part Quartermaster units are playing toward the ultimate defeat of the Axis:

"Companies B and C, . . . Quartermaster Service Battalion are commended for outstanding devotion to duty and meritorious conduct. 3-25-44

"Disregarding personal danger, fatigue and discomfort, officers and enlisted men of these units worked untiringly for seven days and nights unloading boats and bringing ashore needed supplies. On shore, they cleared the supplies from the beaches, set up dump installations, and issued critical materials to the invasion force.

"The speed and efficiency with which members of these companies handled vital supplies were important elements in the success of the initial landings and subsequent operations. Their courage and devotion to duty reflect highest credit upon themselves and the Army of the United States." 3-25-44

There were some casualties but no deaths in this unit. The following men have been awarded the Purple Heart since being overseas: Pfc. James Cornwell, of North Carolina; Pvt. Russell Coleman, of Pennsylvania, and S/Sgt. Milton Winkley, of Texas.

WITH FIFTH ARMY IN ITALY—(By Cable)—Following their patrol action of the previous two days, elements of the 92nd Division Saturday crossed the Arno River in face of heavy enemy resistance, 9-9-44

Slugging it out every yard of the distance after crossing the river, the troops advanced to the Southeastern slopes of Mount Pisano, the dominating hill of a mass which had afforded the enemy excellent observation over the entire west coast sector of the Italian front.

This advance is markedly important in that it threatened the German's main observation lookout and secured a bridgehead for passage of armored elements spearheading a drive expected to push the enemy back to the Gothic Line—supposedly stouter defensive wall. 9-9-44

10 Get Purple Heart

In the initial 92nd action, nine enlisted men and one white officer were wounded. All were awarded purple hearts at an evacuation hospital by Lt. Gen. Mark W. Clark, commanding general of the American Fifth Army, who declared the 92nd had discharged itself well in its first combat attack. 9-9-44

The unit's performance was headlined by eagerness to carry the fight against the forces of intolerance.

The unit was reactivated October 15, 1942, at Camp Breckenridge, Ky., where it trained until moving to Fort Hauchuca, Ariz.

Former Record Recalled

It's action on the Fifth Army front recalls this unit's brilliant record during the last war, when it was activated as a national service division at Fort Riley, Kans., and saw service with the AEF, distinguishing itself in the battle of the Argonne Forest.

One regiment gained special recognition by remaining in line three months without relief, for which it received a French citation. 9-9-44

Now elements of the division are fighting side by side with other Allied armies, hoping to surpass a record of their famed predecessors.

Gen. Davis Visits Front

Their first combat efforts coincided with a visit to the Fifth Army front by Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis of the Inspector General's Office, War Department; Lt. Col. Charles Dollars, morale division; Maj. Homer B. Roberts, bureau of public relations, and Carlton Moss of the special coverage unit in Hollywood.

The latter three are gathering material for a historical record of the work done by colored troops and documentry film shots on their activities.

General Davis was the guest of General Clark on the tour.

The publicity group also visited many other units along the Fifth Army front, paying particular attention to the work of a colored anti-aircraft battalion and the 92nd Engineers, both previously praised for their excellent work. 9-9-44

Accompanied by correspondents, the group visited one battery of the ack-ack unit where crewmen, long anxious to exercise their trigger fingers, blasted away for the movie camera.

Sgt. Clark Hilton of Pine Bluff, Ark., selection chief, introduced the crew, which included:

Cpl. Wilmer Huey, Baton Rouge, La.; Pfc. Charles E. Foster, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Pfc. Arthur E. Boston, Holmesburg, Pa.; Cpl. Edward J. Brembry, Paris, Tex.; Pfc. Elmore R. Johnson, 133 D Street, Washington; Pfc. Moses Phillips, Pine Bluff, Ark.; Pvt. Albert Horton, Memphis; Cpl. Davis Haynes, Stanford, Conn.; Pfc. Samuel Emery, New Orleans, Pvts. R. W. Dyson, Manassa, Va.; Charles Davis, Philadelphia; Elmer Bullock, Hattiesburg, Miss.; Sgt. Vincent P. Jones, 915 W. Lee Street and Cpl. Eldridge, 1310 Idlewood Avenue, both of Richmond.

The crew went through its paces with glee, declaring, "It is too bad this isn't the real thing. Jerry has just about been run out of the sky."

Lt. Octave J. Rainey, Jr., of this city, stationed Somewhere in the Pacific with the United States Army Air Corps, was awarded the Airity's Medal of Hor recently, it was disclosed by the War Department on Monday. Lt. Rainey is the husband of Mrs. Jeanne Davis Rainey, 4321 LaSalle street.

Experienced

Even before the United States entered the present war, Lt. Rainey has been proficient in the handling of airplanes and is recognized as one of the first Negro Orleanians to enter that field.

Graduating from Xavier university of Orleans, with a B. S. degree in 1935, Lt. Rainey was employed at Hackett's Drug Store, Cohn and Leonidas streets; in 1937 he was employed at Thompson's Drug company in Chicago, Ill., and in 1938-39 he was employed as clerk in the United States Post Office at New Orleans.

While attending Xavier university, Lt. Rainey was considered one of the outstanding tennis players in collegiate circles. 9-16-44

Entering the West Virginia State Civilian Pilot Training program in 1940, he studied aeronautics and the same year he made his solo flight. In 1940, also, he completed his secondary cross-country training at Tuskegee and with his instructor, made an air trip here landing at the municipal airport. That same year he received his commercial license.

In 1941, Lt. Rainey gave up the opportunity to become a civilian air instructor to enter the Army Air Corps and serve his country. Later he taught instrumental flying in the Air Corps until he requested a transfer to Fort Sill, Okla., in 1942.

Liason Flier

At Fort Sill he became a liason flier, received his wings in January, 1943 and received the rating as staff sergeant qualified to do reconnaisance flying. 9-16-44

Later in 1943, he was attached to the 93rd Division at Fort Huachuca, and early this year was ordered to the war zone. While aboard the ship to the South Pacific, he received his commission as second lieutenant in February, 1944.

Further evidence that Lt. Rainey has had much experience in handling aircraft is found in government records. In 1941, as the result of a government examination, Lt. Rainey was appointed Civilian Air Comptroller at Memphis, Tenn. His appointment was made directly from Washington, D. C. He has also had training in handling seaplanes.

Lt. Rainey was a member of the Xavier university Alumni Association and the New Orleans Branch of the National Alliance of Postal Employees.

"I'll never forget that," said Sgt. Jones later. "The prime minister spoke very sincerely and shook hands as though he really meant it."

Three Other Air Heroes Are Given Aviation Medals

HEADQUARTERS, 15th ARMY AIR FROCE, ITALY—(S N S)—Colonel Benjamin O. Davis, commanding officer of an all-Negro Fighter Group of the 15th Army Air Force in Italy, and three other Negro air heroes, were presented with the Distinguished Flying Cross Sunday, September 10, by Brigadier General Benjamin O. Davis of the Office of the Inspector General, the War Department announced Thursday.

The ceremony, described as stirring and attended by Lieutenant General Ira C. Baker, Commanded-in-Chief, Mediterranean Allied Air Forces; Major General Nathan Twining, commander of the 15th Air Force, and Brigadier General Dean C. Strouther, commander of a fighter wing, was held before a formation of the entire fighter group and 15th Air Force band which were drawn up in review.

OTHERS HONORED

Distinguished Flying Crosses also were presented to Captain Joseph D. Elsberry, 114 West Washington Boulevard, Langston, Oklahoma; First Lieutenant Jack D. Holsclaw, 2301 West College Avenue, Spokane, Washington, and First Lieutenant Clarence D. Lester, 5329 Prairie Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. 9-15-44

The citations accompanying the awards said:

COLONEL DAVIS: "For extraordinary achievement in aerial flight as pilot of a P-47 type aircraft. Colonel Davis, group commander, led his group on a penetration escort of all bomber wings on an attack on industrial targets in the Munich area on June 9, 1944. The bomber formation was attacked by more than 100 enemy fighters near Udine, Italy. Faced with the problem of protecting the large bomber formation with the comparatively few fighters under his control, Colonel Davis so skillfully disposed his squadrons that in spite of the large number of enemy fighters, the bomber formation suffered only a few losses. During the engagement, Colonel Davis led on flight against more than 15 enemy fighters which were making repeated attacks on one group of bombers. His courage and combat ability have reflected great credit upon himself and the Armed Forces of the United States of America."

CAPTAIN ELSBERRY: "For extraordinary achievement in aerial flight against the enemy in the North African and Mediterranean Theatres of Operations. Throughout the extensive air offensive against the enemy in direct support of our ground troops and against targets of vital strategic importance deep within hostile territory, he, through his aggressiveness and courage, has consistently aided in the success of combat operations. Against heavy opposition from both aggressive and persistent fighter aircraft and intense, heavy and accurate enemy antiaircraft fire, with his plane frequently seriously damaged by enemy fire, he has battled his way to his targets, defeating the enemy in the air and destroying his vital installations on the ground. Through severe and adverse weather conditions over treacherous mountain terrain, he has continually surmounted overwhelming obstacles for successful completion of his assigned mission to attack and destroy the enemy. Through his outstanding leadership and personal example, completely disregarding his personal safety at times of great danger, he has contributed to the ultimate and final defeat of the armed forces of the enemy, has upheld the highest tradition of the military service, thereby reflecting

PRAISE NEGROES OF THE WATERFRONT FOR RECORD-SETTING INVASION WORK

Bystander—Des Moines, Iowa 10-26-44

Headquarters, European Theater of Operations—Here is a story of unsung heroes who cover the waterfront!

Over two hundred members of a Negro Quartermaster Service Company stood in formation recently to receive praise where praise was due. They had again been commended for their record-setting work overseas in loading supplies destined for continental operations, this time by the sub-port commander.

This was not the first time. Brigadier General Clarence H. Kells, commanding general of the San Francisco Port of Embarkation and former commanding officer of the Boston Port of Embarkation, had once before cited them for their efficiency and endeavor. This Port Company was part of the Army personnel which took over the Boston docks during a crisis and kept them operating in spite of severe rain storms.

It was here that this company established a new record for the greatest amount of tonnage loaded in one day's time. 10-26-44

They loaded war supplies for overseas shipment, and as First Sergeant William D. Burton of Wilmintgon, Delaware declared, "We loaded chow for the ETO, and then came over ourselves to eat it." Some of the boxes they loaded in the United States are the same they are now receiving.

Activated at Indiantown Gap, Pennsylvania in November 1943, the company, commanded by Captain Leonard L. Kern, arrived overseas in England in May 1944. Immediately setting to work on supplies for the invasion, they loaded bombs and ammunition which later were to rake the French coast on D-Day. Working day and night on their highly important mission, they again set a new overseas record for daily tonnage loaded.

His citation in part read: "During the enemy attack on your ship August 24, 1942, you were stationed on a 20 mm. gun battery as a magazine loader and ammunition passer. By your cool and deliberate performance of duty, you were of particular assistance to the gunner whom you served, thereby contributing materially to the excellent performance of his battery."

Saved 'Skegee Fighter Pilot, Receives $500 Carnegie Award

Tribune — Washington, D.C.

5-20-44

R. C. Daniels, 32, of Doth, Ala., was one of the fourteen individuals honored last week by the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission for performing outstanding and heroic deeds of bravery at the risk of personal injury or death.

On last September 22, Mr. Daniels, who at that time was a civilian worker at the Tuskegee Army Air Field, saved the life of a fighter pilot, Lt. Andrew H. Doswell, of Cleveland, Ohio, who crashed into a bridge in his P-40, near a construction job on which Mr. Daniels was working.

Disregarding his own safety, Mr. Daniels climbed onto the burning plane and with a piece of 2 x 4 lumber, pried open the jammed cockpit cover and pulled out the injured pilot. 5-20-44

Fellow Workers Cleared Out

Asked about his reaction at the time of the crash, Mr. Daniels said: "I was scared of course when the plane fell so near us, and at first I thought of running to safety with all my fellow workers who cleared out fast. However, I could hear the pilot crying for help and I couldn't stand the thought of him burning to death. So I just decided to help him, and you know the rest."

Daniels won praise from Col. N. F. Parrish, commanding officer of the Tuskegee Army Air Field, who commended him for his heroic work in saving the officer's life. His courage was also acknowledged by Maj. Gen. T. J. Hanley, Jr., commanding general of the Eastern Flying Training Command, who wrote that Mr. Daniel's "alertness and quick thinking in rescuing this pilot were in keeping with the best tradition of the American spirit of unselfish sacrifice." 5-20-44

The Carnegie Award includes a sum of $500 in addition to a bronze medal. Mr. Daniels is married and plans to use his money to purchase the home he lives in at present, and to help

La. Hero Saves 3 Wounded By Japs, Gets Silver Star

Defender — Chicago, Ill.

By FLETCHER P. MARTIN
(NNPA War Correspondent)

DUTCH NEW GUINEA — (By Courier) — Sgt. Richard Smith, Jr., of Chamberlin, La., has been awarded the Silver Star by the commanding general, United States Army Forces in the South Pacific Area. 9-2-44

The citation reads: "When his patrol (24th Infantry) came under intense enemy fire while attempting to cross a shallow river on Bougainville, April 14, Sgt. Smith distinguished himself by unselfishly braving the hail of bullets to rescue three wounded comrades from an exposed position. Although it took him twenty minutes to complete the task, Sergeant Smith never hesitated or faltered. During the whole period he was a target for enemy sniper and machine gun fire."

The whole story is one of courage and a devotion to duty. The 24th was commissioned to cross the Mavavia river and reconnoiter an area where the enemy was thought to be. It was very difficult to determine from our positions whether the enemy was still there, or withdrawn. The jungles lay thick and quiet—a quietness shocking in its intensity. Not a bush moved. The patrol moved slowly, then it happened. 9-2-44

Trapped By Ambush

As our troops waded across the muddy Mavavia, the enemy opened with seven light and three heavy machine guns. The men were trapped like rats in a maze. Several had been wounded on the first burst. Jap fire continued. From a prone position Smith moved slowly toward the first man to fall.

On our side of the river, Lieutenant Bill Manotti (Pennsylvania) had moved forward with a rescue squad. Kept on the alert, the squad, armed with automatic weapons, inched toward the river. One sergeant crouching alongside Manotti fell dead from a bullet wound through the head. He sprawled out toward the river's edge.

Our patrol was pinned flat. An alert enemy commanded the approach to his position. The river lay to our back. The enemy commanded this also. He had allowed our men to enter the swift stream before he opened. Because of intense automatic fire there was but one out for our troops, withdraw, if possible, back to our lines. We were grossly outnumbered. The Japs had played a waiting hand before revealing their strength.

Brings Back Wounded 9-2-44

Smith threw a smoke bomb. This gave him some protection as the air clouded. He crawled toward the first casualty, pulling him toward the stream. Twice more he crawled forward, bringing back a man. Enemy fire was now being directed toward the clouds of smoke. Smith had to work slow. the sand was heavy, the bullets hotter than the torrid weather.

He was succeeding. Eager hands on the other side grabbed the casualties, speeding them to safety. The medical officer, Major Wigginton (Memphis, Tenn.) had crossed the river, and with a stretcher bearer scurried back across with one man. His casualty died enroute to the aid station, his head riddled by machine gun fire.

We lost two men. And had it not been for Smith's gallant action, maybe more would have been lost. The enemy has been known to drop knee mortars near the wounded.

The report brought back was completely affirmative—the enemy was there in numbers. Several days later reenforced platoons moved into the area destroying every mother's son of the enemy who had chosen to stay and fight. The 24th swept the beach from the Mavavia to the Moy river, five hundred yards of sand littered with Jap dead. 9-2-44

When Sgt. Smith received his award, he wore the smile of a school kid receiving his first diploma.

Fighter Unit Destroys 29 Planes on Ground

By ART CARTER

ALLIED AIR BASE IN ITALY —In a setting replete with drama that bordered on the Hollywood style, four pilots of the Mustang Fighter group, including its commanding officer, Col. Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., were awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross, Sunday.

The most dramatic and sentimental phase of the colorful 30-minute ceremony was the pinning of the picturesque bronze cross on the chest of Col. Davis by his father, Brig. Gen. B. O. Davis, Sr., who declared that the occasion was "the happiest moment of my life."

Gen. Davis also pinned awards on three other recipients: Capt. Joseph D. Elsberry, 1114 W. Washington Boulevard, Langston, Okla.; First Lts. Clarence D. Lester, 5329 Prairie Avenue, Chicago, and Jack D. Holsclaw, 2301 W. College Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

Perfect Setting

The setting for the presentation was perfect with silver-colored planes providing a realistic backdrop as the honorees lined up abreast in front of a representative gathering of officers and men of the group, looking resplendent in their suntan uniforms.

The ceremony opened promptly at 11 a.m., after huge transports slipped in from a clear Italian sky bringing a party of brass-wearing officials for the occasion. 9-16-44

Bathed by the hot sun, the officials escorted Gen. Davis to a parade point where Maj. George S. Roberts, acting as group commander in place of Col. Davis, presented the assembled group. With music furnished by the Fifteenth AAF Band, while Brig. Gen. Davis made presentations, the group then passed in review.

High Officers Present

In the reviewing party were Lt Gen. Ira C. Eaker, commandin general, MAAF; Maj. Gen. Natha F. Twining ,commanding genera Fifteenth AAF; Brig. Gen Davis inspector general's office; Brig Gen. Dean C. There was a banner day for the group on Friday when a flight led by Capt. Melvin T. Jackson of E. Twenty-third Street, Baltimore, strafed two airdromes in Yugoslavia, destroying 29 planes on the ground. One squadron provided top cover while the other two peeled off and coolly took time to insure the complete destruction of the crowded airfield.

Wreck Remaining Ships

After the two lead squadrons had passed over the Ilandza airdrome, ten planes were aflame, sweeping in close behind, the third squadron set fire to the remaining three enemy ships.

Still powerful with ammunition, the pilots swept to an auxiliary target at Alibunan Field, where they went in to destroy 16 more ships, thus depriving the Luftwaffe of 29 of its fast ships in a brief period. 9-16-44

Jackson declared: "There will be more parties like that," while Lt. Lester beeffed: "Damned selfish of those fellows in the lead squadron to leave just three planes for us to knock out."

Flight leaders on the strafing job included Capt. Madison, Conway, Ark.; Dudley M. Watson, 557 W. 121st Street, New York City; First Lts. Albert N. Eisenhower's Order Credits Morale Boost To Sergeant

HEADQUARTERS, European Theater Of Operations—(ANP)—By command of Gen. Eisenhower, 1st Sgt. Arthur L. Bennett of Dallas, stationed with a Negro engineer company in England, was recently awarded the Legion of Merit.

In the words of the citation, Sgt. Bennett's "high standard of soldierly conduct, military courtesy and dependability has been a decisive factor in creating an excellent morale and discipline" throughout his organization. The men of his company, to whom he is affectionately known as "Top," received news of the award with great enthusiasm.

A graduate of the Navasota, Tex., high school in 1932, Bennett was president of his class in his junior and senior years and was active in school athletics.

Entering military service from Dallas, where he lived for six years, Sgt. Bennett received his basic training at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. Several days after his promotion to first sergeant on May 1, 1942, he was sent to Camp Claiborne, La., as a member of a cadre to activate his present organization. Working with inexperienced personnel, Sgt. Bennett was instrumental in developing high standards of duty and initiative and efficient headquarters of organization. 6-17-44

His own high level of soldierly conduct, military courtesy and dependability gained from the outset the confidence of the officers and enlisted men. Sgt. Bennett's knowledge of administrative procedure, states the citation, enabled him to perform a multitude of administrative details that would otherwise be handled by a staff officer."

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Callie Bennett, live in Navasota, Tex.

Hero Loses Life To Save Mate In Icy Ocean Rescue

WASHINGTON — A husky Negro mess attendant on a Coast Guard combat cutter was this week acclaimed a hero after giving his life to save his executive officer and others during a dramatic rescue operations in the North Atlantic.

The central figure in the story, one of many heroic incidents that followed torpedoing of a transport last year, was Charles W. David Jr., 26, of New York City.

David dived repeatedly into icy seas, in total darkness, to haul survivors to safety and finally rescued Lieut. Langford Anderson, the executive officer, who had gone overside to set an example for his rescue crews. The air temperature was below freezing at the time, and the water temperature only slightly above. The sea was building up before a rising wind.

Four or five submarines were known to have been shadowing the convoy at the time the transport was hit and sunk, and the rescue operations were conducted under the ever-present hazard of a new attack. During her own rescue work, the cutter acted as a screen for another cutter similarly engaged.

Many of the survivors, on life rafts, in life boats that were awash, or buffeted in life jackets, were unconscious or semi-conscious and unable to aid themselves. The rescue crews went overside on cargo nets, working in the pounding seas to snatch men from boats and rafts, and to rig bowlines with which they could be lifted to the deck. The nets from which they worked steadily iced up. 2-26-44

"David was over the side on at least three occasions," Lieutenant Anderson said, "and due to his extreme strength he facilitated the task of getting survivors aboard who were frozen to such a degree they were like logs." 2-26-44

Lieutenant Anderson, slight of build, was working on the lower net when he was seized by a desperate, drowning man and pulled under the water. David sensed the situation, dived from the net, succeeded in breaking the survivor's stranglehold on his officer, and rescued both. The cutter picked up 94 living men from the torpedoed ship.

David died of pneumonia following his exposure and exertions.

Son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles David, Bronx, New York, the Coast Guardsman was a graduate of the Bronx Vocational high school. His wife, Kathleen W. David, lives in New York City, with their only son, Neil Adrian. The officer he rescued later became commanding officer of the cutter.

Port Commanders Honor Two Soldiers Who Saved Marine

NEWPORT NEWS, Va. — "Your initiative and determination is what makes the American soldier the finest soldier in the world," Col. C. J. Wilder, deputy port commander at Hampton Roads Port of Embarkation, told two Camp Hill soldiers at a ceremony there in their honor last week.

The soldiers, Pvt. James A. Caldwell, Pfc. Charley Squirewell, of the 3165th Quartermaster Service Co., are given credit by Warwick County police officials for saving the life of Philip Charles Massie, the Marine who was found buried alive in the Warwick County dump, Aug. 13. They also furnished the police with information which led to the arrest of Duke L. Stanaway, of Copeland Park, and later identified Stanaway readily and positively in a lineup at Newport News police headquarters. He is now in jail on a charge, of attempted murder. Massie, found with two bullet wounds in his head and one in his neck, is expected to recover at Portsmouth Naval Hospital.

REMEMBERED CLUE

Pvt. Caldwell of 136 Royal avenue, Florence, Ala., and Pfc. Squirewell, of R. No. 2, Box 113, Ridgeway street, encountered Stanaway in the disposal lot on Route 168. Stanaway opened the conversation by asking if they'd heard any dynamite blasts then wanted to know where he could get a drink. He advised the soldiers to leave, telling them they'd get a ticket for parking sure if they "hung around." He showed them a receipt for a fine he said he'd paid for driving without a license as a result of being caught around the dump. This was the information which led to Stanaway's capture.

The soldiers pretended to take his advice, but in reality drove a short distance up the road and returned on foot through the woods. Through the bushes they saw Stanaway dragging a body to a hole, which he covered with refuse and then a large car door on top. When he left, the soldiers notified the police who found Massie still breathing.

Leroy Woody, chief of police at Hilton Village, stated that Stanaway would have never been caught had it not been for their alertness.

KILPATRICK LETTER

Caldwell and Squirewell were commended by Brig. Gen. J. R. Kilpatrick, commanding general, HRPE, in the following letter:

"I have received a report of your activities in connection with the solution of the case of the attempted murder of Philip Charles Massie on the evening of August 13. With disregard for your own personal safety you investigated the suspicious actions of one Duke Stanaway and without doubt are primarily responsible for the apprehension of the criminal and the pos-

Purple Heart Hero Home

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga.

Tuskegee, Ala. — The first member of the famous 99th Fighter Squadron to be awarded the Purple Heart, First Lt. Thomas N. Malone, Supply Officer of the 366th Service Squadron attached to the 99th, recently returned to Tuskegee Army Air Field while on a convalescent leave. During an engagement in Sicily in which the 99th Fighter Squadron was working in close cooperation with the British Eighth Army, Lt. Malone received orders to establish an advanced base of operation. He and a party of men set out in a "six by six" to make a reconnaisance of the proposed site. Nearing their objective, the wheels of their truck ran over a land mine, and the explosion threw the occupants to the ground unconscious. As a result of the fall, Lt. Malone's right arm became paralized. For this injury received in a combat zone, Lt. Malone was awarded the Purple Heart. Lt. Malone is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Thomas N. Malone, Detroit, Mich. On his visit to TAAF he was accompanied by his wife, the former Janis Johnson of Montgomery, Ala. The returning hero is a former student at Wayne University where he received his A. B. in 1940. While in college Lt. Malone was a member of the track and boxing teams and a member of Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity.

PM N.Y. 5-2-44

By WILLIAM J. HUMPHREYS

(Copyright, 1944, by Chicago Sun and Field Publications)

U. S. BOMBER BASE, EAST ANGLIA, May 2.—For devotion to duty in an aviation engineer battalion that was an inspiration to his regiment, a 26-year-old Mississippi Negro soldier has been awarded the Legion of Merit.

He was Tech. Sgt. Lawrence Hardy of Dundee, and is believed to be the first member of his race so honored in this theater of the war.

Although he had worked on his father's farm until inducted into the Army two years ago, and prior to that had never had any experience with heavy mechanical equipment, Hardy mastered the operation and repair of several kinds of machines used in the building of airdromes, which is the job of aviation engineers.

The citation read before his regiment yesterday while he was decorated by Maj. Gen. Cecil R. Moore, Chief Army Engineer in Britain, said that Hardy had perfected mechanical skill in one year's time. Because of the shortage of mechanics he often volunteered to work both shifts of the long working days required to rush priority airfield construction.

Maj. C. E. Lemay, leader of one of the 8th Air Force's heavy bombardment divisions, who accepted this newly-completed field, told the regiment that they and Hardy had materially shortened the highway to Berlin by their brilliant fast work.

It was the second field the Negro aviation engineer battalion has finished within a year.

Tuskegee Negro Is Carnegie Medal Winner

Mont Advertiser 5-6-44

TUSKEGEE, ALA., May 5.—(AP)—R. C. Daniel, 32-year-old negro was awarded a Carnegie bronze medal for heroism today for saving a negro fighter-pilot trainee from burning to death in a wrecked plane last Sept. 22.

On that day, Army Air Trainee Andrew H. Doswell, 26, was pinned in the cockpit when the plane he was flying hit a pile-driver in Unhapee Creek near Tuskegee and dug its nose into the bank. Spilling gasoline ignited.

Daniel, apprentice carpenter working on the pile-driver, suffered an injured knee in the crash but quickly clambered down a ladder, ran to the flaming plane despite warnings shouted to him that the plane might explode, and pried open the jammed cockpit hatch with a timber.

The pilot fell out of the upended plane but a strap of his parachute snagged in the cockpit. Daniel unfastened a harness chest strap, freed Doswell and helped him from the burning plane.

The flier was severely burned but recovered. Daniel was not burned.

FOUR GEORGIANS CITED FOR ARMY PERFORMANCE

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga.

WITH THE FIFTH ARMY—ITALY—(S N S)—For the "performance of services invaluable to the Fifth Army," a Negro service unit has received the first Fifth Army plaque presentation to be made since the establishment of that award several months ago. The unit is one of three others that have been similarly recognized for the same month of service.

Four of these unit members are Georgians. They are:

Sgt. Rufus Bailey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jordan Bailey, of 783 Mitchell Street, Atlanta; Cpl. Willie R. Bray, son of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Bray, of 308 Nichols Street, Warrenton; Pvt. Johnnie Barksdale, son of Jack Barksdale, of Lincleton, and 1st Sgt. Aaron Banning, brother of Willie Banning of Greenville.

The award was in recognition of the unit's activities at an important Italian harbor. Each evening during December the unit provided the smoke which screened the harbor and its installation from air observation, and in many instances performed that function under heavy attacks from enemy aircraft. Using smoke pots and special smoke generators, the men remained on duty throughout the night, keeping a constant vigil against sneak air raids.

A citation from Lieutenant General Mark W. Clark, Commanding General of the Fifth Army, accompanied the awards.

Entered Section Of Burning Plant And Saved Others

WASHINGTON—(S N S)—Mrs. Annie Marie Young, a 40-year-old production worker in the ammunition division of the Pine Bluff (Ark.) Chemical Warfare Arsenal, has become the first woman to receive the War Department's highest civilian award for exceptional service, the War Department Civilian Service Medal, was presented by Brig. Gen. A. M. Prentiss, in behalf of said this week. The citation was given in recognition of bravery in twice saving fellow workers from burning to death.

The Emblem for Exceptional Civilian Service, which is the civilian equivalent of the Distinguished Service Medal, was presented by half of the Secretary of War.

On two occasions—October 13 and November 16, 1943—fire broke out in the plant's incendiary section near where Mrs. Young was working. Although the flames in no way threatened the area in which she was working, Mrs. Young entered the burning area and dragged out two workers whose clothes were enveloped in flames, threw them on the ground and beat out the flames with her bare hands. Her calm judgment and presence of mind inspired other workers to assist her in the rescue work, the War Department reported.

In the citation accompanying the award, Mrs. Young was praised for her "exceptional conduct in performance of outstanding service beyond the call of duty" in the two fires. 4-16-44

Mrs. Young began work at the arsenal on July 9, 1943.

TUSKEGEE ARMY AIR FIELD, Ala.—Emerging from the Mediterranean theater of operations as the first member of the 99th Fighter Squadron to receive the Purple Heart award, First Lt. Thomas M. Malone of Detroit was a visitor here recently.

He is a Wayne University grad and member of Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity. The officer was on leave from the Army Convalescent Hospital at Coral Gables, Fla. First Lieutenant Malone served as supply officer of the 336th Service Group Squadron, attached to the 99th Fighter Squadron.

A trifle thinner and with the strain of days spent in combat still showing in his eyes, 1st Lieutenant Malone was as jocular as ever, but he is unable to use the right arm that had so often been "pumped" by his commanding officer for commendable work done while a fledgling officer at this station.

How It All Happened

It all happened like this:

The advance of the British Eighth Army, supported by the 99th Squadron, had been so rapid that the ground echelon of the 99th received orders to move up to another sector, and Malone and his men were instructed to get a store of vitally important supplies to a proposed advance base without delay.

After instructing his men, Malone set out with a small party in a cargo truck. The truck, hurtling over a shell-shocked road, was suddenly rocked by a terrific explosion—a land mine planted by the retreating Nazis—the occupants being thrown to the ground unconscious.

The officer regained consciousness while propped-up in a hospital behind the lines. Slowly he realized what happened. In answer to his insistent demands, he was informed that his men had pushed the supplies through and on time.

Navy, Marine Award Presented To His Father

WASHINGTON — (SNS) — For heroic action in rescuing survivors of a torpedoed United States transport in the North Atlantic, Warren T. Deyampert, a Coast Guard Negro steward of Marion, Ala., has been awarded the Navy and Marine Corps medal posthumously.

The Negro youth, who was serving aboard the Coast Guard cutter Escanaba that later was lost at sea when the craft sank following an explosion of undetermined nature, was instrumental in saving many lives of survivors of the stricken transport, diving repeatedly into the icy waters to bring half-forzen men to safety.

A citation accompanying the medal and signed by the Secretary of the Navy, stated:

"Despite the menace of possible enemyusbmarine action, Deyampert risked his life in the black and icy waters of the Atlantic to aid in the rescue of unconscious and helpless survivors. Realizing the danger of being crushed between the rafts and the ship's side, or of being struck by a propeller blade if the engines backed, he swam in under the counter of the constantly maneuvering Escanaba and prevented many floating survivors from being caught in the suction of the screws. Deyampert's gallant voluntary action in subjecting himself to pounding seas and bitter cold for nearly four hours contributed to the rescue of 145 persons and his courageous disregard for his own personal safety in a situation of grave peril was in keeping with the highest traditions of the United States Naval Service." 7-7-44

The medal was recently presented to the youth's father, Joseph H. Deyampert, 117 Clement Street, Marion, Ala.

Deyampert's heroism was cited as an example of the important contribution that young Negro men are rendering in the Coast Guard. Recruiting officers pointed out that the Coast Guard is still accepting volunteer 17-year-old Negro youths for service as steward's mates at shore stations and afloat. Recruits receive three month's basic training and indoctrination at Curtis Bay, Baltimore, Md., before assignment to duty.

HEADQUARTERS, 12TH AIR FORCE, North Africa—(S N S) — Although painfully burned, Staff Sergeant (then sergeant) Robert Lee Thomas, of Dallas, Texas, smothered the flames engulfing a fellow soldier with his own body and ripped off the burning clothes with his bare hands, the War Department learned today.

For his heroism, the 38-year-old non-commissioned officer recently received the Soldier's Medal in the presence of his Military Police battalion drawn up in formation at a North African air base. Quite embarrassed by the display, Sergeant Thomas blushed boyishly and muttered "I'm mighty proud" as Major Melvin V. Engstrom, of Rawlins, Wyoming, base commander, presented him with his decoration.

Sergeant Thomas, who entered the service in February, 1941, and was once discharged for "overage" saved the life of one of his fellow soldiers on December 28, 1943, when the latter's clothes became ignited from the flames of a burning pyramidal tent. The victim, frantic with pain, fled from the tent.

Took Burning Clothes Off Man With Bare Hands

"As the victim ran out into the open, fanning the flames, Sergeant Thomas pursued him and flung him to the ground," the citation reads. "Although painfully burned in the process, Sergeant Thomas smothered the flames with his own body and tore off the burning clothes with his bare hands. 3-30-44

"The soldier suffered multiple second and third degree burns and quite probably was saved from fatal injury only by Sergeant Thomas' quick action and total disregard for self.

Sergeant Thomas' heroism and devotion to duty reflect great credit upon himself and the military service of the United States," the citation concluded.

FT. WARREN, Wyo.—The first award of the Legion of Merit to a member of the command was made at this post Thursday with a full-scale review on Argonne parade ground in which 14,000 troops participated, and in which the man honored was a Negro soldier.

Recipient of the coveted medal was Master Sgt. Norman Harding, World War I soldier and veteran of 20 years in the service. The medal, bestowed for "extraordinary fidelity and essential service," was awarded to Sergeant Harding for his activities in organizing Negro administration and supply schools at this post and his contribution to their successful operation.

Sergeant Harding, 48-year-old member of the 248th QM. Depot Supply company, has been stationed at Ft. Warren since March, 1941. He was assigned to the 248th upon deactivation of the schools, where he served in the capacity of assistant senior instructor.

Frequently commended by officers under whom he has served since 1918, Sergeant Harding in April of this year was the subject of a commendation from Brig. Gen. H. L. Whittaker, commanding general of the existing QMRTC, for "diligence, efficiency, and attention to duty." It was one of the first official acts of General Whittaker following his assumption of command here. 1-1-44

Like many serving in the armed forces, Sergeant Harding has very definite ideas concerning his post-war plans.

"I'm going to ask for a 90-day furlough and just sit around and talk about World War II like the old soldiers talked about World War I," he said.

But as long as there's a job to do, he's just going to "kinda stick around," Sergeant Harding added. Records show that he has had exactly four furloughs during his 20 years of service.

The grandfather of an infant boy, Sergeant Harding enlisted in 1918 and was sent overseas in August where he was assigned to engineers. After the war he remained in service for four years, then took a six-year "holiday" to return in 1929.

For the next 10 years, until 1939, he was a member of the 24th Infantry at Ft. Benning, Ga., then at Ft. Bragg, N. C., and Ft. Wayne, Mich., until transfer to Ft. Warren.

With the Fifth Army, Italy— For taking 12 wounded paratroopers from the front lines to safety with his truck, after officers said it was impossible, Private Woodall I. Marsh, of 3 Miller street, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, has been awarded the Silver Star, the War Department announced this week.

Major General John P. Lucas presented the award to Private Marsh at a ceremony held near the front lines on December 21, 1943. Private Marsh thus became the first Negro to receive the Silver Star in this theater.

Private Marsh drove his truck through water up to the hubs of the wheels, and under terrific fire from the enemy, to reach the paratroopers. He had to build his own road as he went along, making his trip long and tiresome. 1-13-44

On his return trip, Private Marsh had to select an alternate route which proved as hazardous as the journey forward. He was forced to dig his truck out of the muck and mire many times. For thirty minutes, during the trip, he was subjected to heavy mortar and artillery fire.

The Soldier's medal, highest army award for heroism elsewhere than in battle, was given to S-Sgt. Charles Davis, of Blair, S. C., by Brig. Gen. Lehman W. Miller, commander of Camp Sutton, N. C., for risking death by freezing to save three other men's lives.

CAMP SUTTON, N. C.—The Soldier's Medal, highest army award for "heroism not involving actual conflict with an enemy," was presented here last week to S-Sgt. Charles Davis, of Blair, S. C., by Brig. Gen. Lehman W. Miller, the camp's commanding general.

Repeated acts of bravery and hardihood, which saved at least three and probably five men's lives in northwest Canada last winter, won Sergeant Davis his decoration.

A member of a General Service Engineer unit working last winter on the road system which now connects Alaska to the United States proper, Davis had a smash-up while driving "Old Betsy," the regimental shop truck, over a pioneer road in sub-Arctic wilderness. All three of his crew were seriously injured. Unloading them, Davis built them a roaring fire. Stripping to his coveralls—the temperature was 30 below zero—he wrapped the worst-hurt man in his winter clothes, then made his way on foot 12 miles back to camp for help. Still summer-clad, he came back with the rescue-truck.

Metal Worker

Slight and mild-mannered, Sgt. Davis is one of three soldier-sons of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Davis of Blair, S. C., and prior to his induction was a metal worker with the Empire Sheet and Tin Plate company, of Mansfield, Ohio.

He claims to feel elderly and in-firm—he is 29—but on the night of the accident he went back to try to reclaim Old Betsy. She finally consented to run, after much coaxing, but three miles from the base she burst into flames, forcing the sergeant to hike for the second time that day. He admits, with unbelief, that he collapsed when he got back.

On another occasion, this time, rations and nothing with which to cut wood. The sergeant organized the machine moving. With the thermometer registering 60 below, a truck carrying Davis and two other men broke down on the base camp thawing them into shifts to break branches and keep a fire going. He himself worked on the frozen truck, thawing with the heat of his hands every few minutes.

It was five days later that he got to camp," said Sgt. Davis, "I couldn't have done so, they would have been doomed, for the base camp was not expecting them back and the advance station didn't know they were coming. 1-29-44

WITH THE FIFTH ARMY IN ITALY — (ANP) — Lt. Gen. Mark W. Clark, fifth army commander, recently cited Pfc. Roy H. Scott and S-Sgt. Jesse V. McAfee, engineers by awarding them the Soldier's medal for heroic action in saving a bridge vital to army operations.

Members of a Fifth army engineer regiment in Italy, Scott's home is in Cleveland, Tenn., while McAfee lives in Halletsville, Tex. Their courageous action occurred in February while they and other members of their unit were repairing a bridge along the Volturno river.

CLEARS STRUCTURE

They were repairing a bridge across the flooded Volturno river when large pieces of floating timber and debris became entangled in cross-braces under the bridge. The accumulation seriously threatened the structure, and several unsuccessful attempts, were made to dislodge the clog. Pfc. Scott climbed over the railing, and hanging from the understructure in complete darkness, tied ropes and cables to the timbers and made possible the prompt, clearance of the obstruction. 6-2-44

"His heroic and efficient action," the citation stated, "resulted in saving a vital bridge from complete destruction or serious damage."

Sgt. McAfee was supervising a group of men also repairing a bridge across the river. Floating driftwood caused the bridge to lean, and the entire structure was in danger of collapsing. Completely disregarding his own safety, McAfee climbed below the bridge and cleared the debris from the bents.

CITED FOR ACTION

Later, when another piece of driftwood damaged a bend, he again went below to assist in fastening a cable to anchor the bridge.

"His courageous actions, performed in complete darkness and in constant danger from rushing flood waters, floating debris and the precarious condition of the structure, aided in saving a bridge vital for military traffic," according to his citation.

Soldier's Heroism In India Brings Promise Of A Medal

Daily World-Atlanta, Ga.

By HARRY McALPIN
(Washington Correspondent of Atlanta Daily WORLD and NNPA)

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—The heroism of a 20-year old Negro soldier attached to a quartermaster company in India which has earned him a recommendation for a Soldier's Medal was learned exclusively by the NNPA this week. The soldier is Pfc. Douglas D. Hopper of the 1905th Quartermaster Company. Commended once before for heroism in rescuing pilots from a burning plane that had crashed, he will, on receipt of the medal, become one of the three men in his outfit to be so decorated. 5-26-44

The incident which won Hopper the medal recommendation occurred in a river in India. Two officers were in a rubber boat which struck a log and capsized. One of the officers reached the bank safely, the second was marooned on a log.

Hopper, with Sgt. Jack E. Daniels came along shortly afterwards in another rubber boat and promptly joined the officer on the bank in attempts to rescue the marooned officer. Twice they carried their rubber craft upstream and sailed down, trying to grab the log as they went by, but the swift current foiled them.

SWAM TO SANDBAR

Finally, Pfc. Hopper volunteered to swim out to a sandbar upstream from the marooned officer so he could throw him a life preserver. Plunging into the dangerously swift stream, he managed to reach the sandbar and throw the life preserver to the man on the log. The latter, reaching to catch it, lost his footing and slipped into the river. 5-26-44

Knowing that the officer was a poor swimmer, Hopper promptly dived into the rapids after him, fully clothed but was barely able to reach the bank himself where he kicked off his shoes and prepared to try again. By this time, however, the struggling officer had been carried far downstream. The other officer was out in the boat trying to get to him. All efforts failed and the man drowned.

BEYOND CALL OF DUTY

In a letter of commendation to Hopper's commanding officer, the Air Transport Command praised Pfc. Hopper's act in voluntarily swimming out to the sandbar despite the dangerously swift current. Pointing out that below the sandbar the river is much worse, being "extremely rapid, dangerous and hazardous" the letter characterized Hopper's act of plunging in fully clothed when the officer was swept under as "far above and beyond the call of duty."

The letter, which also praised Sgt. Daniels for his part in the incident, ended with the statement that a recommendation is being submitted that Pfc. Hopper be awarded the Soldier's Medal. 5-26-44

Capt. Charles B. Hall, 23, of Brazil, Ind., first Negro to win the distinguished flying cross, and one of his pilot companions of the 99th fighter squadron, Lt. William Ashley, 23, of Sumter, S. C., were honored at a luncheon yesterday by the Chicago Urban league in the La Salle hotel.

Wearing a D. F. C. ribbon given him by Maj. Walter Mahurin, Fort Wayne, [Ind.] ace because he has not yet received his own, Capt. Hall traced the advancement Negro pilots have made since his squadron, the first composed of Negroes, went overseas 13 months ago.

Form Two More Negro Units.

"We now have the 332d fighter group, under Col. Benjamin O. Davis Jr., son of the only Negro general in the United States army, which is fighting in Italy, and a squadron of bomber pilots which is expected to go overseas soon," Capt. Hall said. 6-21-44

He described the casualties in the original squadron as "light" and explained that the replacement schedule was so out of ratio with losses that at one time there were twice as many pilots as planes. Capt. Hall is credited with shooting down three planes and has made 108 missions in North Africa, Sicily, and Italy.

A graduate of Eastern Illinois State Teachers college, Charleston, he enlisted in the air corps three years ago, and went on his first mission June 2, 1943. He left Chicago yesterday for Atlantic City, N. J., where he will spend two weeks in a rest camp.

Clark's Pilot Also in City.

Another returned Chicago pilot told of flying Lt. Gen. Mark W. Clark over the Anzio beachhead in Italy soon after the landing at Salerno. He is Lt. Harold Nelson, 24, of 5922 Byron st., who entered the army as a private two and one-half years ago. His present furlough was granted after he completed 121 missions from Africa and Italy during 13 months overseas. Lt. Nelson has been awarded the air medal.

Nelson, who formerly worked at the Pyramid Metals company, 1335 N. Wells st., attended Steinmetz High school. His wife, Patricia, lives with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Nelson, at the Byron st. home. After four weeks at a Miami, Fla., rest camp he will be eligible for reassignment.

WITH THE FIFTH ARMY, ITALY— (SNS) — Nine wounded Negro infantrymen from the 92nd Infantry Division, now fighting with the Fifth Army, and one of their officers recently were awarded Purple Hearts by Lieutenant General Mark W. Clark, who pinned on them in their wards at the 56th Evacuation Hospital, the War Department disclosed today.

Among the first casualties of the Division, which was committed to the front line late in Aug. the Negro doughboys were told by the Fifth Army Commander that their unit had discharged itself well in its initial battle experience. General Clark asked each one the circumstances and nature of his wounds and wished him a speedy recovery. 10-1-44

Several of the wounded men reminded the General that they had heard his talk to them at the front the day they went into action.

Those who received decorations were Private First Class Herman Bradley of 928 West 27th Street, Indianapolis, Indiana; Private First Class Ernest Hainsworth of Southern Pines, North Carolina; Private First Class Turner Joiner of Valdosta, Georgia; Staff Sergeant Wyne Stine of Mount Enterprise, Texas; Private First Class Nathaniel Coffey of 3719 Fourth Street, New Orleans, (Louisi- 4th Street, New Orleans, Louisiana; Private Theodore Coleman of West Helena, Arkansas; Private Frank Earsery of 1311 West Walnut Street, Louisville, Ky; Private First Class Isaac Milton of 18 Northwest Boundary, Savannah Georgia, and Private First Class David Foster of 108 Oscar Street,

Colored Major Gets High Honor

LONDON—(Censored)—For disregarding physical danger and leading two companies of British Tommies in an offensive against crack German troops in Italy, a colored officer, Major James Clarke, has been awarded the Military Cross, one of the highest British decorations.

Describing Major Clarke's action—he is only 23 years old—the British War office says that: "On the night of December 1, 1943, Major Clarke was in command of two companies whose task was to infiltrate by night to the edge of San Vito and to send a patrol into town.

"Major Clarke led his two companies over most difficult country which he had not been able to reconnoitre. Having established a base on the high ground overlooking the town, Major Clarke dispatched a platoon into the town which killed Germans and created alarm and confusion in the town. At dawn he advanced his force to the lip of the high ground overlooking the town and the main road from the south. This advance wiped out several pockets of enemy resistance. 6-10-44.

CAPTAIN KILLED

"A counter-attack, estimated two companies in strength, was driven in with great force by the enemy. This was repulsed with loss to the enemy, including a German captain. The Germans were determined to remove this threat to their main line of withdrawal, and for five hours they attacked frontally and from both flanks. For two hours Major Clarke's force was completely surrounded, but the combatted companies remained firm, although suffering considerable loss. During this period Major Clarke organized the defense of his position with the utmost calm, and personally led a counter-attack which cleared up enemy infiltration on the left. His cheerfulness and cool courage as he walked around his position under mortar and machine-gun fire inspired the men to hold fast. By holding this ground Major Clarke's force must have seriously influenced the enemy's decision to withdraw from the river to the south, and when the enemy endeavoured to withdraw by the main road, the Forward Observation Officer with Major Clarke was able to scatter his marching troops."

The War office citation concludes in these words: "Major Clarke's work in this action deserves the highest praise; in spite of being in grave physical danger he remained unruffled and sound of judgment, revealing the qualities of a great leader."

The young major is the son of James H. Clarke, a native of Jamaica, West Indies, who carried on business as a builder and contractor in the small Surrey town of Horley, England. The major was educated in this country and like many other colored commissioned officers in the British Army was inducted into the British Army with thousands of other colored men on a temporary basis as a builder and contractor in the British Royal Air Force.

The Army paid tribute to a hero from another branch of the country's service recently at Camp Carson in Colorado when Capt. Lee K. Bailey, commanding officer of the 42nd Veterinary Company at the camp, presented the Mariners' Medal to the mother of the first Negro youth from Colorado Springs, Colo., to win a decora-tion in this war. Before a guard of honor and color guard, Capt. Bailey presented the medal to Mrs. Fredericka Banks, 314 Williamette avenue, Colorado Springs, as a posthumous award to her son, Charles C. ly awarded the Navy and Marine Corps Medal in a simple ceremony at Coast Guard headquarters here last week.

Coast Guardsman David's widow, Mrs. Kathleen W. David, received the medal from Rear Admiral Stanley V. Parker, district Coast Guard officer. She held her 3-year-old son, Neil Adrian, dressed in a Navy play suit, in her arms as Admiral Parker read the citation.

Coast Guardsman David was mess attendant aboard a Coast Guard cutter that went to the rescue of a torpedoed transport in near-freezing temperature in the Atlantic. The Coast Guard reported that countless times David dived overboard to rescue men struggling in the icy waters. He kept diving, despite his own waning strength, until nearly a hundred men had been saved.

When the rescue operation had been nearly completed word came from the cutter's bridge that Lieutenant R. W. Anderson, of Brooklyn, executive officer of the cutter, was exhausted and in danger of drowning. Lieutenant Anderson was on a life raft at the side of the cutter helping rescue operations.

David dived once more. He rescued his commanding officer, but died soon afterward of pneumonia induced by exposure. 7-1-44

Lieutenant Anderson was present at the ceremony, at which Coast Guardsmen and Spars stood at attention as Admiral Parker read the citation which said in part: "His great courage and unselfish perseverance contributed to the saving of many lives and were in keeping with the highest traditions of the United States Naval Service."

Admiral Parker paused in the reading o fthe official citation to declare: "It must be remembered that the numbing chill of the water is as great a hazard as being under fire."

Lieutenant Anderson said after the ceremony: "David's bravery under the most hazardous conditions and his unselfishness in sacrificing himself was an inspiration to every officer and man on the cutter."

Mid-West Pilot Gets 3 FW 190's

Joseph Elsberry Second Negro To Get Flying Cross

ALLIED AIR BASE IN MEDITERRAENEAN THEATER. — Captain Joseph D. Elsberry, 1114 West Washington St., Langston, Okla., was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross last Wednesday for his outstanding performance during a dangerous and hazardous mission over Southern France on July 12.

On the mission which gained signal honor for the 23-year-old Oklahoma pilot, Elsberry shot down three FW 190's. He has four German planes to his credit altogether and is currently the outstanding colored flyer in the Mediterraenean theater with 23 bomber escort missions besides his victories.

Second To Get DFC

He is the second colored pilot to win the DFC, the first recipient of this high honor being Captain Charles B. Hall, now in the States on assignment.

Captain Elsberry's feat was highlighted by his disregard of personal danger in leading a P-51 Mustang group on escort formation for bombers in spite of hazardous weather conditions.

The climatic conditions were extremely bad, pilots being forced to maneuver through a solid overcast, but Elsberry skillfully led his formation through jeopardizing difficulties to give all-important protection to the bombers on the mission.

Meet 16 Nazi Planes

The bombers were attacked by 16 FW 190's but Captain Elsberry through courage and aggressiveness led his flight into the thick of battle, personally destroying three enemy planes.

Lt. Harold Sawyer scored his fourth victory in the aerial flight. On the return trip home, Elsberry found his plane low on gas and was forced to land at another field but returned to base the following day to receive the personal commendation from Col. B. O. Davis Jr., his commander, for the successful completion of his mission.

The Oklahoman also received a promotion to the captaincy on that day and now, 35 days later, has been awarded the DFC. As flight leader in the squadron commanded by Captain Lee Rayford of Washington, Captain Elsberry has displayed extraordinary achievement, continuously leading the flight against enemy targets of vital stragetic importance deep within hostile territory.

A Modest Pilot

The overwhelming obstacles which he successfully surmounted on which the mission award was based is merely one of the many instances of his outstanding flying.

Elsberry is a modest, typical fighter pilot full of confidence but not cocky. He received his education at Langston university and later studied at Tuskegee. He was graduated from the Tuskegee Army Air school on September 6, 1942, and was assigned to the fighter group at Selfridge Field, Mich., March 29, 1943, and has been a member since that date. He is not married.

Four Win Distinguished Flying Cross In Italy

Defender—Chicago, Ill.

ROME, Italy.—The thrill of a lifetime was experienced here this week by Col. Benjamin O. Davis Jr., commander of the 332nd Fighter Group, when he was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross by his father, Brig. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis Sr., ranking Negro commissioned officer in the U. S. army.

Three other Negro officers, all members of Col. Davis' command, were also presented with the coveted flying medal at the same ceremony. They were Lt. Clarence D. Lester, 5329 Prairie avenue, Chicago; Capt. Joseph D. Ellsberry, 114 W. Washington boulevard, Langston, Okla., and Lt. Jack D Holsclaw, 2301 W. College avenue, Spokane, Wash. Both Lester and Ellsberry are accredited with shooting three Nazi planes down in a single action. Lt. Lester has been awarded the Air Medal and four Oak Leaf Clusters.

The D.F.C. presentations came as a result of the 332nd's brilliant battle over northern Italy on May 9 when, led by Col. Davis, it attacked more than 100 enemy fighters attempting to intercept American bombers.

Prior to the four awards last week, only one Negro pilot had received the Distinguished Flying Cross. He was Capt. Charles B. Hall of the 99th Pursuit Squadron.

The 332nd Fighter Group, first all-Negro unit of its kind in the Army Air Forces, has completed over 1,100 missions with more than 10,000 individual sorties to its credit during the six months of service in the Italian theater of operations. It is a part of the 15th U. S. Air Force.

The group pilots of the unit's oldest fighting squadron have been accredited with 60 victories, 586 missions and 3727 individual sorties in air combat.

The group total is well over 200 enemy planes.

In a raid on the Ilandza and Alibunar airfields of Yugoslavia last week, the outfit, flying P-51 Mustang fighters, destroyed 29 Nazi planes on the ground, the first formation accounting for 26. Said Lt. Clarence Lester, who flew in the second formation: "It was damned selfish of those fellows in the first formation to leave us only three planes."

Memphis Sailor Visits Mother

World — Memphis, Tenn.

For First Time In Five Years

With Medals For Eight Sea Fights

6-16-44

A proud Memphis mother did some righteous 'doting' over her only child last week. The child is her strapping six-foot sailor son Chief Cook 1st Class Morris T. Dais, 26, who was home from the sea for the first time in five years.

Young Davis, the son of Mrs. Ethel Davis, 487 Georgia Avenue, has been in the United States Navy ever since he graduates from Booker T. Washington High School, nine years ago in 1935.

He has taken part in eight major sea battles since being stationed on an aircraft carrier in the Pacific Ocean. He was present with the Navy in Midway, the Marshall-Gilbert, Islands raid, the occupation of Gaudalcanal, the Carol Sea battle the first attack on Wake Island and the fighting in the Solomon Islands.

Ordinarily Chief Cook Davis presides over the scientifically-operated Naval ship kitchen on the warships on which he serves; but during combat his job is to go into an ammunition 'handling-room' where he, along with ten other men, send up anti-aircraft shells as fast as possible.

Like most men who have seen actual battle experience, Davis was not very talkative in giving details. However, he did say that his ship was struck several times. He could not tell how badly at the time of the hits, because of place where he was serving, and because the size of the ship served to counteract any immediate reaction from men who were not in the vicinity of the hit.

The youth wears medals showing that he was in the service prior to Pearl Harbor. He mentioned that his ship, a mine-sweeper was steaming into Pearl Harbor at the time of the first Jap sneak attack.

Before Pearl Harbor 'Chief' Davis visited many far places in the world. He recalls with enthusiasm trips to Paris, France, Oslo, Sweden, Rio De Janierio, Brazil, Holland, England, ports of Asia and Australia. The only continent he has missed is Africa.

The Memphis youth stated his belief that "the experience, training, opportunity for travel, and many other favorite conditions give men, especially Negroes, a type of invaluable opportunities which should fit them to be better citizens and men of greater understanding and knowledge, which should be of personal benefit to them and of general good to the community."

The youth is married. His wife lives in Los Angeles, California. On his trip to Memphis last week, Davis pointed out. "I last saw my wife when my ship left San Diego some time ago . . . that was from the West Coast . . . . my ship put in at an eastern port for a rest for the crew and other matters and I came from that direction to see my mother."

The Navy cook hopes to see his wife the next time his ship touches on the West Coast.

Leaving Memphis as a mess attendant when he first joined the Navy, Davis now wears a Petty Officer's stripes. He counts as one of his most thrilling experiences, the receiving of a citation at the hands of a U. S. Navy Admiral for the part he and his crew played in one major engagement at the battle of Santa Cruz. He also wears a bar bearing four stars indicating that he took part in a specified

Three Win Silver Stars For Heroism In Pacific

Journal + Guide — Norfolk, Va.

SCHOUTEN ISLANDS — (Via Courier—Delayed)— For heroic action, which they accomplished without orders, three soldiers of a tough, sure-fisted amphibious truck unit, were awarded silver stars, after a hard, grinding operation which resulted in the Allied establishment of a beachhead on the Biak Islands in the Southwest Pacific.

The awards were made to T 5 Marcus P. Sanches, Yonkers, N. Y.; Pvt. Ralph A. Nicholas, Chicago; and T 5 Joseph Nesmith, Philadelphia.

The commendation accompanying the awards tells the story in brief. It reads as follows: "Under enemy fire, and without orders, these men returned to a beach and delivered a group of casualties to an LCV and evacuated 40 men who had been left behind in an exposed position. This necessitated two trips to the beach under heavy enemy fire. Their courageous performance saved the lives of many."

A STIRRING SAGA

But this brief official commendation doesn't begin to tell the story of this courageous action. The mission which culminated in the Silver Stars is a saga within itself.

An amphibious landing had been made several hundred yards down the beach from the original beachhead. They were moving in closer to the first aerodrome, Mokmer strip. Evidently, the enemy sensed this move, causing a concentration of enemy fire on this point. Our troops were trapped in cross fire. The situation took a serious turn. Already the casualty list mounted.

The DUKWs were commissioned to take in more ammunition. That meant to pick up these supplies from the beachhead and convoy to the spot of attack. Enemy mortar and automatic fire did not make this trip any too easy. The Japs held the advantage being atop the towering cliffs. However, the DUKWs got in—and started out with the wounded.

CITED FOR COURAGE

After this operation, T/5 Sanches played "a hunch," thinking there may be more wounded ashore. He, along with Pvt. Nicholas and T/5 Nesmith, started back up the stream. The rest is told in the official citation.

TOUGH BUNCH

One of the toughest bunch of people to ever set foot on Biak Island is this group. They admit that they're tough. But also do one Lt. General, two naval officers, one shot-down Army pilot, and several enlisted men from an ack-ack unit. And they are a tough-looking bunch—all wearing the cunning look of the fox who polished off the prize pullet.

Commenting on his unit, a sad-eyed New Yorker, Lt. Herbert Janthor, explained:

loes (amphibious tanks) in on D-Day, landing artillery pieces before the infantry disembarked. Finding Jap rice cooking, they ate that and polished it down with Jap beer. With their trucks still gunning, they returned to sea—without orders—and made repeated trips evacuating wounded as Japs on towering ridges powdered the beachhead with exploding shells and automatic fire. They hauled blood plasma, field pieces, rations, ammo, personnel returning with wounded."

NARROW ESCAPE

Janthor talked on as the buzzing orderly room became more crowded with grease-stained drivers. He faced the group, saying:

9-30-44

"The best thing to tell the people back home about these guys is, that they just don't give a damn."

When initial operations were over on the crusty, coral-bedded island, and breathing space, three men had earned Silver Stars, and written commendations. One from no less a person than the wizened chief himself, Lt. General Kreuger, Sixth Army. Approximately 150 landings had been made—under fire. One DUKW was lost, the lone casualty. A Jap .37 shell tore through the dashboard of Technical Corporal Ralph Johnson's (NYC) vehicle narrowly missing him and killing an officer who at the time was assisting in the evacuation of casualties.

Prejudiced General Reflects On Bravery Of Colored Soldier

Tribune — Philadelphia, Pa.

CLOSELY following the unfortunate pattern set by his superior, Secretary of War Stimson, General A. D. Hunter, in command of Selfridge Camp, Michigan, gives out an interview reflecting upon Negro soldiers. Displaying slight regard for the established facts of history, General Hunter ventures the opinion that Negro soldiers and officers are inherently inferior to whites. He boldly asserts that the American Army so regards them and that it is only conducting an experiment with its black contingent.

He insists that the Army does not consider the Negro completely civilized, as he has been exposed to civilization less than three centuries. Regarding himself as competent to advise, General Hunter suggests that our Negro militant group be sent overseas and prove their merit before agitating for equal rights.

It may be a waste of thought and energy to wrangle with such a prejudiced soul.

The pamphlet recently published by the Public Affairs Committee and written by Prof. Ruth Benedict and Dr. Gene Weltfish of Columbia University, contains this unique statement:

"History proves that progress in civilization is not the monopoly of one race or sub-race. When our white forbears in Europe were rude stone-age primitives, the civilization of Babylonians and the Egyptians had already been eclipsed. There were great Negro states in Africa when Europe was a sparsely settled forest. Negroes made iron tools and wove fine cloth for their clothing when fair-skinned Europeans wore skins and knew nothing of iron."

If this beclouded General would devote a few moments to check up on the conduct of the black soldiers in the present war, it might serve to improve his intellect. He would easily find that the blood of Negro soldiers is already being spilled on the battlefields of Europe and Asia and Africa. It might help to change his attitude when he reads the record of the heroic 99th Squadron overseas, or of the 93rd Division of Negro soldiers who are battling with the Japanese Army back behind the Rising Sun in New Guinea.

Instead of showing racial bigotry, the commanders of our armed forces should devote their whole energies and perfect a united military machine to defeat our common enemies.

Captain Hall Presented Flying Cross At Tuskegee

By VENICE T. SPRAGUE
(Defender Staff Correspondent)

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—Capt. Charles B. Hall, former member of the 99th Pursuit Squadron, hero of the Anzio beachhead, was presented the Distinguished Flying Cross by Col. Noel F. Parrish, post commander of the Tuskegee Army Air Field, in a small but impressive ceremony here last week.

Captain Hall was cited for extraordinary achievement while participating in aerial flight as pilot of a P-40 type aircraft on January 28, 1944 while leading an eight-plane patrol over Anzio, Italy.

The presentation ceremonies took place on the parade grounds and athletic field of the post. Officers and men comprising the parade group were selected from several sections on the post. Marching in regular retreat formation, they added a colorful note.

Included in the group were cadet fledglings for whom the circumstances of the ceremonies were especially significant, in view of the long road over which they must travel before achieving their first goal—their wings. Many are less than a month from graduation. Overhead, the roar of scores of planes lent a familiar tempo to the honored occasion.

The citation read by Lt. Lewis, enumerated Hall's many missions throughout the Sicilian and Italian campaigns.

The Brazil, Ind., youth who prefers strafing in a P-51 Mustang, and has flown every type of mission in which the fighter-type of aircraft can be used, was a pre-medical student at State Teachers' college, Eastern Illinois, before entering the Army.

He hopes to remain in the Army Air Corps when the war is over, preferably in a tactical outfit. He says many of the Negro pilots have the same ambition, however, they would also be interested in transport flying. At present he is stationed at the TAAF as an instructor, but would like to move out any day with an outfit for overseas duty again.

Daring Feat Over Enemy Territory Wins Medal For Lt. Hamilton

(Amsterdam News and Afro-American Correspondent)

WITH THE FIFTH ARMY IN ITALY—Lt. John Hamilton, newest hero of the 99th Fighter Squadron, was awarded the Purple Heart this week in recognition of the most daring feat yet made by one of "our boys" wounded in action.

The diminutive Los Angeles pilot suffered severe wounds in the right leg four weeks ago while on a dive-bombing mission over enemy territory in Anzio.

Officials identified the other soldier of his squadron.

Lt. Hamilton was on his twenty-seventh mission at the time and was credited with having brought down his base "on the wheel.

Mechanics later found several flak holes in the plane's fuselage which indicated that he was in trouble and made a perfect landing before collapsing at the base.

Such a feat was most difficult, other pilots revealed, and that the Germans had done their best to get the daring pilot.

Honored also this week was Corp. Henry Laguna, of 129 E. 113th St., who was awarded the Soldiers Medal. Corp. Laguna saved another from drowning recently.

Negro Steward On Destroyer Landsdale Which Was Sunk, Praised As Real Hero By Survivors

Age—New York, N. Y.

5-20-44

Add the name of Marion Anthony Porter, Steward's Mate, Third Class, U.S.N.R., to the list of Negro mess attendants who have performed heroically for the Navy in the present war. Steward Porter was a member of the crew of the Destroyer Lansdale which was sunk April 20 in the Mediterranean by German torpedo planes.

Porter, and several other Negro mess attendants, manned an anti-aircraft gun when the ship was attacked. Survivors of the ill-fated craft told how the Negro gun crew continued to fire at the attacking planes after they had been ordered to abandon ship. 5-20-44

Lieutenant (j. g.) Frederick Gehlmann, U.S.N.R., 24, of 558 Bonnie Brae street, River Forest, Ill., gave an eye-witness account of Porter's exploits. "Well, they just listened to the Captain saying 'abandon ship' sort of half mumbled 'yes sir' and went right on shooting, that's all. Porter, 19, of 337 Bacmon street, Spartanburg, S. C., was lying on the deck hanging on to one of the gun mounts—I didn't know then that the explosion had thrown him against a bulk-head and broken his leg in two places—and as I tried to get around him, he said 'pardon me' and then got up again to aim that 40mm. gun..

Gehlmann then reached for a book. He spread the leaves of the book so that one cover rested on the table and the other hung over the side.

"Now this back-bind is where the starboard rail of the ship was. See—the guns on the portside—and that's where Porter's crew was—were almost in the water—that's the water off the table. But that's the direction that Jerry plane took, so that gun was directed just off the top of the waves and kept firing until that bomber kissed the water for the last time. After that, Porter and his crew went over the starboard side." 5-20-44

Steward Porter was born in Spartanburg, S. C., on September 6, 1924 and joined the Navy on February 6, 1942. He attended Dean Street School in his native city until shortly before he entered the service. He took his basic training at Norfolk, Va., and on March 31, 1942, was assigned to the USS Lansdale.

His next of kin is his wife, Mrs. Marie Dawkins Porter, 337 Bacmon street, Spartanburg, S. C., whom he married shortly after entering the service.

Seamen Cause Black Market in Africa

Sailor, Back from Abroad, Says Hospitals Have No Segregation

5-6-44

By RICHARD DIER
(Passed by Censor)

Before he was hit by shell fragments during the North African campaign, James Brennan, merchant seaman, knew little about the wonderful medical care and attention given Allied soldiers, colored and white, in African hospitals. Nor did he have the opportunity to see the black market in operation there.

"You really can't give enough credit to the doctors and nurses who live under such tough conditions and still are willing to work around the clock, if necessary," he said this week in an exclusive AFRO interview.

"Come to think of it, I'm glad I got the chance to see these things for myself.

"I was injured during an enemy bombardment from shore directed at our ships. Days later I found myself in the hospital.

"There were plenty of Allied soldiers lying in beds in the same room, all veterans of the bloody African campaign. I saw one man with both of his legs shot off. He had a lot of guts, never complained. A bomb had dropped near him while he was helping some wounded buddies.

"There was also a soldier in the bed next to mine. He had broken bones in his neck. It will be stiff the rest of his life. He always had a smile for you.

Praise for Nurses

"Many times the nurses got together and bought eggs and passed them on to us. They work very hard. They sleep outdoors in canvas tents, no stoves, and it gets pretty cold sometimes.

"During the entire time I was hospitalized, I never saw any discrimination. They treated everyone alike. In fact, we were all handled like babies."

After leaving the hospital the seaman got the real low-down on the African black market.

"There is no system to it, and there is no person or group of people running it. 5-6-44

Sailors Sell Belongings

"The seamen who come into port are indirectly responsible for its operation. It works this way:

"When a sailor goes ashore, he usually runs short of cash because he is unable to draw his pay. The easiest way to get some money is to sell some of his clothes, cigarettes, or personal things to the people in town.

"There's always a buyer, because rationing is strict and there isn't enough of certain items to go around.

"Naturally, these sales do more harm than good. They upset the whole rationing idea, which is to give everyone a break on whatever is available.

Rich Hog Show

"This way, the people who have a lot of money hog the whole show. Friction is created between the haves and have-nots, and the situation becomes serious.

"Those people who are continuing this practice are hurting the war effort. The Allied governments are fighting this kind of profiteering, and I hope they clean it up real soon." 5-6-44

Brennan, a native Californian, said that he intends to return after the war is over. He is married and has two children.

He recently saw the motion picture, "Lifeboat," with Tallulah Bankhead and Canada Lee, and was so disgusted that he wanted to walk out, right in the middle of the picture.

Picture a Phoney

"It's a phoney, if ever there was one. The picture is an insult to American seamen who are daily risking their lives to get the supplies across, and aren't afraid of any high-pressured Nazi.

"Throughout the whole picture, it shows our seamen being dominated, and quivering before the superior Nazi officer until he controls the whole situation. Even at the end of the picture, he still is the most important character.

"It's all a big lie. We men who have faced the enemy are not afraid of him. We hate and despise everything that smells of Fascism. 5-6-44

"I believe that I speak for all colored seamen when I say that we have no fear for anything that represents Nazism and preaches race hatred.

"The picture should be banned, especially at a time like this."

DARING PILOTS HONORED

Pittsburgh, Pa.

By OLLIE HARRINGTON
Courier War Correspondent

AN ADVANCED AIR-BASE IN ITALY—The coveted Distinguished Flying Cross, the highest decoration for American airmen, has been awarded six more pilots of Colonel Davis' Mustang fighter group in Italy for exceptionally meritorious performance in the skies above bomb-scarred Europe.

The fliers are Capt. Edward C. Gleed, Lawrence, Kans.; Capt. Andrew Turner, Washington, D. C.; Capt. Wendell O. Pruitt, St. Louis, Mo.; Capt. Melvin Jackson, Staunton, Va.; Capt. Dudley Watson, New York City, and Capt. Alonzo Davis, Omaha, Neb. The decorated airmen are all veterans in Colonel Davis' colorful group.

TWO SQUADRON LEADERS

Two of them, Turner and Jackson, are squadron leaders; the others are element leaders. Captain Jackson is an ex-boxing and wrestling champ from Virginia State college and is leader of the cocky and clannish group of fliers composing the hottest squadron in the group, leading their Mustang flying comrades in planes blasted out of the air and ships shot up on the ground. Jackson, a cool, calculating type of leader, inspires his men with determination and dependability. 11-4-44

Captain Turner, a Howard university medical student before he entered the service, was the sidekick of Major Tresville and took over the leadership of the squadron when the gallant major spun in many months ago. Turner leads the squadron as the late Westpointer undoubtedly would have.

MOST COLORFUL PILOT

Undoubtedly the most colorful and daring pilot of the group is Captain Pruitt of St. Louis who flew his 70th mission this week. Pruitt is a flier's flier, according to veteran airmen. A natural saying at the base is, "if Pruitt can't do it, it can't be done." Between missions he flies acrobatics above home base for relaxation. The 23-year-old veteran is the idol of every young pilot in the group.

Capt. Alonzo Davis has been operations officer performing a splendid job on the ground and also taking active part in air operations. Recently he was moved to become squadron leader of the famed 99th while Major "Spanky" Roberts becomes deputy group commander in Colonel Davis' absence.

EXPERIENCED TEST PILOT

In terms of experience in flying a variety of ships Captain Gleed takes top honors as a result of errors in orders last Spring when he was sent to Africa on detached service to test-hop new fighter planes. When he arrived at the new post Gleed was kept on because of the shortage of test pilots, thus shattering an Army tradition. When the group finally asked for his return the new outfit was reluctant to let him go.

During this time Gleed test-hopped every fighter ship flown by Anglo-American fliers, in addition to several captured Italian and German ships. He had also checked out twin-engined fighters, bombers and transports and had been at the controls of a B-17 before he rejoined the group.

The announcement of the awards came simultaneously with the groups celebrating of their 100th mission with a raid over Germany during which no enemy ships were sighted. The mission was a bomber escort one in extremely difficult weather, but the Mustangs had to get through to cover the bombers which had broken through to their target.

According to one returning pilot, it was impossible for each pilot to see more than two ships through the swirling clouds. Capt. Tony Weaver, newly promoted public relations officer of the group, describing the end of the mission, said: "For hours this base was a haven for every type of aircraft in the theatre as they came running in like frightened hawks with the weather closing in all over Italy."

FRANCE — Marking the first presentation of its kind in this aviation battalion, Major General Ralph Royce, commanding general of the new First Tactical Air Force, today conferred the Legion of Merit on T-Sgt. Charles H. Edwards of East Providence, R.I., "for exceptionally meritorious conduct in the performance of outstanding services as a machinist."

The presentation was made at a French field near the banks of the Mosell river in the presence of the entire battalion.

The citation read, in part: "T-Sgt. Edwards was materially responsible for the successful completion of a heavy bomber station in England."

He also organized an efficient spare parts system after his outfit came to France.

12-30-44

Sgt. Edwards is married and his wife, Evangeline, resides at 196 Spring Street, Fall River, Mass., with their son, Charles H., Jr. He attended East Providence (R.I.) High School and has been overseas nineteen months.

His commanding officer, Major E. L. Miller of Tulsa, Okla., said of him today: "Sgt. Edwards's work has been superior in every respect."

ARMY'S NO JIM-CROW ORDER

The riot at Seattle between Italian prisoners of war and colored soldiers could have been averted had the post commander put into effect the War Department order, dated July 5, forbidding segregation in Army exchanges, buses and theatres.

Afro-American, Baltimore

First word of the new Army order was published in the AFRO four weeks ago. The daily papers discovered it last week.

When the AFRO learned that the order was not being posted by camp commanders, the War Department was advised. It replied that the "no jim-crow order" was addressed to commanders, rather than to the troops, and the commanders will be held responsible.

In this case it would appear that the responsible camp commander at Seattle should have a tin can tied to him.

Aside from this, the War Department's order barring segregation represents an important change in policy. We have nothing but praise for it. However, we could wish that it had been issued openly; that copies had been given to the press to be published, and announcement bravely made that it would be enforced immediately.

Selfridge Air Units Shifted to Dixie

BULLETIN

WASHINGTON

War Department sources on Monday discounted reports that tense race relations in Detroit were responsible for the transfer of aviation units from Selfridge Field, Mich., explaining that they had completed their training there.

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich. — The 477th Bombardment Group and 553rd Fighter Squadron, both colored training units of the Army Air Forces, were moved from this base, Friday, after a week of field restrictions.

In the surprise action, the bomber unit was sent to Fort Knox, Ky., and the fighter unit to the Walterboro Army Air Base in South Carolina.

It is rumored that Selfridge is being changed to a rehabilitation camp for returning army veterans. However, much unrest had followed the court-martial trial of Lieut. Milton Henry, who was dismissed last week for insubordination.

Racial Reminder Hinted

Both groups have reputedly been sent to camps where they could be reminded of their racial status. Especially has the fighter group the reputation of being just as willing to fight for democracy here as overseas.

5-13-44

Maj. Dwight H. Bridges has been automatically promoted to Selfridge base commandant, being the senior flying officer remaining.

11,200 TO FACE INDUCTION IN NEXT 2 MONTHS

Seven Per Cent Of All Inductees To Be Colored

By VENICE T. SPRAGGS

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON. — Draft calls for Negro youths will be increased during January and February with a total of 11,200 scheduled for induction in these two months, War Secretary Henry Stimson revealed this week in response to a query from the Chicago Defender.

Stimson disclosed that Negroes will constitute approximately seven per cent of the 160,000 men to be called into the army in the two months.

At the same time the war secretary told a news conference that 2,000 Negro soldiers have been shifted to the army ground forces for infantry replacements to make up for increasing American losses on the western front.

Coming largely from army service forces of which there is an estimated total of some 408,000 Negroes, these men are a part of a radical change in the army ground forces recently indicated by Lt. Gen. Ben Lear, commanding general, which has resulted in getting an overall total of 65,000 soldiers from air and services forces.

Calls Declined to Five Percent

The increased calls on Selective Service for these months, the secretary said, are "based on replacement needs."

12-30-44

Through informed sources it was learned that army service calls for Negro men began a decline in late summer of this year, and by fall had reached a low of five per cent of all men called. This ration represented a drop of about one-half as compared with the peak period, 1942 through mid-1944, when the proportion of Negroes called approached more nearly the ratio which they bear to the total population.

This decided drop in calls for Negroes was brought to light by Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director, National Selective Service.

Shift of Negro Troops Into Infantry

Commenting on the shift of Negro troops into infantry, General Lear said, "This is not a sudden manpower shift to balance the scales by any means. It can be taken instead, as an index that under the changed mission of the ground forces, the usefulness of these soldiers ceased in their previous services and now exist to a greater degree in the ground forces."

12-30-44

Many trained Negro combat units, among which were the 9th and 10th Cavalries, crack units with more than 80 years of outstanding service in the regular army, were placed in service units last year in line with an army conversion program.

Army Silent on Transfer of Soldiers from Ga. Camp

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

11-11-44

CAMP GORDON, Ga.—The War Department has offered no official explanation of the transfer of colored soldiers from this camp last week, although it is rumored that the transfer may be part of a plan to move colored troops from the South.

Other reports are that the army may have yielded to Southern demands urging the removal of the troops to avoid conflict between the army's no-segregation order and Dixie jim-crow laws.

"Since government officials seem to cater to the desires of Southern whites," said one colored leader, "we wonder which, if any, of the rumors contributed to the evacuation of the colored troops from the camp.

Soldiers Mistreated

"Our soldiers have been treated brutally by civilian policemen and bus drivers," he continued, "and had to have passes to walk on Broad Street of Augusta, one of the city's large business streets, as it was off bounds."

The new swimming pool, which was one of the finest for colored soldiers, the service club, cafeteria, guest house, library and post exchanges will now be turned over to the whites, citizens around here point out.

The only colored unit left near here is Service Detachment No. 2, which has been moved near the white area. Local citizens fear that they will be reduced to the status of laborers and will be at the mercy of hostile whites.

U. S. Court Erred In Sending Theodore Brown to Leavenworth

Orders from Major General Lewis B. Hershey, national director of the Selective Service System in Washington, to the commanding officer of the Ft. Leavenworth induction center Nov. 16 stopped the illegal induction into the Army of Theodore E. Brown, 29, examiner in charge of the FEPC office in St. Louis.

The St. Louis office is a branch of the regional FEPC office in the Rialto Bldg in Kansas City and until it was opened in September, Brown was an examiner in that office.

Although he is an honorably discharged veteran of World War II and holds a I-C (disch.) classification. Brown was taken to the Fort Leavenworth induction center Wednesday, Nov. 15, on orders signed by Federal Judge Albert E. Reeves. 11-24-44

The technical charge was that Brown had failed to notify his draft board each time that he moved from city to city in his work which requires him to be moving constantly. 11-24-44

Had Honorable Discharge

Despite the fact that he had Honorable Discharge papers from the Army Air Force and a letter from his draft board in New York saying that he was not delinquent, Brown was ordered for immediate induction following a hearing before David A. Thompson, U. S. Commissioner, Wednesday morning in the federal courthouse.

He was not given opportunity to obtain enough clothing to last two or three days as registrants are urged to do upon leaving for the induction center. He was rushed from the hearing to draft board No. 2 in the Grand Avenue Temple Bldg. and from there to the bus station and to Leavenworth.

In Leavenworth, Brown was not processed or examined because the Army officials viewed his being sent there as "irregular." They consulted with National Selective Service headquarters in Washington to find out whether they had the right to induct a man with a Class 1-C card.

The clerk in charge at Draft Board No. 2 in Kansas City, through which Brown was sent to Ft. Leavenworth, objected to sending him because she said the regulations forbid the induction of a man with a 1-C status.

Volunteered For Service

1-C is the classification given to men honorably discharged from service in World War II. Brown volunteered for service in the Army Air Corps on July 17, 1941, and was in the first class of air corps cadets sent to the Tuskegee Army Air school. He was honorably discharged in September, 1941, as being unsuited for pilot service. 11-24-44

A letter from Brown's draft board, No. 60 in New York, said definitely that Brown is not delinquent with that board. His Honorable Discharge papers by mistake had been sent to local board No. 62 in New York instead of to Board 60. For that reason, Brown never received a new classification card from his board following his discharge.

The draft board sent Brown his new 1-C classification card on Nov. 9 in a letter which said, "As it turns out the mistake was not your own, so this local board does not consider you delinquent." Despite this communication from the board, Brown was ordered for induction.

Attorney Contends

Carl R. Johnson, attorney for Brown in the hearing before the commissioner and a member of draft board No. 4, contended in his argument for Brown's release from custody that the Selective Service regulation does not require a man to send a "constant stream of letters and telegrams to his draft board every time he goes into a city for two weeks or a month."

NEGRO TROOPS PRAISED BY WHITE COLONEL

Call—Kansas City, Mo.
12-1-44

Boston, Dec. 1. (ANP)—The following are excerpts from a personal letter sent by Col. John Sherman, in charge of training recruits in Washington, to a professor emeritus at Cornell university, Ithaca, N. Y.

"By my request, I have the Negro recruits, 1800 at the moment. . . . I like to work with Negro troops. . . . They present more problems, and more interesting ones. Also they really need sympathetic understanding and friendship and that I truly have for them. Colored men as individuals have occasionally disappointed me, but no oftener than whites. And no colored group has ever let me down.

"As drafted soldiers these southern plantation and levee workers have rather little to fight for. Most of what we whites are fighting for has been stolen from them long ago.

"But they will do anything, endure anything for love and loyalty to officers who treat them fairly as friends, developing their personal and organizational pride and their self-respect as soldiers of the United States Army. They don't ask that they shall like the officer, but only that he shall like them. They seen to know instinctively who is putting on an act and who honestly loves them in his heart. That latter leader they will follow anywhere and they will not let him fall."

Negroes Participate in Varied Program at Topeka Army Air Base

Call—Kansas City, Mo.
12-8-44

By EDYTHE MAE JONES

A recent visit to the Topeka Army Air Field, Topeka, Kas., revealed many interesting duties performed by the personnel.

Section C, is the all Negro unit, with its own non-commissioned officers, recreation room and the USO. Section C has its own administrative adviser and personnel workers. 1st. Sgt, Cole W. Gillum is in charge of the men and doing a splendid job with his company. He is from Newberry, S. C., and a former student at Benedict college, where he was a member of the football team. Pvt. Felix Sloan, whose home is in Seneca, S. C., works in the medical laboratory. He assists the physicians in taking blood pressures, administering shots and other general duties.

S-Sgt. William H. Heckstall takes care of all administrative duties which come up in section C. Sgt. Heckstall comes from Windsor, N. C., and was a former student at Hampton Institute, Hampton Va. Sgt. Junie C. McNair is a clerk-typist and assists in keeping records at section C. T-Sgt. James W. Champion of West Virginia, is a member of the field basketball team, and Pvt. Albert J. Crawford is a former student at Tuskegee Institute.

Military Police Capable 12-8-44

In the motor pool section there are 22 colored drivers who operate every type of machine in the motor pool. Section C has 6 Military police who performs their duties capably.

In talking with 1st Lt. Broox Hoyt, public relations officer, he stated, "I feel that any man whether he is colored or white, who works on the heating systems here at the air base is fullfilling an arduous duty worthy of comment." He spoke very highly of the men from section C who are on three 8-hour shifts. He also stated "that firing furnaces here at TAAF has, so far as possible, been made a military function." At first men from each section were assigned to the detail, but last year the job was handed to section C, with excellent results.

Men for the work are chosen carefully, is it is a type of work which requires close and constant attention over a long period of time. Lack of proper heat in the building on a cold day can reduce immeasurably the efficiency of a department. At the present time there are 21 posts on the field with a fireman for each post. Each has from 5 to 7 furnaces to attend. In addition there are a number of furnaces attended by civilian firemen. 12-8-44

On duty day and night, checking on the fires, is a "non-com." detail headed by T-Sgt James Carter. These men are charged with carrying on inspections day and night, and seeing that fires are kept at proper level and furnaces operating at mixmum efficiency. Others are Sgt. James McRae, Cpl. Leonard Strickland Cpl. Alvin Gant, Sgt. Lee, Pfc. Howard Young, Pvt. Robert Shelby. Pvt. Julius Fogg, Pvt. Ulysses Draines and Howard Graves.

Outstanding In Sports

In the "Gremlin," a paper published by and for enlisted personnel of TAAF, they carry all of the TAAF news and happenings. Members of the staff are: Lt. Col. Clair E. Ryan, commanding officer; Capt. Carl J. Holcomb, information and education officer; 1st Lt. Broox Hoyt, public relations officer; Sgt. Al Martin, editor; Cpl. Edward Osadchey, circulation manager. The "Gremlin" has an artist who should be praised for his excellent work, Sgt. Duane Bryers. He contributes each week large numbers of sketches about members of Section C. 12-8-44

In sports, Section C is outstanding. Lt. Hoyt said "that it wouldn't surprise him if Section C took the base championship in football," which they did, completing an undefeated season on Nov. 6, by defeating the men of the medical section. Pvt. Al Crawford and T-Sgt. Jim Champion are doing their part for the TAAF basketball squad. They are the only members from Section C who are members. There are seven white "non-coms." on the team.

Summarizing activities of men on this base, one gets a birdseye view of the varied occupations and work of the men of the army throughout the nation.

WORTHINESS OF NEGRO SOLDIERS

Savannah Tribune Ga.

We are certainly deeply appreciative of the notice given by The Morning News to Negro soldiers and sailors in the armed forces of our country. We are glad the Morning News recognizes the courage, initiative and efficiency with which they battle for the establishment of democracy in the world as well as in their own country, and we hope the Morning News will join with other agencies that are waging a campaign for implementing democratic ideals to the extent that they shall apply to the humblest citizen in the land, whether he be white or black, or rich or poor. 12-28-44

The Negro soldier wants to think as much of his uniform and rank as any other soldier, and he wants to feel that it entitles him to all of the privileges and immunities enjoyed by other Americans. He yearns for the time when "American" will be the designation for all Americans because all of them will be participating equally in the blessings of the democracy for which all of them are fighting and dying; they long for the time when all Americans can, in truth, without reservation, pledge "allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the republic for which it stands, one nation indivisible with liberty and justice for all."

We also appreciate the fact that the News not only gave recognition to "America's Negro Fighters," but it attempts to justify segregation as a principle. There is still lack of understanding of the Negro's position as to segregation. To him segregation means difference in opportunity and treatment, in the army, in industry, in education, in politics, in every phase of American life; it means discrimination both in quantity and quality of services and facilities. In all of these areas he looks into blind alleys because of segregation.

LINQUIST—Sousou, Voloff, Foulah and Milinki are five of the African languages spoken by Private Ernest Koda Robert, in addition to Spanish, French, English, German and Italian. Now stationed at Scott Field, Illinois, parent radio school of the Army Air Forces Training Command, Private Robert was born in French West Africa, the son of a native chief. Curiosity about the strange places he saw on maps led him to join the French Merchant Marine, during which time he visited all the story-book places he read about. He entered the U. S. Army in 1943. SCOTT FIELD, Ill.—Son of the chief of the Province of Diountou in French West Africa, Pvt. Ernest Koda Robert is now stationed at Scott Field, parent radio school of the AAF Training Command.

Educated in the Arabian and French schools of his native province, Robert, a French Senegalese, is an expert linguist, speaking not only five African dialects, but also Spanish, French, English, German and Italian.

The private, who accompanies his letters home, written in Arabic, with French translations for the benefit of the censor, joined the French Merchant Marine at 18 and spent three years traveling completely around the world, touching nearly every major seaport.

Interested in Religions

His interest in peoples and races is equalled only by his interest in their religions and their places of worship. A Mohammedan, he is a student of religion and frequently lectures on the subject in nearby St. Louis.

After leaving the sea, Pvt. Roberts settled in New York, where he attended Wadleigh High School. He entered the army in September, 1943. and received his basic training at Lincoln Army Air Base in Nebraska.

Awarded the Good Conduct Medal since his arrival here, he has two brothers in the Free French Army with whom he intends to go into business in Africa after the war.

SUDDEN ORDER ENDS LONG FIGHT ON SEGREGATION

Army Buses Won't Obey Dixie "White Only" Rules In Future

WASHINGTON D. C.--The long standing policy of segregated post exchange and theatre facilities on army reservations has been officially blasted out of existence by the United States army.

In an order dated July 18, the Adjutant General of the War Department directed the use of all buses, post exchanges and theatres by all army personnel without regard to race. This far reaching order applies to all service commands.

This means that, particularly in the South, Negro service men will share with white soldiers the post exchanges, where soldiers make purchases on the post. The old practice of separate theatres for Negroes and segregated sections of theatres white also attends is expressly prohibited by the order.

Observers doubt there will be much change in the bus situation, since most of the buses in the South, wher Jim Crow seating is the custom, are privately owned. The order applies only to buses operated by the army, on or off the post.

1. No theatre or performance may hereafter deny admittance to a member of the armed forces because of race.

2. All races will be permitted to use army exchange on the post without segregation.

3. U. S. buses and trucks or those owned or operated by the U. S. or army or other U. S. agency may not refuse colored passengers, or Jim Crow them to certain seats. This applies to U. S. buses and trucks on the post or off the post.

Ft. Knox Negro Soldiers Nearly Riot On Jim Crow

BY HARRY McALPIN

LOUISVILLE, Ky.--Flagrant violation and disregard of the recent orders of the War Department to cease discrimination and segregation of Negro troops in post facilities throughout the country almost resulted in a riot at Fort Knox., Ky., last week.

Hundreds of enlisted men at Goodman Field, Ky., an adjunct to Fort Knox, gathered in an ugly mood when two of their number returned to the post after having been ordered out of the Fort Knox theatre following their refusal to be shunted into a segregated section "reserved for Negroes."

The men at Goodman, already to the breaking point because of grievances in their own camp, were prevented from marching on the theatre for a show-down by the quick and hasty action of three of their Negro captains. One hundred and fifty white military police had been stationed aroung the theatre, fully armed, when word spread that the Negroes were incensed.

Colonel N. Butler Briscoe, commanding officer of Fort Knox, told the National Negro Press Association that he sees no reason for changing the segregation policy at the theatre, despite the orders of Maj. General Ulio, adjutant General of the U. S. Army. He claimed never to have seen the war department order.

In an interview last week, he put the blams on a few "blank blank agitators.

43 GI's Face Trial in Italian's Death

SEATTLE, Wash.—The Army announced Monday that forty-three colored soldiers will be court-martialed for participating in an attack on members of an Italian service unit at Fort Lawton on August 14, which resulted in the death of one Italian private.

Three of the soldiers are charged with murder.

The Italian private's body was found hanging from a tree 500 or 600 yards from the barracks in which the assault took place.

While Army authorities released no official statement giving the cause of the trouble, a number of soldiers agreed that the colored troops, vexed at the treatment accorded the Italians, which they thought was too "soft," got "beered up" in the post exchange and decided to clean out the Italians.

Selective Service Findings

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga.

Negro Selectice Service registrants in 10 Northern and border states showed up better in mental tests than did white registrants in 7 southern states, it was revealed in a survey just published by committee of Negro educators.

These educators point out four reasons why the equalization of education opportunities should be handled on a national basis. Such inequalities, they insist, result in a reduced reservoir of manpower for the armed deferment of a man in Georgia for illiteracy leads to the drafting of a skill worker or father in New York; reduced efficiency of the military service; and in reduced social efficiency of large elements in the population. 8-23-44

Although the fasts disclosed by the survey do not represent any new finding, the use to which they have been put together with the methods of treatment, is both interesting and convincing.

Science has long ago made definite pronouncement of the fact that racial differences provide the most obvious excuse for antagonism which really spring from sheer selfish desire to dominate others. Beyond this simple and obvious truism nothing seems to justify the arguments of those seeking to prove the superiority of one race over another. 8-23-44

In his presentation of the Spingarn Medal to Dr. Charles R. Drew at the recent NAACP Wartime Conference, Dr. Earnest A. Hooton said: "The hatreds that arise from human campetition easily shift their emotional expressions from race to nationality, to economic class, to religious affiliation, or to any other handy pretext whereby an ugly sentiment, a sordid motive, or downright viciousness may be rationalized or white washed. We shall have to improve individual human quality before we can get an amelioration of group behavior as manifested in race discrimination. class-rivalry and religious persecution."

690,000 Negroes In 4-F Facing Drastic Action

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga. 8-23-44

WASHINGTON—(ANP)—A sub-committee of the house military affairs is about to collect the views of army and navy officials on the possibility of utilizing men classified 4-F for certain type jobs in the services where it is found these men are not now engaged in an essential industry.

One of the latest estimates placed the number of Negroes in 4-F at roughly 690,000.

To date two other plans have been advanced, both by Rep. Clare Booth Luce, each looking to the utilization of these same men. Her first would establish an army-navy maintenance corps into which deferred registrants would be inducted and [illegible] to non-military jobs. The [illegible], more recently introduced, would make these men available for work in canning, lumbering and similar type jobs.

It was Rep. Costello (D) of California who last Monday indicated he might call the service officials to get their views. At present the army and navy are reluctant about accepting men for other than general service. Limited service jobs are being filled by men whose injuries would not permit them to return to active combat.

As the congressman explained it, "All the war and navy departments would need to do is notify selective service. "We will take 4-Fs noting essential industry capable of performing the following jobs . . . Then they could list the jobs that have to be done around any permanent post. They range all the way from duties of a hospital corpsman to KP duty and cleaning up."

West Africans Trained Secret By British Army

Defender — Chicago, Ill. 3-18-44

Trained in secret for three years and now in action on the Burma Front where they are scoring daily successes against the Japanese, the native soldiers of the Royal West African Frontier Force are the finest jungle fighters in the world, the British Information Service told the U.S. Office of War Information this week.

According to official British communiques, these West African troops—fighting 5,000 miles from their native villages—continued their advances in the Kaladen Valley on the Burma front by attacking Apaukwa, south of Kyauktaw, on March 2 and capturing a majority of the enemy positions. Earlier they had repulsed Japanese counterattacks east of Kyauktaw.

The strong contingent of the Royal West African Frontier Force arrived in India shortly before the Burma offensive opened, the BIS said, but the units had lived almost continually in dense jungle country for months before they embarked on the Indian assignment.

The present campaign is only one of a number participated in by various units of the force. Early in the war, two West African infantry brigades—one from Nigeria and the other from the Gold Coast—were put into the field against the Italians in Abyssinia and played an important part in the liberation of that country. 3-18-44

The placing of these two brigades in the Abyssinian field left the four West African colonies practically defenseless during the early days of the African war, the BIS stated, but when the triumphant native troops returned to West Africa, they found that an entirely new army had been organized in their absence.

It was an untrained army at that time, the BIS pointed out. The majority of the British officers and non-commissioned officers were still learning to adapt themselves to African conditions. The thousands of Africans who had voluntarily joined the Force were enthusiastic, but untrained in modern warfare.

Heartened by the Abyssinian victory and undaunted by the complexities of mechanical warfare, the Force settled down to the task of making itself a first class fighting outfit. There was plenty of good fighting material. The Hausas of Northern Nigeria and the tribesmen of the Northern Territories of the Gold Coast had long been recognized among the finest colonial troops in the world.

For its technicians and tradesmen, the Force turned to the more literate tribes near the seacoast—the Yorubas and Ibes of Nigeria, the Fantis and Gas of the Gold Coast, and the town-dwellers of Sierra Leone and Gambia. Many training schools were opened. Under the British and African instructors, thousands of young recruits quickly learned to be drivers, fitters, carpenters, electricians, stenographers and survey assistants. Others joined engineer companies, the medical services, or anti-aircraft batteries that guarded West Africa's important airfields. 3-18-44

The main burden of training during the last two years of silence in the African jungle schools fell on the comparatively small number of British officers and NCOs serving in West Africa, the BIS said. For them it was an exacting life, with tropical diseases and long periods of service in isolated stations. Secrecy surrounded what was being done. The Force was known in West Africa as the "Forgotten Army."

Finally, however, the Force was ready. And within a short time after its arrival in India, it was already adding to the great tradition of the Royal West African Frontier Force which was formed by Lord Lugard near the end of the last enemy to preserve the internal security of British possessions in West Africa.

In the last war the Force served with distinction against the Germans in the Cameroons and East Africa.

Army Won't Reveal Any Statistics

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa. 4-22-44

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Statistics relating to the number of colored soldiers in the Army and their assignment to combat and service units cannot be revealed for security reasons, Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson advised Representative Louis Ludlow, Democrat, of Indiana, in a letter dated April 18.

Mr. Ludlow made public last Monday his letter of inquiry under date of March 20, and Mr. Stimson's reply in which the Secretary reiterated that "military personnel is distributed and employed solely in conformance with military considerations which, of course, are entirely unrelated to racial derivations."

NOW NINE PER CENT NEGRO

"As you perhaps know," Mr. Stimson wrote, "the Army is accepting and absorbing Negro personnel corresponding to the registration ratio (10.4 per cent) of its authorized male enlisted strength. At present approximately nine per cent of the total Army male enlisted strength is of the Negro race, but it is anticipated that the 10.4 per cent ratio will be reached during the course of the current year. 4-29-44

"Our plans contemplate that of our total enlisted personnel 6,245,720 will be white, 709,280 Negro, and of the Negro personnel approximately 14 per cent are scheduled for assignment to combat organizations."

50 PER CENT OVERSEAS

With respect to the utilization of colored units in combat, Mr. Stimson said "obviously the details of the employment, locale, and disposition of overseas organizations, whether white or Negro, cannot be disclosed for security reasons. However, it may be stated that of the total Negro strength of the Army, approximately 50 per cent are now overseas or en route. Moreover, 32 per cent of the Negro contingent overseas are combat and combat support troops.

"I am sure you realize that, as is the case with many white combat units, a number of Negro combat units will not be employed in combat until concentrations are completed for projected major tactical operations scheduled for the future. 4-22-44

RACE UNITS IN COMBAT

"Although publication of data on the number and type of units engaged in combat, whether white or Negro, would constitute a violation of security in that it would tend to reveal our deployment, I will state that Negro units, like white ones, are being shipped to combat areas as rapidly as their state of training and transportation facilities permit and that Negro units have participated and are participating in combat.

"It may also be stated that additional Negro units will be utilized in combat in the future, though again for security reasons, it is not possible to reveal units, times, or places."

MAKE LOW SCORES

Negroes and whites fell by Army general classification tests; 80 per cent of the men in class V, irrespective of race, have been established at seven tests; 80 per cent of the men in class V, irrespective of race, have been established at seven and 26 per cent of the men in class IV and V. Courses of instruction are offered to combat and service units cannot be revealed for security reasons, Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson advised Representative Louis Ludlow, Democrat, of Indiana, in a letter dated April 18.

Mr. Ludlow made public last Monday his letter of inquiry under date of March 20, and Mr. Stimson's reply in which the Secretary reiterated that "military personnel is distributed and employed solely in conformance with military considerations which, of course, are entirely unrelated to racial derivations."

NOW NINE PER CENT NEGRO

"As you perhaps know," Mr. Stimson wrote, "the Army is accepting and absorbing Negro personnel corresponding to the registration ratio (10.4 per cent) of its authorized male enlisted strength. At present approximately nine per cent of the total Army male enlisted strength is of the Negro race, but it is anticipated that the 10.4 per cent ratio will be reached during the course of the current year. 4-29-44

"Our plans contemplate that of our total enlisted personnel 6,245,720 will be white, 709,280 Negro, and of the Negro personnel approximately 14 per cent are scheduled for assignment to combat organizations."

50 PER CENT OVERSEAS

With respect to the utilization of colored units in combat, Mr. Stimson said "obviously the details of the employment, locale, and disposition of overseas organizations, whether white or Negro, cannot be disclosed for security reasons. However, it may be stated that of the total Negro strength of the Army, approximately 50 per cent are now overseas or en route. Moreover, 32 per cent of the Negro contingent overseas are combat and combat support troops.

"I am sure you realize that, as is the case with many white combat units, a number of Negro combat units will not be employed in combat until concentrations are completed for projected major tactical operations scheduled for the future. 4-22-44

"Although publication of data on the number and type of units engaged in combat, whether white or Negro, would constitute a violation of security in that it would tend to reveal our deployment, I will state that Negro units, like white ones, courses, out of 29,000 Negro trainees approximately 90 per cent were retained in the Army and assigned to more advanced training.

"Many excellent soldiers have been developed out of men who have initially made a low score in the Army general classification test."

Ten Per Cent

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.

The announcement of Secretary of War Stimson that Negro troops will soon be increased from 9 per cent to 10.4 per cent of the total strength of the Army, with 50 per cent of them already overseas, emphasizes the extent of our contribution to the war effort.

It is doubtful if as much as 50 per cent of the white troops in the Army are overseas. 4-29-44

With a Negro total of 709,280 soldiers, the Secretary asserts that approximately 14 per cent are scheduled for assignment to combat organizations.

But in this war, more than in the past, every man is vital to the war effort, whether he carries a machine gun, cooks meals or lays out an airfield.

The vast army of Negro truck drivers hurrying supplies to all parts of the British Isles make possible the bombing raids on German industrial cities.

If there were no one to lay out and service the numerous air fields in England, Italy and Sicily, American raids on FESTUNG EUROPA would be impossible and the fighting would be reduced to a stalemate.

Negro engineer troops laboriously cutting roads through the wilderness of Assam and Burma, make possible the increasing attacks on Japanese positions athwart the way to China.

Land-based American air strength in the South Pacific is dependent upon the hard work of Negro engineers and air forces auxiliaries who are seldom featured in the news, but are always doing their job.

And now Negro combat troops are coming into their own wherever there is fighting, whether in Italy, New Guinea or Bougainville. 4-29-44

We should all resolve that this vital ten per cent shall come back to a better America, an America with less color discrimination and segregation, an America in which they shall play a political and economic role equal to that of other citizens.

They are earning this place by their sacrifices.

It is up to us to see that they get it, and the time to begin work on that project is right now.

Who Fights This War?

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.

Certainly Not the Inefficient Dixie

New York has 571,000, approximately half as many colored people as Georgia (1,084,927), so you would think that Georgians would outnumber New Yorkers in the Army and Navy two to one. 8-5-44

But they don't. Actually New York has 6,000 more colored men in the armed forces than Georgia.

Strange isn't it that a State like New York, with a relatively small colored population, should have more fighting men than a Southern State twice its population size?

Are the Southern States lying down on the war? Are they 4-F's?

Here is the official explanation: Georgia does draft twice as many colored men as New York, but by the time it defers some to work on farms and rejects others for physical defects and illiteracy, New York is able to qualify for service more men than Georgia.

This is not an isolated case. Pennsylvania and South Carolina send the same number of men into the army, but South Carolina has nearly twice as many colored people as Pennsylvania.

North Carolina sends twice as many colored people into the armed forces as Maryland, but it ought to send three times as many because its colored population is three times larger than Maryland's.

Little New Jersey, with only 226,000 colored people, has almost as many colored boys in the military service as big Arkansas, which has 482,578 colored people.

For a clincher, look at this table. It shows that five important Southern States have a total population of over four million and send a quarter of a million colored men in the armed services. 8-5-44

For comparison, there is a list of seven Northern and Western States which also send a quarter of a million men in the armed services, but their total population is approximately half of that of the Southern States.

NORTH			SOUTH
Population	State		Population	State
226,973	New Jersey	In Armed Services 251,000	1,084,927	Georgia	In Armed Services 250,100
470,172	Pennsylvania		1,024,502	Mississippi
571,222	New York		814,164	S. Carolina
301,931	Maryland		981,298	N. Carolina
180,000	D.C.		482,578	Arkansas
393,039	Illinois
341,081	Ohio
2,484,418—Total			4,387,469—Total

These Southern States are not carrying their full weight. The less populated Northern and Western areas are 100 per cent more efficient in furnishing soldiers and seamen for the armed forces.

That's what segregation and race hate do for the South. It is so backward as a producer of fighting men that a larger burden is being borne by colored men from the North and West.

That is who is fighting this war.

Two 'Indians' Are Convicted

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.

Refused Designation as Colored for Army

GIVEN TWO YEARS

Four Relatives Were Previously Convicted

8-5-44

RICHMOND. — Two more self-styled Indians, declaring themselves unwilling to serve in the armed forces under the racial designation of colored, were sentenced Friday by Federal Court Judge Robert N. Pollard to serve two years each in prison.

They were George D. Pollard, 23, and Hill Byrd Pollard, 25, brothers, of Guinea, Caroline County, both convicted of violating the Selective Service Act.

They brought to six the total number of relatives from Caroline County who have been convicted on similar charges.

Claim Indian Ancestors

All contended that their ancestors were members of the Rappahannock Indian tribe and refused to serve in the Army classified as colored.

The Pollard brothers retained neither counsel to represent them nor offered witnesses to testify in their behalf.

Both defendants told the court that, though willing to serve in the Army, they absolutely refused to be identified as colored when called for duty and instead preferred to take their chances with the law.

Both Sent Notices

An official of the draft board in Caroline County testified that the younger Pollard had been sent four notices to report for pre-induction and induction examinations, but refused to submit to them. 8-5-44

He testified that the older Pollard was given similar notices on two occasions and each time he failed to comply.

Both brothers explained that they transported themselves to the Belgian building, in Richmond, for an examination, but when they learned that they were designated as colored they refused.

Four Others Convicted

Those convicted previously on similar charges were Oliver W. Fortune and Robert P. Byrd, of Central Point, and Edward A. Nelson, of Alps, sentenced in January, 1943, to serve two years, and Everett H. Byrd, of Central Point, given the same sentence the following April.

Appeals Get Nowhere

Appeals were immediately noted by the first three after their convictions, but they got nowhere. 8-5-44

It was explained at their trial by draft board officials that persons who claimed to be Indians, but had colored blood are classified by the Army as colored.

One of the trio is a graduate of Virginia State College and taught at a colored school at Central Point.

The clan is not recognized as white and its members are not admitted to white schools in Caroline County.

Fla. Camp Makes Soldiers Slaves

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.

CAMP GORDON JOHNSTON, Fla.—The story of slave-like conditions and racial discrimination existing at this camp was revealed by a Pennsylvania soldier here this week. 7-15-44

The soldier, who has been in the army over a year, stated that colored men in the station complement who are unfit for full field duty because of physcial defects are forced to do hard work while whites in this class have cards marked "no duty" or "light duty."

He said further that many men are denied proper medical treatment and cited the case of a soldier suffering with athlete's foot who was reportedly told by a white doctor, "Tie a towel around your middle and have someone drag you around."

No Service Club, Guest House

The AFRO was also told that the service club and guest house are for whites only, and that colored soldiers cannot sit in booths in the PX. 7-15-44

In the post theatre, the soldier said that whites may take seats in the colored section but that colored soldiers can never take any empty seats in the white section.

Innocence Pleaded In Army Trial

Pittsburgh Courier

SEATTLE, Wash.—At the preliminary session of the Army's largest domestic court-martial last Thursday involving 43 Negro soldiers charged with rioting at Fort Lawton, Washington, and the murder of an Italian prisoner of war, all of the defendants pleaded innocent to rioting. The three defendants charged with murder of the Italian also pleaded innocent. The court-martial action follows an alleged attack by Negro soldiers on the sleeping quarters of the Italians last August 14.

The defendants facing possible death sentences on the murder charge are: Cpl. Luther Larkin, 23, Helena, Ark.; Sgt. Arthur J. Hurks, of Houston, Tex., and Pvt. William G. Jones, 21, Decatur, Ill.

In orientation lectures and in special readings for illiterates of both races undergoing special training in the army, interracial goodwill is being fostered by accounts of the exploits of Negro soldiers in various services and fields of combat. Picked out for especial mention are the 99th Fighter Squadron, whose feats in the Sicilian and Italian theatres are retold, and the Negro units of the Army Engineers that helped construct the Alaska highway.

In these readings, the pride of America in these Negro units is stressed, as is also their ability with machines. In the case of the Alaskan units particularly, the friendship and teamwork of Negroes and whites working side by side is singled out for mention.

It is significant that these lectures and readings are not for Negroes alone, but for illiterates of both races in the army, a large proportion of which are Southern whites.

FBI Chief Lauds Negroes for Aid in Nabbing Draft Evaders

Tribune - Washington, D.C. 5-6-44

J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, this week, commended Negro groups and individuals for assisting the bureau in enforcing the Selective Service Act.

"Persons of all races and from all walks of life, with the Negro taking a conspicuous role, have in the past rendered the FBI valuable assistance in enforcement of the Selective Training and Service Act., Mr. Hoover said. "Today, with new and more stringent regulations in effect, even further co-operation is needed."

While FBI records reveal that Negro American Legionnaries and other groups have assisted the bureau in apprehending a number of deliberate draft evaders, the director revealed that "among Negroes, it has been found that a vast majority of the draft delinquencies are unintentional. They result for the most part from carelessness, misinformation, or a lack of knowledge concerning the draft law and its requirements."

The first step to avoid trouble with your draft board is, if you are between 18 and 65 years of age and have not registered, to so at once.

Over 700,000 Negroes in Army

Bystander - DesMoines 12-21-44 Iowa

Washington, D. C.—At the end of September, 701,678 Negroes were carried on Army rolls, the War Department reported today. In the seven-month period between February 29, 1944, and September 30, 1944, the Negro strength increased 37,612.

The report revealed an increase of 49,912 soldiers of color assigned to overseas stations in the three-month period following June 30, 1944. A slight decrease in commissioned personnel and slight increase in the Infantry and Engineers were noted during this same period.

Following is a partial breakdown of Negro strength as of September 30:

Infantry	49,483
Coast & Field Artillery	36,302
Cavalry	867
Engineers	133,180
Air Corps	73,686
All Others	408,160

Commissioned Officers	5,804
Including:
Dental Corps Officers	101
Nurses	247
Other Medical Corps Officers	463
Chaplains	236
Serving Overseas	411,368

These revealed the following: navy, 17 officers, 142,628 enlisted men; marines, 15,771 enlisted; coast guard four officers, 3,675 enlisted. Whatever increases there were between July and October were among enlistees in all branches, the survey reveals.

Riot Trial of 42 Negro American GI's Under Way

Baltimore, Md. 12-2-44

SEATTLE — The rejection of evidence offered by a defense attorney and the testimony of a former Italian air force pilot highlighted recent sessions of the mass court-martial of forty-two colored soldiers at Fort Lawton here charged with rioting and murder.

Three of the men are being tried for the murder of Pvt. Guglielmo Olivotto, who was found hanged from a tree after the attack on the barracks of Italian war prisoners on August 14.

Major William T. Beeks on November 28 offered as mitigating evidence proof that the colored soldiers had broken up fights between white American soldiers and the Italians on several occasions.

Despite his contention that the evidence was material in that it revealed the state of mind of the colored soldiers who saw or heard about such incidents, the evidence was not admitted by either the judge advocate or the presiding judge. 12-3-44

In November, an unnamed Italian flier, who testified that earlier he had witnessed an outbreak between companions and several colored soldiers, identified one of the three men charged with murder as the leader at that time.

The soldiers facing possible death sentences for the murder are Sgt. Arthur J. Hurks, Houston, Tex.; Cpl. Luther Larkin, Helena, Ark., and Pvt. William G. Jones, Decatur, Ill.

Facing a maximum sentence of life imprisonment on the rioting charge are:

Former Italian Flier Describes Trouble With Negro Soldiers

AGC Fri Sung ALa. 11-26-44

SEATTLE—(AP)—A vivid description of trouble at Ft. Lawton which led to the storming of Italian service troop barracks by Negro soldiers and eventually to this nation's largest court-martial of the war was given the court by a former pilot of the Italian Air Force.

The pilot, clad in an American Army blouse and British trousers, was in a group of Italians when the initial trouble started. During his testimony late Friday, he picked as a leader of the Negroes one of three men on trial for murder.

A total of 42 Negro service command soldiers are charged with rioting. Three of the number are charged with murder of Pvt. Guglielmo Olivotto, who was found hanged after the riot had been quelled by military police. The prisoner identified was Pvt. William Jones.

IN REPLY TO QUESTIONS, the former pilot, whose name is withheld, testified he and two companions were going to their quarters when they passed a group of Negroes "and one of them expressed vulgar words which I understood. One of my fellows asked me what was said. . . ."

"I took several steps," he added, "and turned around. . . . I saw one of the Negroes strike a blow at—(a comrade)."

"Did he have anything in his fist?" the court asked.

"I saw something shiny. Then my comrade struck the Negro and he fell down. I called and said we'd better go before there was trouble."

THE COURT ASKED if trouble developed, to which the witness replied in the Latin version of "and how!"

As the Negroes stormed their barracks with stones, clubs and axes, the former flier said a comrade was hurt and as he picked him up the Negroes burst in the door. He tried to call them to halt in both Italian and English, he repeated for the court, the English words he used:

"We are Italian soldiers. Please make stop."

The attackers did not stop and when the riot was ended, Olivotto was found hanged by a tent rope over a nearby creek.

ALL'S NOT WELL AT CLAIBORNE

Chicago Defender Ill.

By JOHN LeFLORE

ALEXANDRIA, La.—Camp Claiborne is still seething with hate and Jim Crow, despite recent War Department "assurances" that all is well here. 11-18-44

Information, which continues to leak out of the camp, reveals that flagrant violations of the Adjutant General's July 8 order of non-discrimination have not ceased. A short time ago the camp was the scene of a race riot between white and Negro soldiers.

Complaining soldiers state that the no-discrimination order has never been carried out. The directive was issued against segregation at post exchanges, army trucks and buses and in Army motion picture theaters.

A copy of the order has not been read to the colored soldiers, they say, and only a few of the men actually know the contents of the directive. The Negro soldiers charge that after the order was sent down in one of the distributions, officers immediately picked up all copies.

Several soldiers stated that due to the recent riot and other racial disturbances, the majority of the colored units have had all small arms and gas masks taken from them, and they are not even permitted to keep their bayonets.

They told of how all officers, white, have been issued carbines for the purpose of spreading fear among the Negro soldiers. The men relate stories of going on maneuvers and upon reaching the firing range discover that the firing pins had been removed from their rifles.

Negro soldiers going into town on overnight passes are deprived of their dress shoes, and forced to wear the heavy GI boots for dress.

Seeking to break the iron-handed rule of white officers, the soldiers are appealing for a thorough and impartial investigation of the camp. Their morale is very low, and most of them would prefer overseas combat duty to the deplorable conditions they are forced to endure at the reservation.

Camp Claiborne, they say, is ruled by the race hate of the whites in Alexandria and not the Army.

Committee Continues Fight on Draft J.C.

PLANS EXPANSION

Will Extend Scope to Training Abuses

NEW YORK — The Winfred Lynn jim crow draft case is being appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court. 5-6-44

The National Citizens' Committee for Winfred Lynn, in announcing the plan this week, revealed that Arthur Garfield Hays, chief trial lawyer, is preparing to file a request for a writ of certiorari within the next few days.

Lynn, now a corporal in the Army and on duty in New Guinea, fought induction on the grounds that racial segregation in draft quotas and assignment to jim crow units violate a provision of the Selective Service and Training Act of 1940.

Expansion Planned

At the same time, the committee announced plans for expansion of its activity, pointing out that the Lynn case, while important, is limited by the fact that it attacks only the question of discrimination in the selection of colored inductees. 5-6-44

Under the new name, Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Forces, its expanded program will cover other cases involving segregation and discrimination in training procedures.

"As the war proceeds," the committee states, "the glaring inconsistency between our war aims and the method of treatment of our colored citizens has become more and more evident and more unbearable to those who are asked to fight and die for democracy throughout the world when they are not granted it at home."

The committee cites a draft law prohibiting discrimination on account of race or color "in the selection and training of men . . . and in the interpretation and execution of the provisions of this act." 5-6-44

Lynn's brother, Conrad Lynn, an attorney who represented him at the outset of the case, has also been drafted.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 30—Soldier stevedores loaded war supplies on ships at Philadelphia docks today and Army and War Manpower Commission officials said they expected the bottleneck in the movement of material destined for American fighting men to be broken next week.

The troops, members of an especially trained Negro unit, were brought here at the request of Col. Alexander B. MacNabb, commandant of the Philadelphia Port of Embarkation, who said that otherwise the shortage of longshoremen was so critical as to delay sailings.

Wirning of the greatest delivery test in the port's history next month, Colonel MacNabb appealed to all longshoremen and stevedores who are still celebrating the holiday season to get back to work immediately. 12-31-44

The WMC announced that it would upgrade freight car loaders now on the job to stevedores and raise their pay from 85 cents to $1.20 an hour in an effort to meet next month's crisis.

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — A survey just completed by the Associated Negro Press discloses that there are 871,010 Negro officers and enlisted men in all branches of the armed forces as of Oct. 31.

Figures were unavailable for identical periods, but those given revealed that there were 701,678 Negroes in the army and 169,332 in the navy. The War department report goes to Sept. 30, and shows an increase of 2,767 soldiers over the June figure.

The breakdown shows that there were 5,804 commissioned officers included in the army total, the largest number, 463, being in the medical corps and 247 in the army nurse corps.

WASHINGTON. — Just back from an inspection trip of the swank army redistribution center at Lake Placid, N. Y., Truman K. Gibson, civilian aide to the Secretary of War, said this week that Negro soldiers are participating in the activities of the redistribution center on a completely unsegregated basis, sharing eating, living and all recreational facilities equally with white soldiers quartered gro soldiers going home for holidays, Gibson talked with one of the original six who had remained. He was Cpl. Spencer Washington of Worchester, Mass. member of the 367th Infantry stationed somewhere in Italy.

Corporal Washington, formerly of South Carolina, whose family moved to Massachusetts when he joined up, has been back in the states for more than a month, ten days of which have been spent at Lake Placid. Currently sharing a lodge with 14 whites, he says that he had been no semblance of segregation.

Smilingly he told Gibson of an incident occurring in the barber shop when he first arrived. Walking up to a barber, he asked for a haircut, to be told, "I can't cut your hair." Washington thought this was the payoff, but before he could remonstrate, all the other barbers chorused, "I can."

After having been sheared, the CO told the number one was not doing. Truthfully he couldn't cut anybody's hair . . . he didn't know how.

Negro Preacher, Nine Others Get 3 Years In Draft Evasion

Jackson, Tenn., Jan. 7—(Special)—In a case which may reach the United States Supreme Court, Judge Marion S. Boyd in Federal Court here last night sentenced each of 10 Negroes convicted of Selective Service violations to three years in a special institution.

The Rev. John Reloy Marshal, who was also fined $1,000, was convicted on charges of obstructing the draft by counselling, aiding and abetting failure of the other nine defendants, all members of his church, to report to their draft board for final type examination prior to assignment to work of national importance.

Defense Counsel Martin Exum and P. L. Harden indicated that they will take the case to the Court of Appeals at Cincinnati and to the Supreme Court if necessary on claims that an order to unwilling work is a violation of the 13th amendment to the United States Constitution.

On the witness stand Marshall declared "if this government stands for making these boys not serve God according to the dictates of their conscience, we may just as well quit talking about free government . . . our country . . . and start worshiping that box."

Race Bias Tests In Draft Unlikely

No case testing racial discrimination in Selective Service is now pending in the courts and there is no likelihood of such being brought because the Army can moot any by removing the soldier from the court's jurisdiction, the American Civil Liberties Union said today.

Arthur Garfield Hays, the Union's general counsel, declared the recent refusal of the Supreme Court to review the case of Winfred William Lynn, of New York, who claimed he was unlawfully inducted under a "Negro quota" and not strictly in the order of his serial number, indicated this was true. Lynn was sent overseas, the Supreme Court then ruling:

"The cause is moot, it appearing that the petitioner is no longer in the respondent's custody." 6-6-44

The respondent was Lynn's commanding officer at Camp Upton, a colonel, who had been served with a writ of habeas corpus.

Draft Examinations System Is Modified

1-15-44

WASHINGTON, D. C. — National Headquarters of the Selective Service System has announced that, henceforth, all registrants, with the expection of those ordered to report for induction prior to February 1, will be given pre-induction physical examinations at least 21 days before being inducted into the armed forces.

Because of the period to be allowed between the pre-induction physical examination and induction, the period of three weeks in the enlisted reserve now granted by the Army to inductees and the one week period which the Navy grants will be eliminated after February 1.

NO LOCAL EXAMS

The announcement, made in cooperation with the War and Navy Departments, whose examiners will conduct the pre-induction physical examinations, also said that the present local board screening examination generally will be discontinued except for registrants who have obvious physical defects.

Prior to February 1, local boards will continue to give serological tests but after that date necessary blood tests will be made at the armed forces' induction stations.

METHOD EXPLAINED

As a general rule, only registrants who are in Class 1-A will be ordered to report for pre-induction physical examinations, Selective Service said.

To carry out the intent of Congress in recent legislation, however, a registrant may request his local board to forward him for a pre-induction physical examination and the local board is authorized to order any registrant to take such an examination when it determines that his induction will shortly occur even though he may be in a class not normally considered available for service.

CALLS TO INCREASE

While for the time being, men may be inducted 21 days after qualifying for service at the time of their pre-induction physical examination, Selective Service emphasized that this period will be extended as soon as a large enough pool of physically acceptable men has been established. 1-15-44

So that such a pool may be started this month, local boards in addition to ordering men to report for induction to meet the normal January call of the armed forces, will begin at once to order a substantial number of men now in Class 1-A to report for pre-induction physical examinations.

This number will be increased month by month to enlarge the pool and extend the time between the registrant's pre-induction physical examination and induction

ABOUT DELINQUENTS

A registrant who is delinquent by reason of failure to comply with the Selective Service law or regulations will not be entitled to any intervening period between his physical examination at the armed forces induction station and the time of induction.

Also, any registrant may sign a request for immediate induction at any time prior to the time he takes his pre-induction physical examination. If he is found physically qualified at the induction station for service, he will be inducted at once.

FATHERS LAST

Registrants ordered to report for pre-induction examinations, as a general rule, will be called by order number first from volunteers, then non-fathers, and finally from the father group.

At the induction station, they will be examined and if they are found acceptable for service will be returned to their local boards with the report that they are qualified for "Army-general service," "Army-limited service," or "Navy," which includes the Marine Corps and Coast Guard.

Those who are rejected for all types of service will be classified in Class IV-F by their boards. After the registrant's records have been returned to the local board, the board will mail him a certificate of fitness showing whether he is acceptable for service and, if so, the type of service for which he is qualified. 1-15-44

NEW PROCEDURE

Under the new procedure local boards will receive Army and Navy calls instead of one general call for men as heretofore.

As all of these men will have been found acceptable at the time of their pre-induction physical examination, it is anticipated that when they are finally ordered to report for induction they will be taken into the armed forces, almost without exception.

MAY REQUEST TEST

As the armed forces will not accept the results of a pre-induction physical examination after 90 days, Selective Service said that a registrant found to be physically qualified for service upon pre-induction physical examination, but not ordered to report for induction within the 90-day period, will be reexamined before being forwarded for induction.

While the present local board screening examination generally is to be eliminated, Selective Service said that a registrant who believes that he has a disqualifying defect which is manifest may request and be given an examination by a local board examining physician prior to the time of reporting for a pre-induction physical examination. 1-15-44 Such an examination will be permitted so that a registrant who is manifestly disqualified for service may be rejected at the local board level without having to undergo the complete physical examination given by the armed forces.

Wilberforce Graduate Says He Believes in Peace, Faces Draft Dodge Charge

WASHINGTON — Why Bayard Rustin, follower of Mahatma Gandhi, who spoke here Monday at Asbury Methodist Church under auspices of the Institute of Race Relations, is now awaiting trial as a draft dodger was revealed to the AFRO this week.

Rustin, a Wilberforce University graduate and a member of the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, said that he resists conscription on both racial and religious grounds.

Arrested in New York City on January 16 for failure to carry a draft card and report for physical examination, he said he was arraigned in Federal Court there January 18 and is now out on $500 bond.

Classified as a conscientious objector (4E) in October, 1940, he refused to comply with a local board order on November 13, 1943, summoning him to report for a physical examination and assignment to a conscientious objectors' camp.

Returned Draft Cards

On November 16 he returned his draft cards to Local Board No. 63, 2050 Amsterdam Avenue, NYC, stating his intention of disobeying the orders in a letter which read, in part, as follows:

"I was compelled to resist war by registering as a conscientious objector in 1940 because of my religious convictions and beliefs. A year later, I became convinced that conscription as well as war is equally inconsistent with the teachings of Jesus.

"I must resist conscription (compliance with the provisions against Japanese—that ends justify means, that 'from unfriendly of the Selective Service Act) also. War is wrong. Conscription is a acts a new and friendly world concomitant of modern war. Thus can emerge. conscription for so vast an evil as war is wrong.

"The conscription act denies brotherhood—most basic New Testament teaching. Its design and purpose is to set men apart—German against American, American

"Just a moment, Sallie," sa. Mrs. Summers. "What was that name?"

"Human Body."

"You mean Herman?"

"Naw'm, Human, just like you and me, Miss Simmons."

"And is his last name Body?"

"Yes, ma'am. Human Body."

"All right. Go ahead, Sallie."

"Well, just like I said, Elvira married this Human Body about three years ago, at least they said they was married. I have been keeping Thomas and R. J. off and on ever since Elvira has had this Human Body. If it hadn't been for me I spec the little things would have been dead. Their grandma, Missouri Cobb, who is my sister, has also kept these children off and on. About two weeks ago Missouri and the children were with me when their mother, Elvira, come and got them and carried them home with her.

LIVES AT BLACKANKLE

"Elvira and Human Body has fell out and she is living at Blackankle. I don't know who she lives with or who she works for, but I can find out from the Body.

"Henry Farnsworth hasn't ever give me any money for his children and ain't ever offered me one penny for them. Far as I know, he ain't ever give anybody anything for them children."

Her testimony about Henry concluded, Sallie became confidential. "Miss Simmons, have you heard about this war?" she asked, leaning forward in her chair.

The clerk of the selective service board nodded. "Yes, Sallie, I have." 5-20-44

"Well," said Sallie, "I been going by the name of Truman, who was my first husband. He is dead now and I am married to John Chandler. I am going to change my name now to Chandler because he might have to register and go to this war. Me and him been separated, but he come back when this war started. He is about 46 and may have to register later. I want to sign my name as Sallie Chandler now on account of the war."

So Sallie made a large cross mark on the line designated "Signature," and Mrs. Summers wrote, "Sallie Chandler, her mark."

The following summer when young men were required to register, a colored boy named Jesse Body was among the number. When asked if he knew Human Body, he replied, "Yes'm, that's my brother."

Now, Elvira's possession of a human body reminded us of a similar condition on Broadway. A deceased first wife, Elvira, assumes human form and, by all odds the most adorable ghost ever to flit across the boards, she returns to haunt her husband and his second wife—the play is, of course, Noel Coward's "Blithe Spirit."

BALL AND CHAIN 6-20-44

But the restrictions of the human body have long plagued mankind. The body is a ball-and-chain holding the spirit down to earth; a heterogeneous assortment of inherited disabilities: Grandmother Wilcox's legs, Great-grandfather Hills' aquiline nose, and Great-aunt Maria's frosty blue eyes; it is subject to Uncle Jonas' gout, Aunt Henrietta's asthma, Cousin David's jaundice—to say nothing of bad tempers, inclinations to profanity and an eye for pretty girls. It limits work and pleasure and all the fine fancies of the mind: the poetic, dramatic, heroic deeds which are born and die in man's imagination.

In the early days man created gods who were not bound by these limitations; but when the gods took on traits that were not only human, but indeed, all too human, they were discarded. He created elves, sprites, dryads, nymphs, mermaids, fauns, unicorns, and later—gremlins and Superman. Shakespeare, wearying of Pistol, Doll Tearsheet, Falstaff and even the Kings of England, turned to Titania, Oberon, Ariel, Bottom and Peablossom. Debussy conjured up in notes of almost transcendental beauty "The Afternoon of a Faun." And there are, we understand, still to be found in certain glens of Scotland fairies who wear the traditional blue chiffon robes, but due to the climate, red flannels are worn underneath.

There is no confirmation of this, however. And for all we know, they may be as extinct as leprechauns. Only one thing is certain: that is, when Henry Farnsworth returns from this war, the Elviras will still have their human bodies.

Bayard Rustin Defies Draft; Goes To Prison

Defender - Chicago, Ill 3-4-44

NEW YORK.—Bayard Rustin, co-secretary of the Race Relations Department of the Fellowship of Reconciliation and a leader in non-violent direct action against Jim Crowism, began a three-year term Monday in federal prison as a result of his refusal to obey the Selective Service Act.

Rustin, who attended Wilberforce university and the City College of New York, and who is a member of Omega Psi Phi fraternity, registered in 1940 as a conscientious objector; but in November, 1943 refused to report for his physical examination preparatory to assignment to a conscientious objector's camp. He based his decision on both religious and racial grounds.

Cites Reason

Declaring that the Conscription Act "denies brotherhood," Rustin referred to the segregation of Negroes and whites in its application, and wrote: "Such segregation is based on the moral error that racism (American) can overcome racism (Fascist), that evil can overcome evil, that men virtually in slavery can struggle for a freedom they are denied. This means that I must protest racial discrimination in the armed forces, which is not only morally indefensible, but also in clear violation of the Act."

Rustin is a member of the Society of Friends (Quakers), and after graduation from college did volunter work for the American Friends Service Committee both in this country and in Puerto Rico. He began work with the Fellowship of Reconciliation in 1941, and became so-secretary with James Farmer of its Race Relations Department last fall. He is the author of Interracial Primer and of several published articles, and is a follower of the methods of India's leader, Mohandas K. Gandhi.

ONLY THREE OUT OF 39 NEGROES ACCEPTED

It would be interesting to know the reasons for turning down the other thirty-six.

Negro Soldier Gets $468 Monthly

Review — Memphis, Tenn

FORT WORTH.—The highest paid man in the Fort Worth military police unit is not its commander, Maj. Harry W. Roberson.

The distinction of drawing the most pay goes to a negro technical sergeant, Tully B. Bond, 52, veteran of 34 years' army service, whose pay and allotments total $468 a month. 6-16-44

Bond draws base pay of $114 a month, and $94 monthly for subsistence. His wife and 10 children, who live at Junction City, Kan., receive $260 a month support money. The father was in France 14 months during World War I and won the Distinguished Service Medal in the Meuse-Argonne offensive. He was assigned here last Tulley Bond, Jr., with an ammunition unit in Australia, and Sgt. Edgar Bond, cook with a unit in England, week from San Antonio.

VIEWS and Reviews

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.

By GEORGE S. SCHUYLER

(This column represents the personal opinion of Mr. Schuyler and in no way reflects the editorial opinion of The Pittsburgh Courier.—The Editors)

The disgusting and infuriating extent of crackerism in the United States Army and Navy, the petty and moronic devices by which supposedly big men attempt to demonstrate a "racial" superiority which every intelligent person recognizes as non-existent, and the preoccupation of so many highly paid officers with maintaining the color line while in the midst of a war for survival, still far from won, must reduce almost to nil any respect for or confidence in these people.

My uniformed emissaries all over the world constantly send or bring me accounts of the jim crow global war, and I think the meanest I have heard recently has had to do with the great campaign to shove aside and discredit the Negro officer. It is a deplorable revival of the sickening tactics the "crusaders for democracy" used in 1917-18, with some modern angles introduced by a more "enlightened" generation. And the most depressing aspect is the studied Uncle Tomism of Negroes, uniformed and in mufti, in the War Department who are supposed to run interference for their people with the brass hats, but do not.

Here is one intelligent Negro's account of the slimy jim crowism at Fort Huachuca. He writes: "Every colored person and many white people are well aware of the flagrant discrepancies existent in our armed forces, particularly as these defects operate to the disadvantage of the colored soldier. However, I wish to mention the unjust and undemocratic practices of a specific unit, namely the 92nd Division. Recently there have been a few scattered 'appeasement' promotions which had the desired effect—a sort of peace offering. However, the fact remains that most of the colored officers are still second lieutenants as they were long ago and the chief qualification for a promotion continues to be the possession of a white skin. With an air of smug condescension the ranking white officers are conceited enough to assume that the colored officers should accept the discriminatory lack of promotions without any apparent display of discontent.

"Last May . . . the brass hats of the Division organized an Officers' Inefficiency school. The alleged purpose of this so-called school was to improve and bring up to standard on certain military subjects those officers who were not on par with the others. While much might be said of the merits of such a school in itself, it was in reality a disgrace and insult to the intelligence of the colored officers. And here is why—every one of the 56 students of this school was colored—mind you, not a single white officer. Now any sane person will concede that in a given group of men some are more proficient than others, irrespective of race, but to contend and imply that only colored officers—and no whites—were deficient in some particular phase is so ridiculous a hypothesis that it borders on the insane. The inference is clear and tends to support the view that a premeditated attempt was made to intimidate and humiliate the colored officers, solely on account of color.

"Then there is the matter of court-martials, which in the 92nd Division has reached an atrociously all-time high. For extremely minor offenses, colored officers are court-martialed with alarming frequency. If it were possible to check the records you would find that over 90 colored officers—against NO whites—have been court-martialed since activation of the Division. You can just about bet your bottom dollar that this number will more than treble that of any other division, here or abroad. For a colored officer to secure an acquittal is a mathematical impossibility. Here is how it operates. The court is composed of from six to eight bigoted white officers and two or three colored officers, but since a two-thirds vote will secure a conviction the vote of the two colored members is practically nil and the entire process represents nothing more than the simulation of justice by a mixed court. Suffice to say that any officer who expresses dissatisfaction at the prejudiced status quo is sooner or later, by some pretext, the hapless victim of the above mentioned procedure.

"The entire policy of the Division in regard to colored officers and enlisted personnel is such as to warrant the utmost condemnation. These outrages in a military unit supposedly dedicated to the preservation of democracy constitute a most bewildering paradox. If these practices are representative of the things we are fighting for, then it is one helluva note."

Brethren, I believe every word of this letter. Don't you?

Unhappily this seems to be what the colored brethren are fighting to preserve, except in the Russian Army and Navy where jim crow was buried long ago—along with kulaks, real Communists and so-called counter-revolutionaries. Certainly the other Allied armies are shot through with Negrophobia and color caste. It is a global disgrace, but such eminent mouthmeticians as Churchill, Roosevelt, De Gaulle, Eden, Wallace, et al, will not even mention it because they do not intend to disturb it. Our local Communists and fellow-travelers will not mention it either, but continue to yammer for victory over fascism—meaning Hitler and Tojo's variety, not that which runs our armed forces.

Army Bulletin Offers Hope Of New Policy

People's Voice — New York, N. Y.

4-22-44

By BEN RICHARDSON

Special

The War Department has taken definite and praiseworthy steps to better the condition of the Negro soldier in the armed forces of our nation. A twenty-page pamphlet entitled "The Command of Negro Troops" has been issued with the sole intent of bringing a fuller degree of undestanding between Negro soldiers and the white men who now, or may in the future, command them.

The pamphlet has received the endorsement of General G. C. Marshall, Chief of Staff, and Major General J. A. Ulio, the Adjutant General. It comes as a publication for the information and guidance of all concerned, and bears the authority of the Secretary of War. 4-22-44

BRINGS REASSURANCE

In these times when Negroes have so much reason to fear for the well-being of their men in the service of America, this publication brings certain reassurances of the basic good intent of our country, and of the true effort towards democratic leadership fostered by the present Administration.

The pamphlet is divided into several subjects all of which are handled frankly, scientifically, and in behalf of the comfort and security of the Negro soldier.

Commanders are told point blank that Negro soldiers frequently have lower averages on the Army General Classification Tests than do white men processed at the same time, but this is the result, it says, of Negroes having been denied opportunities in technical trades or jobs as civilians. They are further told that the comparatively low averages that occasionally appear, must not be taken as a sign that the Negro soldier cannot learn, but that he has not been given a chance previously and must be given one now. 4-22-44

BLAMES OFFICERS

All efforts must be made, the pamphlet goes on to say, to give those of advanced skills every chance to find their places in such branches as fit their training. Literacy classes are to be contantly conducted to assure the gradual progress of the intelligence and efficiency of the troops. Commanding officers are warned against blaming the soldier for the inefficiency of an outfit when the officer's failure to get the most cooperation from his men represents his own failure to treat them in the most representative and soldierly way. 4-22-44

Racial theories are dubbed a waste of time and manpower. The pamphlet says in positive terms that all theories of racial superiority are idiotic and lend to the defeat of the cause of the Allies. Officers of Negro troops are informed that they will get the maximum cooperation from their men when they treat them as Americans, with no reservations or beliefs about inherited or natural traits that make them different from white troops.

WORD LIST

The use of words offensive to Negroes are strictly ruled out, and a full list of such words is included. Among them is the word "Nigra' which as the pamphlet states, is a compromise between "nigger and Negro." Officers are advised to use "Negro" or "Colored" when referring to the race of their colored command. In this same section, the matter of Negro and white facilities is discussed and it comes as a revelation to learn the result of polls taken among Negroes and whites regarding mixed regiments, that the number of Negroes who wanted mixed regiments was about as large as that of those who did not. White soldiers, by a large majority, according to the pamphlets figures, preferred separation. Negro troops were shown to prefer northern training camps, and resented the unequal transportation facilities accorded them.

Finally, the question of communities adjacent to camps quartering Negro soldiers was considered. The people were admonished to be at the British Point Way To Democracy, Train Mixed Group on U. S. Soil

Tribune — Washington, D.C.

While some of our American troops and officers have endeavored to transplant to England the racial prejudices typical of deepest Mississippi and of the nation's capital, the British have brough to America an example of democracy-in-action from which our War Department could well learn a lesson.

The first British unit to train on United States soil since before the Revolutionary War, an infantry line unit composed of volunteers, has been recruited in the Caribbean and Bermuda, consolidated here and is training for eventual overseas duty.

The existence of the new combat unit, called the First Caribbean Regiment, was made public here for the first time last Thursday in connection with a ceremonial parade by the troops in celebration of the birthday of King George VI.

Mixed Officers

The regiment is a mixed unit of white, colored and black men. (The West Indies observe the triple designation). The percentage of Negroes is about the same as of the population of the territories, islands and garrisons represented. No distinctions are made in the unit, because of race or color, in the training, opportunities for advancement, quarters, mess, etc. The mixing exists in the officer ranks as well as in the enlisted personnel. One Negro is a major, next to the highest ranking officer among the natives is a lieutenant-colonel, and is white. 6-17-44

Trinidad, with about 22 per cent of the volunteers, has the largest representation. Next in order come Jamaica (including the Turks and Caicos Islands), Barbados, British Guiana, Bermuda, the Windward Islands, the Leeward Islands, British Honduras and the Bahamas.

The unit, which has its own supporting weapons, including Bren guns, mortars and anti-tank guns is expected to take its place as a full fledged line unit along side of other regular British infantry.

Inspected

6-17-44

Lt. Gen. G. N. Macready, commander of the British Army staff in Washington reviewed the unit and presented to its commanding officer, Lt. Col. Hugh Wilkin, special messages from the British secretaries of State for War and the Colonies, Sir James Grigg and Col. Oliver Stanley. Senior U.S. Army officers also took part in the ceremonies.

Members of the regiment were said to be enthusiastic in their praise of the cooperation of U.S. Army officers and enlisted men. Particularly appreciated, several of the troops recalled, was the reception given the contingents at the dockside upon their arrival by a U.S. Army band and Red Cross workers. 6-17-44

The regiment was established on April 1, and early that month small parties from outlying islands gathered at local centers until their numbers were complete. The first contingent to arrive in the U.S. was from Bermuda. Their place of training in the U.S. was not disclosed.

South Still Fighting

Defender — Chicago, Ill.

Army 'Jim Crow' Order

9-9-44

By JOHN LeFLORE
(Defender Staff Correspondent)

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—According to reports which continue to come in, the South is holding its own in its fight against democracy in the U. S. Army.

Information being gathered on conditions at a number of Army camps throughout the South indicates that the War Department's directive outlawing segregation and discrimination at post exchanges, in camp theatres, and on Army buses, is being flagrantly defied by commanding officers and their subordinates.

Colored soldiers of several troop trains which passed through Montgomery during the past three days, presumably bound for the fight in the Pacific against the Japanese, when asked about the War Department's order against racial segregation and discrimination, knew nothing of it "officially." Evidently the order is being carefully concealed from them by prejudiced or cowardly white officers.

Stalwart and intelligent, these colored soldiers emphatically stated when interviewed as they passed through this city (incidentally, Montgomery was the cradle of the Rebellion, and is keeping in line today with a fascist-like attitude on the so-called race question) that the democracy for which they were told they are bound for battlefields to fight for, is definitely non-existent in the camps they left behind.

One soldier who had to break ties with a wife and three small children in Washington, to do his bit for his country, expressed keen disappointment in what his country has offered him in return.

"I left a wife and three small children at home. They are as dear to me as Gov. Sparks' family might be to him." When advised that Alabama's Governor is not married, the Marine continued, "Well, at least some of the other race scare mongers have wives and children, and what I shall be called upon to give for the protection of this country when I fight and perhaps die in battle, will mean immeasurably more to the nation than anything they are doing for, if what is read in the daily press is being correctly stated, they are tearing down the foundations of good government with expressions and acts of hatred toward other Americans, merely because these other Americans happen to be black."

Developments in Alabama, one hotbed of secession against true democracy in the Army, during the week include a statement by Gov. Sparks, leader of the fight to prevent the abolishment of segregation on Army reservations in the South, with inference that the War Department's anti-segregation order for Army camps has political implications.

The Governor warned that if true "then we of the South will find it difficult to hold the South within its traditional Democratic allegiance in the years to come."

He expressed disappointment that President Roosevelt had ignored his, the Governor's telegram of protest against the Army's new policy on the race question, which was sent on August 24.

Rep. Joe Starnes, of Alabama, member of the Dies Committee and regarded as a Negrophobe, also entered his protest against the directive from his Guntersville home. Starnes was defeated in his bid for renomination in the Democratic primary of last May by Albert Rains, Gadsden attorney. The CIO's Political Action committee is said to have contributed to Starnes' defeat.

Rep. Frank Boykin, another member of the Alabama congressional delegation, wired Governor Sparks from his Mobile home as follows: "I believe the time has come when we will have to do something about the Negro problems and in many cases it is not the fault of the Negroes. The next thing they will want the Negroes in the white schools and colleges of the South, the law and medical schools.

"The whole fabric of Southern philosophy of segregation and white supremacy is at stake. I believe also I would take this up with the leaders of Tuskegee and our other Negro leaders in the South and see how they feel about it."

Here's Army's No J.C. Order

Segregation Forbidden

Under the new directive, race segregation is forbidden in post exchanges and theatres and on buses owned or operated by the Federal Government, on or off a post, camp or station, regardless of local civilian custom.

Substance of this order was published in the AFRO a month ago when it was posted at Fort Benning, Ga. Alabama papers got hold of it just last week.

Representative Rankin, dubbed the leader of the "white-trash bloc" in Congress, said on the floor of the House, Thursday, that the directive was an attempt to wipe out segregation throughout the South and predicted that it will precipitate race riots.

Called "Standing Policy"

At the War Department, a spokesman explained that the directive was a general letter to all Army establishments directing attention to the department's standing policy against race discrimination.

The War Department would not release the text of the directive, explaining that it was in "a restricted classification," but Representative Rankin was so choleric because of the order that he inserted its full text in the Congressional Record. It follows:

Personnel Drops From 25,000 To 300; Hospital Broken Up

By Associated Negro Press

FT. HUACHUCA, Ariz.—The announcement that Ft. Huachuca was scheduled for inactivation on October 15, made by Col. Edwin N. Hardy, post commander, posed many questions in the minds of the Negro people of this nation who had become interested in this largest Negro Army post in the country because it was the training grounds for the famed 92nd and 93rd divisions.

Normally a post of 25,000 persons, Huachuca is expected to shrink to a post of some 300 when it is closed down.

Many people are concerned about what disposition will be made of the largest colored Army hospital in the nation. This hospital is completely staffed by nearly 100 Negro officers and some eighty or more colored nurses.

RUMORS FLY

Rumors, which are fast, many and varied, have it that those doctors and nurses will be sent to other posts where they will be placed under white supervision; Douglas air base will be converted into an all-colored base and some of the medics will be sent there; a veteran hospital will be established and turned over to Negroes; the more qualified physicians will be distributed to certain white hospitals.

Despite radio requests for 3,000 additional nurses nearly 100 are here doing very little. The War Department needs doctors so badly that all limited service medical officers are to be re-examined with the idea of putting as many as possible on overseas assignments.

Medics here are desirous of offering their resignations en masse but are being discouraged by the commanding officer who wants them to await action of the War Department.

OPPOSE MIXING

Further rumors are that the general staff will not permit a mixing of colored and white units and despite the announcements relative to nurses being trained in white centers, they still come here. Though the surgeon general's office would like to solve all of this, the general staff and service commands will not permit it.

An announcement by Col. Hardy indicated that 6,000 Mexican laborers are to be quartered at Ft. Huachuca for a three month period, beginning Oct. 1.

An entertainment unit of 40 performers will go to Hotel Theresa, New York, Nov. 1. It is understood that Earl Renfree is enroute to the Pershing Hotel, Chicago, to head the dental unit; Col. West A. Hamilton will command the Pershing division and

5 Soldiers In Florida Mutiny Sent To Prison

Defender — Chicago, Ill.

5-20-44

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (ANP)—The court-martial trial for alleged mutiny involving five Negro privates came to a close here this week with three of the defendants drawing sentences of 13 years and the remaining two 15 years.

Arthur Boyd and James Crowley of New York, and Joseph Kent of Evanston, Ill., received the lesser sentences, while Leo M. Jones, Philadelphia, and William Flemons, Washington, D.C., were recipients of the longer terms.

Defense counsel for the men hope to gain clemency for them when the case is reviewed at Tampa. Defense Counsel McCabe and Levinson who came from Philadelphia to defend Jones and Kent, along with S. D. McGill of Jacksonville representing Flemons, believe that their clients will be favored at the reviewing of the case.

The five men were indicted on the charge of mutiny. Jones and Flemons were designated as the leaders. According to the prosecution the men were urged to stay in their cells when ordered out to work. It is claimed that Jones was the one to speak to the men. There were approximately 50 prisoners in the guardhouse at that time.

It was shown that tear-gas was used to get the prisoners out of the guardhouse when they continued to disobey the order to fall-in for work. The gas bomb was thrown by one Sgt. Bechtel, a 200-lb M.P.

The prosecution was handled by Maj. George B. Lurie. He made clear the point that under military law a concreted action of disobedience to an order constituted a mutiny.

It was brought out during the trial that the men had not been informed as to the procedure to get a hearing whenever they had grievances. It was further brought out that the men did not know they were guity of mutiny if they acted together.

Capt. Andrew V. Peterson, Richfield, Utah, was chief defense counsel. He was assisted by Lt. Phillip Landrum, Nelson, Ga. The civilian lawyers worked with these men. Maj. Lourie, Newton Center, Mass., was aided in the prosecution by Lt. Isadore A. Lehrer, Hartford, Conn.

Air Base Jim Crow Revealed

Tribune—Philadelphia Pa. 9-2-44

(Editor's note: The following story is the first in a series, written by the Washington Correspondent of the Negro Newspaper Publishers Association after four days "on the spot" at Godman Field, Ky., where the 477th Bombardment Group is preparing for overseas duty. The many stories and rumors of low morale, crushed spirits and delaying tactics led the NNPA to send a man to the scene to bring you this first hand account. The entire series will appear, one each week, in the Philadelphia TRIBUNE.)

By HARRY McALPIN

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—Can an efficient bombardment team, capable of holding its own in combat overseas, be developed under a condition that crushes the spirit of officers and enlisted men, destroys their morale, puts them on the verge of psychoneurosis, and makes them hate the guts of their commanding officer?

Can such a group continue to maintain the top-ranking safety record, maintenance record and flight per plane record in the First Air Forces when it lacks confidence in its supervisors, instructors, and commanders?

Can a group of men with the high intelligence required for success in the air corps—among both officers and enlisted men—be treated like children and yet be expected to fight like men?

These are the question-marks over shadowing the 477th Bombardment Group now stationed at forsaken and isolated Godman Field, Ky.,—the first Negro unit of its kind in Army history.

These circumstances and the resultant reactions which give rise to these questions are the subject of this and a series of articles to follow, written from first hand observation and interviews by this correspondent at Godman Field.

To understand fully the implications of the facts, opinions and criticisms which will be revealed in this series, one should know something of the historical background of the Negro in the Air Forces.

No less an authority than Judge William Hastie, former Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, declared in a statement accompanying his resignation from that position on February 1, 1943: "It should be understood from the beginning the Air Command did not want Negro personnel. Resistance bred of that attitude has been met ever since. Moreover, even now, the Air Command views the use of the Negro as an "experiment" designed to determine whether he can do this or that in the field of aviation. . . The tragedy is that by not wanting the Negro in the first place and by doubting his capacity, the Air Command has committed itself psychologically to courses of action which themselves become major obstacles to the success of Negroes in the Air Forces."

Back in 1940, the Air Forces authorized 10 units of Aviation Squadron (Separate). They were Negro units which served no specific military need. They never had a define function. They performed odd jobs of common labor at air fields.

Not until March, 1941, were applications accepted from Negroes for aviation cadet training. Several months later, actual training began at the segregated Tuskegee Air base. This training was limited to pursuit flying—the most difficult flying job in the Army.

In spite of handicaps, humiliations and humbug, the Negroes who entered and successfully completed training as pursuit pilots went on to establish an envious record in combat overseas.

On September 2, 1943, the Assistant Secretary of War, John McCloy, who was Acting Secretary of War on that day, announced in a press conference that Negroes would start cadet training as bombardiers and pilots in a B-26 Transition School on October 3, 1943.

By December, 1934, he promised, training of navigator and bombardier officers would begin. This training was to last 18 weeks after which the trainees were to go to gunnery school.

"All this training," the Acting Secretary gave assurance, "will be with white students."

The Medium Bombardment Group "must be activated by July 1, 1944," with complete crews, he said.

On November 15, 1943, the first twelve Negro flying officers to receive wings as twin-engine pilots were sent from Tuskegee and Selfridge Field and assigned to the B-25 Transition School at Mather Field, Cal.

The 477th Bombardment Group was organized and stationed at Selfridge Field in Michigan, near Detroit in February, 1944. It was placed under the command of Col. Robert Selway, who had been in command of the training of the fighter group turned over to Col. Benj. O. David, Jr. and sent overseas. Col. Selway is still in command of that 477th.

Many of the problems which now exist at Godman were born at Selfridge Field. The most noticeable incident at Selfridge—excluding the shooting of a Negro soldier by Col. Coleman, then base commander, last fall—was the officer club incident. That incident is explanatory of much that is happening today. Here it is as never revealed before:-

The officers club at Selfridge was at one time used by all officers, white and colored. When Col. Benj. O. Davis, Jr., then a lieutenant colonel, was returned to the United States from overseas and assigned to the fighter group then training at Selfridge, a reception was given him in the officers club.

After the 477th was activated, there was an occasion when three Negro officers went to the club and ordered beer. They were served. But while sitting at a table, a white major came up to them and told them they did not belong there. He told them to leave. One of the three officers informed the major that the club was for officers and gentlemen, that they were officers and gentlemen, and that they saw no reason to leave. When the officer repeated the suggestion, he asked if that was an order. He turned on his heels and went upstairs for Col. Boyd, then the post commander, who was present at the club during the time.

Col. Byod came down, approached the men and told them they had better leave. He was told of the existence of War Department Order 210-10, which said all buildings and facilities were available to all men on a post. He insisted the men leave the club. Asked whether that was an order, the colonel left without saying more.

Following this incident, the Negro officers, in their individual capacities and not as a protest or petition filed applications for membership in the club. Their quarters were inadequate and no other recreation was available to them on the post. The apparent sudden change in policy, as indicated by the experience of the three officers, had stunned them.

Col. Boyd wrote a letter in which he refused to take favorable action on the club membership applications. He told one of the Negro officers at the base to go back and tell the boys that "I am the big fat s-O-b who said for them not to use the club, and tell them I said so."

Col. Selway, then as now the group commander of the 477th, called a meeting of the Negro officers and told them that Negroes were not to go to the club and were not to make application for membership. He read Col. Boyd's letter, and said: "In my group, if you want to make the team, you will play ball my way. If anyone in my group protests the decision of the post commander, I will give an unsatisfactory efficiency rating."

Many of the men withdrew their applications for fear of being reclassified.

But word of the incident reached the White House. From there it is reported to have gone to the top officials of the Army. An investigation was made substantiating the complaint. This conclusion is drawn from the fact that the top Army officials took the matter in hand and ordered it cleaned up. The War Deparment, to the embarrassment of the Air Forces, stood behind WD 210-10 and immediately after the investigation, Col. Boyd was transferred away from the base, the commanding officer of the 553rd Fighting Group was transferred, as was also the major who instigated the incident in the club with the three Negro officers.

It was after this action had been taken by the War Department that Gen F. O. D. Hunter came to the base and made a speech on the incident. He was apparently giving the Air Forces' answer to the Army action. He said that in the past there had been no racial problems at the base and that he did not intend to have any now.

He stated the War Department is not ready to recognize Negroes on a plane of social equality with white men. Whether this was right or wrong, he said he did not know. He added that this group is no place to try to advance your race. Wait until you go overseas and do something to make your race proud of you, he told the men.

He concluded by saying all agitators would be weeded out and dealt with.

A decision was then made to avoid future embarrassment to the Air Forces, since the Army had shown an inclination to uphold the officers in their rights. It was just a short time later that the 477th and he 553 were transferred from Selfridge to Godman Field in Kentucky and Walterboro, S. C. respectively, under conditions bordering on the ludicrous.

The men were told the movement was secret, though it had been released to the newspapers. The train going to Godman left Selfridge going NORTH to Port Huron, Michigan, then doubled back to Gary, Ind., and then headed SOUTH to Godman Field. At first, it was called a training trip. Then it was termed a temporary move. Later the men were informed they were being moved permanently.

When told that his officers believed the move was made to put them in a Southern atmosphere where patterns of segregation and isolation from white groups would eliminate a recurrence of the problem without solving it., Col. Selway admitted to this correspondent that the officer club incident had caused a "big furore." At the same time, he said, there was a big furore about the accidents to flyers. These accidents, he declared, were due to the poor visibility around Selfridge.

The move to Godman, he claims, was made to have better flying weather. But, it was not his decision, he maintains.

Accuse Southern Officers Of Bias In Florida Camp

Troops Trained At Camp Dying For World Freedom

CAMP GORDON JOHNSTON, Fla.—(ANP) — While Negro troops trained here are displaying courage in the European invasion, dying and winning praises of their commanding officers in this great fight for world freedom, other Negro soldiers are under going maltreatment right here in the United States.

Retention and enforcement of the Jim Crow practices here can be traced more to ranking Army officers than the white enlisted men. Colonel Alexander T. Murphy, Post Executive Officer and Lt. Colonel Dale G. Savage, Commanding Officer, Amphibian Truck Training group, two dyed in the wool southerners are said to be responsible for most of the practices of discrimination here.

USE SMALL AREA

Although the men are housed in the same wards, discrimination is practiced at the station hospital here. Space and equipment won't allow separate wards. When the patients go to eat they are segregated. Colored troops are forced to use a small area set aside for them but both white and colored soldiers enter and go to the steam tables for food in the same line.

At the main post theatre both races purchase their tickets in the same line, from the same cashier, and use the same water fountain and latrine, but they must sit in their jim crowd section after entering the theater. On several occasions near riots have almost resulted because of this practice.

The white soda fountain waitresses deliberately wait on white patrons first in the main post exchange even though colored troops may have arrived at the counter first.

HERDED IN BACK

Three buses, owned and operated by the army are used to bring civilian workers to and from work here. Colored workers are herded into the back and told to stay in their place by white civilian workers regardless to how crowded the buses might be. Observers say that the low ebb getting worse each day. Serious interracial trouble is feared.

Negro officers here are not permitted at the Post Officers club.

Army Rules Death For GI Amsg. Slay Case In Claiborne Mutiny

News—New York 10-7-44

ALEXANDRIA, La., (ANP)—Army justice took its toll of four of the five Negro soldiers involved in the recent disturbances at Camp Claiborne by sentencing two to life imprisonment, one to nine years at hard labor and one to die, according to announcements made last week by Brig. Gen. Louis F. Guerro, commanding officer. Pvt. William Smith

Jr., 29, escaped by acquittal.

According to court-martial verdicts Pvt. Leroy McGary, Chicago, must die for his share in the uprising that brought wounds to two Negro soldiers and one white officer, while Pvt. George S. Washington, Houston, and T 5 Phillip Davis, Montgomery, Ala., must serve life imprisonment sentences. Davis was accused of holding two officers prisoner during the outbreak. Sgt. Conway Price, Brooklyn, was sentenced to nine years at hard labor for failing to attempt to suppress mutiny.

McGary's death sentence resulted from charges of mutiny and other military offenses.

War Department Order Forbidding Discrimination At Army Posts Is Protested By Governor Of Alabama

ORDER SENT RECENTLY

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—In a telegram to President Roosevelt, Governor Chauncey Sparks protested against a War Department order forbidding discrimination between Negro and white personnel at Army post exchanges and other facilities on Army installations.

Gov. Sparks urged the President to give his personal attention to the matter, declaring that the order read Thursday, to civilian Army personnel at nearby Maxwell field "breaks down the essential principle of race relationship in the South" and "grievously handicaps efforts to bring about better racial relationships." He added "I protest such an order, which violates a state wide practice and believe; it aggravates rather than helps."

The protest followed publication here of the news that segregation of the races at Maxwell Field Post Exchange had been terminated on War Department orders.

STARTED IN TUSKEGEE

Age—New York N.Y.
9-2-44

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—The War Department order forbidding discrimination in post exchanges and other facilities on Army posts was read at the Tuskegee Army Air Field here and carried out early this month after Negro officers protested that the policy of having separate dining rooms in the exchange restaurant was a violation of the order issued by Major General Ulio in Washington, D. C., early last month.

White civilian employes and Army officers, who protested against having t oeat in the same dining room with Negro civilians were told that they would have to comply with the War Deparment's order. As a result most of the whites have stopped eating in the post exchange restaurant and either bring lunches to the Air Field with them or else eat in the town of Tuskegee which is unaffected by the Army Order.

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The War Department said that the Air Forces had sent to all its commands recently a memorandum calling attention to the department's long-standing policy which forbids discrimination at post exchanges, theatres, and other recreational facilities at Army posts and by Army-operated transportation facilities.

FORT HUACHUCA, Ariz. — Do the jim-crow orders of a post commander supersede the more democratic ones of a War Department regulation?

The answer to that question will determine whether or not army officials have a right to an "all-white" swimming pool.

The Apache Sentinel, official publication of Fort Huachuca, without referring to the article appearing in the AFRO-AMERICAN several weeks ago exposing the lily-white swimming facilities at this camp, upheld the jim-crow practices of the army officials.

He has a wife and child.

De RIDDER, La. (ANS)—The U.S. Army admits that it cannot protect its soldiers from the wrath of persons in civilian communities, yet it will not permit soldiers to protect themselves.

During recent maneuvers in Louisiana, hostile Southerners often fired shots at colored troops, at least one being killed by a bus driver in Alexandria, La., and a number of other brutalities were heaped upon the troops.

in De Ridder, colored troops were allowed to walk on only one side of the street (this was broken up by colored troops going in town in large numbers and deliberately walking the forbidden side).

At that time, Gen. Almond, commander of the 92nd Infantry Division, put out orders and personally warned every man in the division against carrying live ammunition, stating that he would see that persons caught would get the full force of the law. Several were caught and given jail terms and fines.

Huachuca Most Infamous Camp, Says ex-Chaplain

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.
10-14-44

BALTIMORE—Some of the un-American practices which make Fort Huachuca "the most infamous camp in America" were revealed this week by Grant Reynolds, former army chaplain, who served at the Arizona camp.

"Fort Huachuca is generally referred to as being a combination of the horrors of a prison camp and a military camp in Africa where black colonials are trained," the ex-chaplain said.

Mr. Reynolds, a Congregational minister, who also served as administrative assistant in the NAACP Washington Bureau, resigned from the latter post recently to participate more actively in the work of the Non-Partisan Council for the Abolition of Discrimination in Military and Veteran Affairs. 10-14-44

Cites Injustices

He charged this week that Huachuca, the training ground for the 92nd and 93rd Infantry Divisions, is known for long sentences meted out to colored soldiers as a result of false charges and unprovoked assaults by white officers upon colored enlisted men.

Other un-American practices common there, according to the ex-chaplain, are segregation of colored officers into squalid quarters, and maintenance of a white supremacy caste system over all the colored personnel.

Epithets Used

He said further that colored soldiers had attempted suicide there because of intolerable conditions, that the commanding general had referred to the colored soldiers as his "14,000 'n - - - s'," and that 30,000 troops were maintained there in a condition of degradation and cruelty. 10-14-44

Since Mr. Reynolds left Huachuca, most of the soldiers have been shipped out—the 93rd to the South Pacific and the 92nd to Italy.

WASHINGTON

War Department sources on Monday discounted reports that tense race relations in Detroit were responsible for the transfer of aviation units from Selfridge Field, Mich., explaining that they had completed their training there.

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich. — The 477th Bombardment Group and 553rd Fighter Squadron, both colored training units of the Army Air Forces, were moved from this base, Friday, after a week of field restrictions.

In the surprise action, the bomber unit was sent to Fort Knox, Ky., and the fighter unit to the Walterboro Army Air Base in South Carolina. 5-13-44

It is rumored that Selfridge is being changed to a rehabilitation camp for returning army veterans. However, much unrest had followed the court-martial trial of Lieut. Milton Henry, who was dismissed last week for insubordination.

Racial Reminder Hinted

Both groups have reputedly been sent to camps where they could be reminded of their racial status. Especially has the fighter group the reputation of being just as willing to fight for democracy

Dixie Major Flogs 9 Men, Gets Year Term

Defender — Chicago, Ill. 7-13-44

ATLANTA, Ga. — Found guilty of ordering nine bare-skinned United States army prisoners—three of whom were Negroes—flogged with bullet-weighted rubber tubes, Maj. Louis Rothchild Lefkoff of Atlanta was ordered confined for a year at hard labor by a seven-officer court martial, it was disclosed this week.

Maj. Lefkoff, found ill-fitted for active command, had been sent to Camp Van Dorn, a dreary clump of tar-paper barracks and huts some 50 miles south of Natchez, as a police and prison officer.

Army sources stated that the prisoners flogged were among 160 held at the Camp Van Dorn stockade under Lefkoff's supervision. The court martial was told that after a stockade guard refused Maj. Lefkoff's order to flog the prisoners, the officer called in 10 military policemen and instructed them to carry out the order. 7-15-44

The prosecution asserted that Maj. Lefkoff stood outside the guardhouse armed with a submachine gun while the MP's flogged the prisoners. Their trousers and underclothes had been removed. One prisoner collapsed and was taken to the camp hospital.

The defense given by Maj. Lefkoff was that he was unfamiliar with prison technique. He said that the prisoners were "uncontrollable" and had threatened him and members of his family.

A seven officer court martial convicted Maj Lefkoff of "cruel, inhuman and unusual punishment" of prisoners. He was ordered confined for a year at hard labor, forfeiture of pay and allowances, and dismissal from the service.

Though it is reported that the mid-October evacuation will cause a shrinkage in population from 25,000 to 300 persons, no official news have come forth concerning the disposition of the all-colored hospital staff, the nearly 100 officers in the medical officers replacement corps or the 80-odd Negro nurses stationed at the fort.

TO OTHER POSTS

Rumors, which are fast, many and varied, have it that these doctors and nurses will be sent to other posts where they will be placed under white supervision; Douglas air base will be converted into an all-colored base and some of the medics will be sent there; a veteran hospital will be established and turned over to Negroes; the more qualified physicians will be distributed to certain white hospitals. 10-1-44

Despite radio requests for 3,000 additional nurses nearly 100 are here doing very little. The war department needs doctors so badly that all limited service medical officers are to be re-examined with the idea of putting as many as possible on overseas assignments.

Medics here are desirous of offering their resignations en masse but are being discouraged by the commanding officer who wants them to wait action of the war department.

NO MIXING

Further rumors are that the general staff will not permit a mixing of colored and white units and despite the announcements relative to nurses being trained in white centers, they still come here. Though the surgeon general's office would like to solve all of this, the general staff and service commands will not permit it.

An announcement Tuesday by Col. Hardy indicated that 6,000 Mexican laborers are to be quartered at Ft. Huachuca for a three month period, beginning Oct. 1.

An entertainment unit of 40 performers will go to Hotel Theresa, New York, Nov. 1. It is understood that Earl Renfroe is enroute to the Pershing hotel, Chicago, to head the dental unit; Col. West A. Hamilton will command the Pershing division and that 80 WACs will be assigned to that station. 10-1-44

Here prominent Negro military heads are of the opinion that the National Medical Association stand ready to oppose any effort to mishandle the fort's colored medical officers.

White Officer Guilty in Flogging

Afro American — Baltimore, Md. 7-15-44

CAMP VAN DORN, Miss. — Major Louis R. Lefkoff, white, a former dry goods store proprietor in Atlanta, was found guilty July 7 by court-martial of ordering the flogging of nine military prisoners, three colored and six white.

In violation of Army regulations, the men, none of whom suffered permanent injury, were beaten with rubber tubes weighed with .45-calibre bullets.

Guard Refused

According to testimony, Major Lefkoff had ordered a stockade guard to flog them, but when he refused was forced to give the order to military policemen who beat the men while the major remained outside the guardhouse.

The verdict said that the offense was believed to be the result of malassignment and incompetency rather than an inherent viciousness on his part. The major had testified earlier that he was unfitted by experience for penal work. 7-15-44

District Soldier Convicted in Army Mutiny

Post — Washington, D.C. 10-3-44

Four more Camp Claiborne riot convictions, including a local Negro, were anounced yesterday by Brig. Gen. Louis F. Guerre, camp commander, at the finish of 10 out of 11 trials of Negro soldiers in connection with rioting at the Louisiana camp on the night of August 18.

First Sergt. Thomas A. Terry, whose address was reported by the Associated Press as 3115 Georgia ave. nw., and two others were given life sentences on charges of acting as ringleaders and attempting to incite soldiers to mutiny, according to the camp public relations announcement. They also were charged with refusing to obey orders from superior officers.

Terry and Sergt. Charlie B. Coleman of Huntington, W. Va., also sentenced to life imprisonment, admitted being armed with carbines against orders, according to the announcements.

Another Negro was given 30 years for joining the mutiny.

Negro Ministers Protest Army Rule

World Telegram — New York, N.Y. 9-19-44

A resolution protesting segregation of Negro troops in rest and redistribution centers was adopted unanimously yesterday by the Baptist Ministers Conference of Greater New York and Vicinity, representing 200,000 Negroes.

The conference wired President Roosevelt of its action and asked him to countermand War Department orders barring Negroes from 56 army centers.

White Officer Defies Anti-Segregation Order

People's Voice — New York, N.Y. 9-9-44

FT. BENNING (ANP)—Joining hands with white civilian forces in the southland against the recent war department order banning racial segregation in army camps last week was Col. J. P. Edgerly, commanding officer of the reception center here. He went on record of defying the war department's edict when he addressed a body of his men here, then used his Negro troops as targets of his race slander.

Encouraging disobedience to the war department's memorandum No. 97, Col. Edgerly told his men that it would not mean any new changes in their way of living. He reminded them that "this is Georgia," and implied the old saying that "when in Rome we do as Romans do." Those who heard the commanding officer are unable to point to any remark where he encouraged the same strict discipline to the non-segregation order as he has to other military orders in the past. 9-9-44

Col. Edgerly hinted that the order was merely a political move to win Negro votes. He assured those white troops who are stricken by Negrophobia that the order did not have to be complied with and warned Negro soldiers against any effort to carry out the war department's edict.

"I hope you will not try to carry out this order at Fort Benning," he told his Negro troops directly, "for if you should it will cause trouble." 9-9-44

Throwing the full force of his rank in the effort to continue racial segregation in the army, the colonel allowed his anti-Negro hatred to make his colored troops the targets of an unwarranted attack. He harshly criticized their way of living before entering the

FT. HUACHUCA — (A N P)— Ft. Huachuca, training ground for the famed 92nd and 93rd infantry divisions and the site of the nation's largest Negro hospital, is destined for inactivation Oct. 15, according to an official announcement las tweek by Col. Edwin N. Hardy, post commander.

Though it is reported that the mid-October evacuation will cause a shrinkage in population from 25,000 to 300 persons, no official news have come forth concerning the disposition of the all-colored hospital staff, the nearly 100 officers in the medical officers replacement corps or the 80-odd Negro nurses stationed at the fort.

LARGEST POST

The largest training post in the country and used exclusively for Negro troops, Huachuca, since 1877, has been an important training center for soldiers, including those of the Indian wars and in World War I.

In 1940 military authorities saw fit to modernize the post and then several millions of dollars were expended toward building expansions and the reservation was increased to 73,000 acres or more than 117 square miles.

Although much additional Arizona territory was utilized for establishment of barracks, mess halls, hospitals, headquarters buildings, recreation clubs and centers, a field house and stadium which seats more than 11,000 persons, the general color was retained by the presence of Apache Indian scouts that are dispersed throughout the fort

Comprising Arizona's third largest population center, last October, during the training of the 92nd, the fort had a populaiton of more than 25,000 persons. It served as a supply center for all army camps in Arizona, many in New Mexico and some in California. Transportation of these supplies was by rails, truck and airlines.

At Ft. Huachuca a huge military laundry and dry cleaning establishment handled the clothing and bedding for over 30,000 soldiers. As a communication conter the fort's system could skillfully handle more than 24,000 telephone cals in 24 hours.

The two hospitals were equipped with 1,141 beds and there were three dental infirmaries with 42 chairs. The fort had at one time the only Negro commanded and staffed hospital in the army. Many of the country's foremost Negro physicians and dentists were staffed here.

With the inactivation of Fort Huachuca 300 officers, civilian employes and enlisted men must be on their way to other locations, and a center that was most important and interesting must be suddenly cut off.

SOUTH HANDICAPPED?

ANP—New York, N.Y.

OF ALL the silly reasons advanced by Alabama residents against the War Department's recent order banning discrimination between Negro and white personnel at Army post exchanges and other facilities on Army installations, the reason advanced by Alabama's Governor Chauncey Sparks is about the most assinine.

Last week, Governor Sparks in a telegram to President Roosevelt protesting the Army order, said that the order "breaks down the essential principle of race relationship in the South," and "grievously handicaps efforts to bring about better racial relationships."

How better racial relationships can be brought about under the existing Southern code of Negro-white relationships is hard to understand. Despite what Governor Sparks, and others of his ilk may say, racial relations will never be improved in the South so long as the attempted understanding proceeds on the present basis — that what the white man decides is best for the Negro is best, and that what the Negro decides is best for himself is mere agitation.

There are even those who have had the temerity to say that Negroes were satisfied with what the "good white people" were doing for them and that they wanted no interference with the purely sectional problem by outsiders.

It was refreshing to note, in this connection, that the Birmingham Baptist Ministers Conference, in commending the War Department order, also sent a telegram to President Roosevelt declaring that "we emphatically deny that we are satisfied with the evils of segregation."

If anything is responsible for the general low economic and educational status of the masses, both Negro and white, in the South it is the evils of segregation, coupled with the vicious denial of opportunities for the disadvantaged of both races.

If anything is responsible for the South being handicapped in its so-called attempts at solution of the racial problem, it is the South' attitude on the problem.

When even ordinary common courtesies are denied a race merely because of color, it would not appear that those who are responsible for the denial are sincere or want to do anything about it. For generations, most Southerners have justified the vicious policy of segregation and denial of opportunities to Negroes on the grounds that they must keep white womanhood pure and undefiled. Southern demagogues have for years had themselves elected to high office, both in state and federal elections, on the "white supremacy" campaign basis. Does that look like the South wants to do anything but keep the Negro down?

When the South learns that all the Negro wants is equality of opportunity to work, to live and to enjoy the fruits of democracy and accedes to that fundamental need, then, and only then, will there case to be a race problem. And only then, will the South cease to be handicapped.

THE ARMY ORDER

AND speaking of handicaps, the War Department order banning discrimination between Negro and white personnel at Army post exchanges and other facilities on Army installations, while commendable, is merely a step in fulfilling what Negroes want — no barriers raised in the military services because of race or color.

The recent order is certain to remove cause for plenty of complaint at Army posts in the South where heretofore the local pattern of separate accommodations for the two races has been strictly followed. But the order does not go far enough. It is, we hope, merely the first step in the right direction.

There is no basis for justification of the Army's present policy of jim crow regiments and divisions, except that it has been the practice for years. Every other nation practices the policy of complete integration of its citizens in its military forces except the United States.

As the leading exponent of democracy, then, the United States is in an untenable position in the eyes of the rest of the world because democracy's benefits are grudgingly doled out to the Negro who enjoys at best just second-class citizenship.

Agitation of the Negro Press and leaders and moulders of Negro opinion and action must continue until our government itself purges from its code of procedures jim crow army, air corps, and naval units. Democracy will remain just a beautiful ideal to Negroes until the government itself starts to practice at home what it is fighting to extend abroad.

NEGRO SOLDIERS DUEL WITH MP'S

Post-Birmingham, Ala.
5-26-44

By United Press

MOBILE, May 26.—An Army board of inquiry had been appointed today to investigate a midnight gun battle between Negro soldiers and Military Police at Brookley Field, Army Air Base near here.

The trouble started it was reported, after a white civilian employe of the field complained to MP's that he had been robbed by a Negro soldier. He was escorted to the Negro barracks for the purpose of identifying his assailant.

Troops Open Fire

Upon entering the area of the barracks, according to the official report, Negro occupants turned out all lights and opened fire on the white soldiers with rifles and pistols.

At that point, Brig. Gen. James A. Mollison, commanding officer of the Mobile Air Service Command, ordered more armed MP's into the area. General shooting ensued for approximately two hours, from midnight until 2 a. m.

Civilians living near the field said they also could detect the fire of two machine guns during the action, but this was not confirmed officially.

One Man Shot

One unidentified white soldier was nicked in the leg by a bullet when he failed to obey orders to halt. 5-26-44

The Negroes ceased firing after floodlights were turned into their barracks and field officers, including General Mollison, Lieut. Col. Donald Hudson and Col. Lionel Dunlap, calmly walked into the path of their fire and persuaded them to calm down.

All Negroes involved were confined to the military area today, pending completion of an official investigation. General Mollison promised that ring leaders of the incident would receive "proper justice."

Negroes At Brookley Confined After Fray

News-Birmingham, Ala.

MOBILE, Ala. — (AP) —Brig. Gen. James A. Mollison, commanding the Mobile Air Service Command, ordered all Negro troops at Brookley Field confined to the military area Thursday following an early morning exchange of shots between white military police and other soldiers there.

The commanding general said no one was killed or wounded in the exchange of gunfire, but that a white soldier suffered a minor gunshot wound in an accident.

Gen. Mollison promised "impartial justice" after an investigation of the affray, which occurred shortly after midnight. 5-25-44

A white civilian had complained to military police that he had been robbed by a Negro soldier, and the military police took him into the area where Negro troops are quartered in an effort to identify the robber.

Gen. Mollison went to the barracks area and addressed the troops after the shooting.

Negro Soldiers 'Shoot Up' Town

Advertiser, Montgomery, Alabama

DUCK HILL, MISS., June 2.—(AP)—Town Marshal Wesley D. Shamblee, of Duck Hill, said tonight that eight truckloads of a convoy of 25, carrying negro soldiers stationed at Camp McCain, Miss., had passed through the town Monday and opened up with what appeared to be carbine rifles.

The marshal said that military police, and State Highway patrolmen had warned the negroes to cease firing. 6-3-44

All shots went into the air and no damage was reported, Shamblee said. Last year negroes stationed at Camp McCain sent dozens of shots into Duck Hill residences. The negroes were later apprehended, given dishonorable discharges, and sent to Federal penitentiaries, the Camp McCain public relations office said.

Col. Ira A. Ryder, post commander at McCain, told reporters tonight that if the shooting occurred "the incident is of minor importance" and refused further comment.

Shamblee said that citizens of Duck Hill had met with Col. Ryder, demanding action be taken to prevent further incidents.

No result of the conference with Col. Ryder had been reported late tonight.

Cal. Ring Transported Mexican, White Girls

LOS ANGELES — Operations of a huge white slavery ring, suspected of transporting Mexican, colored and white girls to Fort Huachuca, Ariz., for immoral purposes, came to light here last week.

By Saturday, agents of the FBI had arrested seven persons and were searching for eight others. They revealed that the ring's operations had been under observation for fifteen months.

All seven of those under arrest were booked on charges of violating the Mann Act.

Clyde Dorsey, 29, arraigned before U.S. Commissioner David B. Head, denied any criminal purpose in driving one of the women defendants across the California-Arizona State line to the Army post. His attorney, Walter B. Gordon, Jr., succeeded in having the suspect's bond reduced to $1500.

Fort Huachuca, where both the 93rd and 92nd Divisions were trained before going overseas, for more than two years has been the station for thousands of colored soldiers.

FT. HUACHUCA, Ariz.—(ANP)—Ft. Huachuca, which a few short weeks ago was teeming with life, today looks and sounds like a tomb. A census just a few months ago at Christmas time showed more than 25,000 soldiers here to say nothing of an army of civilian employes.

Today there are less than 500 persons on the post and most of those are expecting to be transferred at any time. The remainder of the 92nd division left here not long ago.

Good Hospital Site

There were those who thought that perhaps Ft. Huachuca would be retained as a sort of permanent headquarters for Negro troops. These felt that at least the station hospital which was the pride of the post and whose staff personnel roll sounded like a Who's Who in Negro medicine, would remain.

There was talk that, located in Arizona, an area beneficial to lungs, that it might become one of the hospitals to which returning veterans might be sent. This theory gained credence when Station No. 1, which was commanded by Col. Midian O. Bousfield, was combined with Station Hospital No. 2 and upgraded into a regional hospital. 9-22-44

Placed Over Bousfield

The only fly in that ointment was that Col. Maynard, white, in charge of Hospital No. 2, was put in charge. Col. Bousfield had built up No. 1 and not even the fact that Col. Maynard was an old army doctor served to soften that shuffle when Bousfield was left without any especial executive assignment.

Another reason for assuming that the Ft. Huachuca hospital would remain intact was that an air conditioning system was installed only two or three weeks ago and battleship lineoleum which had lain around for weeks waiting to see what the future held, was ordered lain. 9-22-44

However that may be, overnight and with the abrupt suddenness characteristic of the army, the hospital was shifted. No one here appears to be absolutely certain where the staff went but the general accepted opinion is that it was transferred to Ft. Sam Huston near San Antonio, Texas, a hospital important in the work of receiving veterans returning from overseas especially in the Southwest Pacific area.

Part of the 92d division of course has previously been reported in Italy. The 335th Station hospital activated at Ft. Huachuca here and commanded by Maj. Strickland went to the European area at the same time. How the division happened to be split up is not known.

57 Negro Soldiers Jailed In Arizona When They Strike Against Prolonged K.P. Duty

Age-Herald, New York, N.Y.

TUCSON, Ariz. — With a determination which may well dramatize a nation-wide problem, fifty-seven Negro soldiers working as Kitchen Police at the Marana Army Air Field near Tuscon, spontaneously went on strike. At 4:00 a.m. on the morning of September 11 the first shift of sixteen men reported to the mess hall and announced they were no longer going to work without the extra pay to which each was entitled. In the face of the most dire punishment, they sat down. The Military Police were immediately called and the strikers were imprisoned in the Guardhouse.

The executive officer of the Field, Major Tilden, and the white commanding officer of the Negro squadron, Lieutenant Shoupe, called a meeting in the day room of the second shift which was supposed to report at 1:00 p. m. The members of this shift told the officers they would not report for work either. These men, too, were sent to the Guardhouse. 9-23-44

The remaining two shifts did not report, but so far no disciplinary action has been taken against them.

The strike was really the desperate protest of men who have suffered many abuses and had no recourse to remedial action. Most of the soldiers in question have been on K. P. for upwards of nineteen months, performing day in, day out, the most dreary and menial work in the Army Air Forces. They have been under constant abuse of "pushers" who are notorious for their speed-up methods.

For the last nine months they have been serving cadets without being paid the extra fifty per cent of base pay to which each is entitled.

Policy Called Illegal

For punishment of minor infractions they have been obliged to serve their extra duty in the mess halls instead of their squadron area. This policy was recently declared illegal by an Administrative Inspector after having been in operation for over eighteen months.

Tucson, near which they are stationed, is the nearest sizeable town to the largest concentration of Negro troops in the country. Large detachments are stationed at Marana and Davis-Monthan Fields and Fort Huachuca is the largest Negro training center in the world.

Yet the recreational facilities are utterly inadequate. Civic leaders and military personnel have long petitioned for a Negro Service-men's Center near transportation and amusement centers, but in vain. They have met the successful opposition of local merchants and prejudiced city officials.

BEYOND THE NEGRO

Northwest Enterprise—Seattle, Wash.

Any comment upon the savagery and cowardice of the Negro soldiers who the other night attacked, without the slightest provocation, a group of sleeping and unarmed Italians in the same service, barbarously killing one and wounding many, is entirely superfluous, except to wonder how it could be possible for an entire company of soldiers trained under U. S. military discipline to plan collectively such an attack, to arise in the middle of the night and move to another barracks without attracting the notice of any sentries and to carry out, undisturbed until it was too late, their foul enterprise. 9-13-44

It is not our province to discuss here what military measures of safety were omitted or not executed to permit the occurence of such a deplorable incident. But it is impossible not to try to ascertain where, beyond the Negroes immediately involved, the ultimate responsibility lies.

There can be no doubt that this is, primarily, a consequence of the uncontrolled campaign of hate which, in the name of a freedom that goes beyond all the limits of decency, certain members ofthe American press have been permitted to carry on undisturbed, even to the post, as it is seen, to incite acts of the most barbarous violence. But, in a smaller measure, a distinct part of the responsibility must go to the military authorities of the fort for having permitted, through a grave error of judgment, a situation to materialize whereby an incident of this kind could take place.

It seems that the Italian soldiers at Fort Lawton have been the victims for a long time, of innumerable provocations and insults against which they had strict orders not to react. In fact they did so, to the limits of human endurance, but their conduct, instead of pacifying the hotheads, had the opposite effect of emboldening them even more, by making them believe that what was sublime discipline was, intead, lack of courage.

It is evident that, were it only from a sense of fairness and justice, the authorities at the fort should have enforced the strictest disciplinary measures to discourage such insults and all attempts at provocation. If this had been done it is quite possible that matters might not have gone as far as they did and that the tragedy of the other night would have been averted. 9-13-44

We have no doubt that the military authorities will make a prompt and exhaustive investigation of the whole matter, but we hope that, beyond punishing the directly culpable, they will also attempt to find some remedy for the insufferable situation of these men who try to live among us as the most respectful of guests, whereas the host permits his servants to break all the rules of hospitality. That is, if we ourselves do not break all the rules of moderation by classifying murder as a breach of hospitality.

Non-Coms' Protest Against Commander Results In Arrests

7-8-44

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — The arrest and imprisonment in Fort Hauchuca, Ariz., pending court martial, of 11 non-commissioned officers of the 370th Infantry regiment for protesting the attitude of their company commander stirred a storm of protest here this week.

Asks Probe

Leslie A. Perry of the Washington bureau, NAACP, has announced he is asking the war department for a thorough investigation.

The 11 platoon sergeants, squad and section leaders have been charged with violation of the 96th Article of War, which prohibits joint protests from members of the armed forces.

The men were arrested, confined to the post stockade and charges against them signed by Col. Sherman, their regimental commander, following submission of a letter which all 11 had signed. The letter asked that the signers be relieved of their ratings on the grounds that "they could not handle their men because of the present company commander."

With continuance of "existing conditions", the letter said, it would be "useless to continue in our present capacities because we would not be able to carry out our duties with the proper spirit and willingness as should be exercised by a non-commissioned officer." 7-8-44

Better Conditions

The signers, senior NCO's of their company, also urged "that adjustment should be made to better conditions."

Rapping the confinement of the men to the post stockade as contrary to all principles of military justice, Perry said he had also been informed that officers appointed to defend the men had not been notified until the evening before the court martial.

Admitting that by signing the letter jointly, the 11 men may have exposed themselves to the charge of violating Article of War 96, Perry cited Article of War 121 which authorizes an enlisted man or officer to complain to his next higher officer for redress of any wrong.

At the war department here, the stoning incident was branded idle rumor "without any foundation in fact." 7-8-44

Truman Gibson, civilian aide to the secretary of war, admitted that reports of the incident had been received in Washington but pointed out that confinement of the stockade after arrest is in accordance with regular procedure. The charges, he also pointed out, did not concern the subject of the protest but the joint signing of it.

Concerning the alleged last minute notification of defense counsel, Gibson said that no report of any court martial had been received and it was doubtful that one had been held in the case as yet.

Officers and Men Meet JC at Davis

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.

CAMP DAVIS, N.C. — Jim crow is something that the fifty-two colored officers stationed here do little talking about for publication, but there is no denying that they get a good whiff of that noxious American phenomenon.

There are several officers' clubs on the post, but colored officers almost exclusively confine their frequenting to the one in their area. 8-12-44

Convenience was the most frequently expressed reason. For the sake of accuracy, this club is no jim crow, as many white officers commanding colored troops visit it, too.

Unit Officers Separated

But the white officers of the 234th and 235th AA Bns. live in the same barracks, while colored officers in the 234th are quartered in one barracks and colored officers in the 235th are lodged in another.

There must be some reason for that, but none with whom I talked seemed inclined to provide it — the real one, of course.

Support Club, Banned

The most vilatious grievance I heard was that colored officers' club in Wilmington, thirty miles from here, but are not accorded membership privileges. At least they are barred from visiting the club.

There have been, in the past, flare-ups over the treatment colored officers receive when they attend the post theatres.

Some nasty incidents have developed when MP's attempted to enforce the North Carolina jim crow law on a Federal military reservation.

Unethical Officers Shifted

There is also talk of superior white officers formerly calling down colored officers before enlisted men. This practice is no more, because those guilty of it have been shifted.

Some white officers attached to colored units and their fellow colored officers seem to get along famously.

Unless what I saw was window dressing, I observed several of both races fraternizing on sincere basis.

Enlisted Men's Lot Worse

As for enlisted men, their lot is infinitely more difficult than that of their officers.

Nowhere in the South have I seen any army camp where so-called separate but equal facilities for colored men are comparable to those of whites.

Equality Non-Existent

Camp Davis is no exception. Whites have superior everything, including service clubs, PXs and libraries. Equality just doesn't exist. 8-12-44

There is no need to bring up the subject of transportation outside the camp area. It is as yet, unabatedly, one of the wickedest social problems colored members of the armed forces have been called upon to cope with.

234th Officers Once with 369th

CAMP DAVIS, N.C.—First Lt. Charles Tolbert and 2nd Lt. Stanton Blocker, Jr., former members of the 369th AA Group, are now assigned to the 234th AA Bn.

Lieutenant Tolbert left the outfit, which is now in the Pacific area, before it went overseas. He entered officer candidate school here and was commissioned.

Lieutenant Blocker, who was also commissioned at Camp Davis, accompanied the former New York National Guard unit, once an infantry regiment, overseas before being attached to his present outfit.

Soldiers Accuse Afro American Huachuca Captain

Baltimore, Md.

By DEREITH BURD

FORT HUACHUCA, Ariz. — Colored officers stationed here have made out charges against Capt. Sam Adams, white, on the grounds of giving an improper order, the AFRO learned this week. 8-5-44

The incident, it seems, occurred about the same time that things were so hot in the 371st mess hall as the result of certain tables being set aside for "White Only."

Captain Adams is alleged to have told the colored officers that orders had been cut and would soon be down designating a certain table for white officers. No such order has been found.

Await Colonel's Action

On leave at the time the charges were preferred, Colonel Notestein, commander of the regiment, returned to duty this week and speculation is rife as to what action he will take.

If he follows the rule of his past actions, he will take the responsibility of the white officer upon his broad shoulders and apologize for his action, giving some flimsy excuse like "he was tired, etc."

Several weeks ago when Captain Carter, white, personnel officer, made a similar statement, the colonel apologized for him and he is still on duty. During recent maneuvers Captain Luther, white, struck a colored soldier. This was brought to the attention of Colonel Notestein. No action has been taken.

FORT HUACHUCA, Ariz.—I, a former member of the 372nd Infantry, and a great many more former members of the regiment, unfortunately, are now stationed here not because we asked to come here nor because we were dissatisfied with our former officers, a soldier told the AFRO last week.

"The recent statement to the effect that if the men here were given a chance to vote on leaving here or staying in the Army 99.5 per cent would vote to go home still stands," he declared, adding:

"Under our former officers we really had something to fight for. Where the war should be fought is right here in Fort Huachuca. 'Boss Charlie' runs place and we all must follow

A REAL PATRIOT

He was just a little Negro urchin, a ragamuffin, but he stood out in our estimation as one of the greatest patriots Auburn ever produced. News-Birmingham, Ala.

He has never bought a War Bond, nor given a drop of his blood to the Red Cross, nor contributed to any war activity other than the one to which we saw him making his contribution.

Passing along the tin can bin on College Street early one morning, we saw this little urchin emptying a paper sack containing four empty cans. He was doing his bit to make the world a fit place in which to live. 6-1-44

And what an example he set for the rest of us!

Those four cans had no intrinsic value. That little Negro could not have sold them for even as much as a stick of candy. They were worthless, except as an agency of peace. They could spell the doom of a nation; they could contain enough tin to make the shot that some day might send a Tojo or Hitler to his grave; they could shape the destiny of the world, save broken hearts, turn world chaos into tranquil peace, write finis to the worst tragedy man's history will ever record, bring loved ones back to weeping mothers, and restore brotherly love to its place in a world torn asunder by greed and hatred. Who knows?

Four rusty tin cans, a little Negro ragamuffin and a patriot whose loyalty and devotion are as deep-rooted as those of the man who walks into a bank and buys a million dollars worth of bonds. 6-1-44

DEBUNKING SUPREMISTS

Ore—New York, N.Y.

OUR Northern and Southern "white supremists" probably won't like this editorial because it tells the truth and shows how foolhardy they have been in denying proper educational facilities for Negroes. 9-2-44

Poor schooling has robbed the nation's military service of at least 15 full divisions, according to a study recently released by the American Teachers Association. The report, published under the title, "The Black and White of Rejections for Military Service; A Study of Rejections of Selective Service Registrants by Race, on Account of Educational and Mental Deficiencies," is the result of a survey conducted by a committee of five educators.

The committee included Charles H. Thompson, dean of Howard University's Graduate School; Martin D. Jenkins, associate professor of education, Howard University; Francis A. Gregory, principal of Armstrong High School, Washington, D. C.; Howard H. Long, assistant superintendent of schools, Washington, D. C., and Jane E. McCallister, professor of education, Miner Teachers College, Washington, D. C. 9-2-44

There were some startling facts disclosed in the survey. Up to September 1, 1943, a total of 341,200 registrants were rejected for military service because of educational deficiency, but about one-third of these men were taken later in the Army and brought up to minimum requirements by special intensive courses.

There was found to be a direct relationship between rates of rejections for educational and mental deficiencies and the per capita expenditures for schooling in each state. The rejection rate in Northern states for Negroes and whites was considerably lower than the rate for both races in the South. Rejection rates in the North were lowest in those states with the highest per capita expenditures, and vice versa. 9-2-44

The study certainly shows the need for enlightenment and education, not only of the rejectees but also of those responsible for denying them the proper educational facilities. The study shows the "white supremists" are penny-wise and pound foolish and have nothing of which they can be justly proud

Uncle Sam Gets Inductee Despite Negro's Dual Role

Post—Birmingham, Ala.
8-1-44

Earvin J. Foster, Birmingham Negro, is going into the Army for another man, although his own number has not been called.

Foster is delinquent with the West End Board under the name of Homer Lee Davis, but in good standing under his own name according to the story he told U. S. Marshal Raymond Thomason when brought here from Chicago by Federal authorities to face his draft board.

The prisoner, still in he blue uniform of a street car conductor which he will soon exchange for khaki, explained that he adopted the name of Davis prior to Selective Service legislation in order to get a job with the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co. Waiting his turn at the employment office, he answered to the name when it was called three times without response by company officials who were offering jobs only to applicants named. He got the job but had no idea of the trouble ahead for him.

Foster was forced to register as Davis in 1940 to get a pass in and out of TCI gates. Immediately after leaving the company he registered a second time under his real name. Until the past three months he has kept the board posted on his and Davis' moves, but somewhere between Cleveland and Chicago, Davis got lost in the shuffle.

Then the draft board ordered Davis to report for induction. Federal officers moved in to pick him up for failure to notify his draft board and found—Foster.

This week Foster will report for Davis, although he hasn't yet gotten his own call.

Committee To End Jim Crow In Service Formed

Argus—St. Louis, Mo.

NEW YORK, May 1—The National Citizens Committee for Winfred Lynn has become the Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Forces. Announcement of this change was made by unanimous decision of the committee.

In the committee's quarters at 260 West 125th Street, this city, Wilfred Kerr, co-chairman, explained that the recent decision was an attempt to meet the growing concern throughout the country on the matter of racial segregation and discrimination in training the nation's military forces.

"There is no greater contradiction in our American life today than that represented in a biracial American army, two armies in fact, one white the other black, waging a war for freedom and democracy abroad while it perpetuates at home those things against which it professes to fight." said Mr. Kerr.

The Lynn Committee is at present engaged with attorneys of the American Civil Liberties Union in the preparation of the case for argument before the Supreme Court sometime this Summer. It has the cooperation of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Workers Defense League and the March on Washington movement. Each of these groups is preparing a supporting amicus curiae brief.

With its reorganization the Committee is prepared to assume new obligations towards certain cases of racial discrimination in the military services which have recently come to its offices and toward whatever other instances that may yet come.

122,429 White Men And 58,715 Negroes Inducted In Alabama

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (AP) — From December, 1940, through November, 1944, there were 122,429 white and 58,715 Negro men inducted into the armed forces for Alabama, statistics released by Assistant State Selective Service Director Lt. Col. Charles W. Mills showed Saturday.

Jefferson (Birmingham) County led the state in the number drafted, 21,035 whites and 14,532 Negroes. In second place was Mobile county with 7,661 and 4,578, respectively. The third largest city and county—Montgomery—held its position with 3,469 Negroes accepted, but dropped to fifth in total whites called, 3,730 as against 4,176 for Walker County and 4,477 for Etowah County.

However, Etowah, third in the white column, ranked only 11th in the number of colored men taken, 957, while fourth ranking Walker in the white column was listed as 33rd in the colored with 559 inducted.

Emphasizing that credit for success of the program should go to local boards rather than state headquarters, a spokesman for State Director Col. James T. Johnson declared that the drafting had been done without affecting "appreciably" farm and industry production.

DECLARE 184th COMMAND NOT INFERIOR TO WHITES

Plaindealer
Kansas City, Kan.
3-17-44

Chicago, Mar. 17. (ANP)—Revelation that the 184th Field Artillery regiment, formerly the old Illinois Eighth regiment, had the highest I. Q. rating of any army units known to the officers of the Fifth Infantry division came this week from Maj. Ovid E. Harris, former battalion commander, in a letter repudiating Secretary of War Stimson's charge that "many Negro units have been unable to master efficiently techniques of modern weapons," of which the 184th was one of the units mentioned in the charge.

Maj. Harris, now on the inactive list, sent his letter to the President and Secretary Stimson.

"It is both amazing and shocking to find your signature placed over so gross a misstatement of fact," Maj. Harris said to Stimson.

As a battalion commander of the 184th Field artillery regiment for three years, Maj. Harris said that every test given in handling weapons was passed with credit by his men. The test teams of the Fifth Infantry division gave "superior," "excellent" and "very satisfactory" ratings following a combat test. All of this went to naught, however, to Gen. Courtland Parker. 3-17-44

"Despite all that has been said to the contrary, your regiment is not ready for combat," Gen. Parker declared. "You can march, you can implace your weapons, and you have demonstrated your ability to fire, but until your housekeeping improves I'll never certify you for combat. Why, just this morning I made an inspection of your barracks and found a pair of unlaced shoes under one of the beds. That is poor leadership."

"More than 300 of the enlisted men were college trained, but as replacements came the I. Q. rating was lowered," the major revealed. "Of the first group received, 40 could not read nor write. Then we were called upon to furnish a cedre of 30 0men for a quartermaster unit. Instead of allowing us to keep our best material for the artillery requirements, the selection was made from personnel cards and our men with the highest I. Q. were transferred." 3-17-44

"Our communications were rated 'superior,'" Maj. Harris pointed out. "We were credited with peculiar adaptability for motor marches and our fire direction centers became quiz centers for all visiting artillery personnel. In the fall of 1941 the 1st battalion went to Camp McCoy, under my command, for firing tests. Its scores for the G. H. Q. tests 1 and 11, have not been equaled. Col. Lewing of the second army conducted the test. Four official commendations resulted. Then came the usual reward—350 men were transferred as cadre. Replacements were received. Our task started over again."

The 184th was gradually broken up and reorganized into the 930th and 931st field artillery battalions which the war secretary disclosed will be converted into combat engineer units. "Certain other existing Negro field artillery units are being converted to heavier artillery, but the 930th and 931st 155 mm. howitzer battalions have not been selected for conversion to heavier artillery or retention as field artillery owing to thte unsatisfactory records of both units," Stimson wrote Rep. Fish. 3-17-44

In his letter, Maj. Harris hit the mistreatment of Negro soldiers in the south. Colored officers were ousted from post theatres and denied the facilities of libraries, he said. Men and officers were openly insulted by post commanders and their complaints were turned back upon them as reprimands, he declared.

"No soldier can say that those men lacked discipline," he stressed. "Nor can it be said truthfully, despite the handicaps encountered, that they are unable to master efficiently the technique of modern weapons." Ft. Sill does not say it of these officers, nor can efficiency ratings certify them for combat and at the same time indicate that they are unable.

"In the interest of morale and the war effort," the major continued, "I suggest that the individual records of these units be examined prior to public condemnation. The pride and hope of these soldiers is to accomplish their assigned mission. Their desire is to perform as their precedessors did under the regimental flags of the Old Eeighth in Cuba, on the Mexican border and so gloriously in France—one country, one flag."

" . . . Of all the indignities and injustices that have been practiced against the Negro, the most ironic and most cruel has been the discrimination practiced by and in our armed forces." — WENDELL WILLKIE.

Thousands of Negroes will oppose the re-election of Mr. Roosevelt this year because they are convinced that he should be repudiated for the unforgivable treatment visited upon colored men in the armed services of their country. A former chaplain in the United States Army said: "I know what it means to have my loftiest regard for my country transformed into bitterness. Because my Commander-in-Chief refuses to protect me against the brutalizing designs of my home-front enemies, I must oppose him."

True, Mr. Roosevelt has not done these things himself, but he has allowed the damnable philosophies of the South and its Hitler-like treatment of minorities to operate through the rank, file and fibre of the United States armed forces—SEGREGATION, JIM CROWISM, HUMILIATION and CRASSEDNESS have formed the pattern of treatment which has haunted American Negro soldiers.

This newspaper printed an open letter and sent the original of the same to the White House under date of August 23, 1941, telling how Negroes in the Selective Service Army were being treated. The editor of this newspaper personally called the President's attention to treatment of Negroes in the armed services on February 5, 1944, in the White House at Washington. And with the fair conclusion that the Commander-in-Chief must have heard of the thousands of protests that have flowed into the War Department and into his office about these un-American practices, we do not see how any forward-thinking Negro who respects his race and is in the fight to the death for first-class citizenship can afford to endorse such leadership.

There is absolutely no way in which the Negro people can fight for full citizenship in this country so long as they endorse and support an administration which plays one game in and with Dixie and plays another game in Pennsylvania, New York and the rest of the North. It was Wendell Willkie who said: "The Constitution does not provide for first- and second-class citizens. We must never forget that the essence of freedom is protection of minorities. I am totally against discrimination of any kind or in any form."

But of course that was Wendell Willkie. Honest men like Wendell Willkie are too rare and fine for this world and surely for this country; that is why we presume the Almighty called him home.

We hold that the basest type of political expediency was resorted to in the recent order permitting young Negro women to enlist in the WAVES and SPARS. White women have been permitted to enlist in those two services for over two years, but colored women have been subjected to the grossest types of insults when they presented themselves to enlist, despite the fact that our radios have resounded from morning till night telling of the many thousands of women needed for these services.

When the Selective Service law went into effect, provisions which gave Negroes hope were very clear. They left no chance for a misunderstanding. Section 4 (a) of the Selective Service Act reads: "In the selection and training of men under this Act, and in the interpretation and execution of the provisions of this Act, there shall be no discriminaton aganst any person on account of race or color."

Now this was the law which the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy was pledged to uphold and to execute without fear or favor. This law was no play thing. It had to do with men's patriotism; their feelings toward their country and way of life; their own lives. Later our country was attacked. The very nature of the attacking enemy made it necessary that we would need men—millions of men—both at home and abroad. The Negro people responded both on the home front and militarily (wherever they were taken in) with a fervor and with an enthusiasm comparable to any other group in this country.

But the Negro boys and girls who answered the call of duty were soon to meet with a very rude awakening. They found that instead of joining the United States Army, they were joining a revised edition of the Confederate army. The treatment accorded Negro soldiers in Southern camps while in the uniform of the United States Army, has been comparable to the brutal and inhuman treatment accorded the American Army on Corregidor and Bataan. Despite thousands of protests in the form of letters to the War Department, to the White House and to commanding officers in various areas, only just recently . . . since the conventions . . . has anything like an order gone out to correct the un-American practice of Army discrimination. 11-4-44

It certainly has been unfortunate for the Negro people in the United States of America that both World War I and World War II have been fought with the Democratic administration and its obvious willingness to cater to Southern domination of the army in power. We all remember that under Woodrow Wilson's administration, segregation in Government departments at Washington was born. The record will prove that the questionnaire sent out to all boys of draft age to register for the draft on June 5, 1917, carried this insulting instruction: "If of African descent, tear off the corner."

Our boys and girls in the service of this country . . . nearly a million of them . . . are fighting for a democracy that insofar as they are concerned is nothing but a sham. They are asked to fight and even die for the principles of justice and liberty while the same principles are denied them and their families. Surely it is asking a lot for a group to support an administration which has the power but refuses to correct this evil; this unceasing humiliation, this unspeakable barbarism, which is even now being visited upon our boys in the armed services. The President knows of these conditions. We have, on numerous occasions, called his attention to them through his white advisers.

The New Deal administration has treated prisoners of war . . . foreign enemies of our country . . . far better than it has treated Negro boys who are shedding their blood on the far-flung battle fields in defense of America's Constitutional guarantees. Poll-tax generals have carried their policy of Army segregation into every corner of the world where our troops are fighting. Natives in the islands of the Pacific have been taught to look with disdain on colored soldiers wearing the uniform of the United States Army.

The Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy . . . Mr. Roosevelt . . . has the extraordinary power to end segregation and discrimination in the armed forces over night. Evidently it has not been politically expedient to do so. Full blame for the mistreatment accorded the Negro men and women in the armed forces rests squarely at the door of the Commander-in-Chief. It was Theodore Roosevelt who said: "Any man who is good enough to offer his life in defense of his country is entitled to a square deal from that country. No man can ask for more; no man should receive less." 11-4-44

Scores of Negro soldiers have been brutally murdered in or near Dixie Army camps by Southern peace officers, by Southern bus drivers, by "Gestapo military policemen" and by white Southern Army officers. Hundreds of others have been mercilessly beaten and manhandled . . . all within the past three years . . . and not once has the Commander-in-Chief or any responsible member of the New Deal administration made a public statement about these illegal and dastardly acts. We publish at the beginning of this article a list of some of the Negro boys who have been MURDERED BY THEIR country, NOT KILLED IN ACTION FOR THEIR country. They have paid the supreme sacrifice on the altar of Dixie's prejudice; a prejudice which now seems to pervade the entire country. It is the New Deal's roll of shame.

There is a measure in Congress today which could have been rushed through months ago, giving full protection to United States soldiers by making it a criminal offense to wilfully harm a man wearing the uniform of this country. It seems strange that only a few days ago our Commander-in-Chief bitterly denounced a group of Italian patriots who lynched their Fascist slave masters under Hitler's Gestapo before they were brought to trial. It is easy to deplore such conduct in Italy and to attack the unthinkable treatment of Jews in Germany, but what about these American soldiers of the United States Army who have been killed under conditions for which the Commander-in-Chief must take full responsibility?

* * * 11-4-44

This is just a part of the record that Negro mothers and fathers, brothers and sisters, wives and sweethearts of men in the armed services cannot ignore in evaluating the candidates and their parties, in this critical national election. We are interested in a progressive foreign policy. But it looks like folly to maintain in office a man who is SO concerned with international issues that he conveniently ignores home-front issues which affect the very principles he advocates in the international field. There is no consistency in this program. The names of the boys appearing above are martyrs. They have been sacrificed on the altar of color prejudice in these United States. They are victims of a democracy that did not exist for them. They were taught the principles of liberty, freedom and equality, but they found out that they could be no part of it. 11-4-44

The only way to register a protest against the inhuman treatment and insults meted out to Negro boys and girls who are serving their country is at the ballot box. A straight Republican ticket is the strongest and most intelligent protest.

Racial Prejudice More Prominent In Some Areas

Informer — Houston, Tex. 5-13-44

(The Associated Negro Press is exclusively revealing for the first time sections of the report prepared by Walter White, executive secretary, NAACP, for the war department dealing with his visit to North Africa and Italy. These disclosures are being made in two parts, of which this is the first.)

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)— Walter White, executive secretary of the NAACP, returned to the states on April 15 from a 20,000 mile tour of two important theatres of operation on the other side of the Atlantic ocean.

Nine Page Report

Seven days later he layed before war department officials here a nine-page report plus four exhibits covering his observations in North Africa and the middle eastern theatres in which he declared that his "first and strongest impression was the difference in racial attitudes in active theatres of war as contracted with those in theatres of preparation for action." 5-13-44

In his conclusions White said in part: "Continuation of separation and discrimination is in part responsible for a less determined spir in the army than is necessary to mect the very crucial days which lie ahead before this war 's won," and added his "conviction that dark though the picture may seem at times, there is much ground for hope." 0 0

Not only did he concern himself with the matter of morale, utilization of troops, but also social patterns which are being transplanted by American officers and enlisted personnel, and the ways and means they are using to indoctrinate the English and the Italian peoples with their own type of thinking.

Petty Racial Prejudice Ignored

White, however, found, like others who have returned from fighting areas, that proximity to danger has been a great leveler. He reported: "As men approach actual combat and the dangers of death, the tendency becomes more manifest to ignore or to drop off jettiness such as racial prejudice. At the Anzio beachhead, for example, men eat, sleep, and associate together with apparent complete ignorance of race or color of their neighbors. Memories of dangers shared appear to leave a greater tolerance."

He learned though that "dangerous rumors" are beginning to be spread in England as compared to the situation in Italy regarding the combat ability of Negro soldiers. He attributed much of this to the heavy preponderance of service units in England whereas the presence and prowess of the 99th Pursuit squadron and the 332nd Fighter group have done much to dispel this erroneous thinking in Italy. 5-13-44

Regarding the conversion of the 2nd Calvary division to a service unit, White said he had been called upon to address several thousand of the officers and men. "I have never in my life faced so downcast an audience," he reported. "Because of the circumstances of my presence in the theatre, I did not discuss, after consulting with Col. Trudeau the details of the transfer which had just been made, but contented myself with saying that I was aware of the reasons for their unhappiness and would discuss it with the war department."

He brought back with him a leaflet which had been circulated in Naples purporting to be a Neapolitan street song to be sung to the tune of "The Cup of Coffee." According to the translation, it was titled "Italian Women Arm in Arm with American Negroes." 5-13-44

White recommended that G-2 (army intelligence) "or other appropriate agencies of the government, be instructed to ascertain who is responsible for the writing, printing and distribution of this and another anti-Negro publication which will be mentioned later.

The other instance mentioned by the NAACP official was the printing and posting in public places of Naples of a green placard with black lettering, approximately 24x36 inches, allegedly under the auspices of "The Italian American Committee for the Preservation of the Italian Race." American soldiers reportedly had posted the signs. Here is an excerpt from the placard, as offered in the White report:

"We Italian Americans, with deep pain must see that a certain feminine nucleus of Naples, having been dragged in the mire, dares to walk on the street with the Negro, and dares also to invite one home. . . . When will harsh reality enlighten you? When will your honor, your pride in being white and Italian incite you to justly scorn the Negro? . . . You cannot understand how you humiliate us: All Americans speak thus: Look, the Italian people are fond of Negroes."

Take Prompt Action

A third practice in Naples, White reported, was the supplying of manifestly forged orders to hotel proprietors forbidding them to admit Negroes. 5-13-44

Regarding such material White "strongly recommended that the war department instruct responsible subordinates to take more prompt and vigorous action against anti-Negro propaganda. This should be done," he added, "not only to prevent trouble, but because such propaganda increasingly disturbs the peoples of the countries where the racial pattern of states of the deep south is being transferred by some American officers and enlisted men, and brings into question the sincerity of the United States in the war itself.

"There is further reason that the brightest of all impressions I bring back to the United States with me is the considerable number of American white soldiers and officers who see the global implications of the race question, and who are eager to do something about it."

Jim Crow Signs at Camp Plauche

AFRO-American Balt., Md. 12-11-44

NEW ORLEANS—Despite the War Department order barring segregation in buses, post exchanges and post theatres, signs are still posted in special training schools here at Camp Plauche reading, "Colored Section" and "Colored Toilets."

Moreover, all of the post War Department theatres, as well as the bus system operated between this camp and New Orleans, have segregated setups.

Letters of Protest Sent

Letters of protest have gone out to the President, Mrs. Roosevelt and the Secretary of War.

The order of the War Department ending jim crow has not been posted prominently here and some of the personnel know nothing about it.

Rumors of an impending change were brought to an end this week when it was discovered that Col. John Rodgers of Trenton, N.J., had replaced Col. Frederick H. Huntington as camp commander.

Soldier Insists; Gets R.R. Seat

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

BLACKSTONE, Va.—How a soldier, who insisted on being seated on a crowded Norfolk and Western train en route here from Norfolk, forced the conductor to provide himself and others with seats in accordance with Virginia's jim-crow law was told here this week. 8-19-44

Leaving Norfolk, the train was composed of some twenty coaches, one and one-half coach being assigned to colored, although some fifty persons were standing on the ground trying to get into the car already jammed and packed with soldiers and civilians.

Asked to open the door to the other half of the coach, locked to prevent colored from entering it, the conductor refused, as did the porter, so when the porter unlocked the door to permit some passengers to pass through, the soldier and six of his buddies entered. 8-19-44

M.P.'s Refuse to Act

Ordered out of the coach twice by the conductor before reaching Suffolk, the soldiers kept their seats and were told they would be taken off the train at Suffolk the MP's having refused to move them on the conductor's orders. Officers also refused to molest the men at Suffolk.

Blocking the door with his body at Petersburg, the conductor called in a detective and an MP. After a conference with the detective, in which the soldier explained that the jim-crow law provides only for separation of the races, not where they shall be seated on the train, the detective took action. 8-19-44

The Petersburg city detective boarded the train and ordered the conductor to move the few white passengers from that coach to another, where there were plenty of seats, and had the standing colored passengers, who had refused to enter the car for fear of trouble, seated.

Army Blood Not Separated

WITH THE 280th STATION HOSPITAL IN FRANCE--Negro soldiers of the crack 483rd Port Battalion, holding all tonnage records in the giant port of Cherbourg, are giving blood as well as sweat in the drive of supply troops to meet the needs of troops at the front.

When Medical Corps authorities issued a special plea for blood donations in the port area, the tonnage champion unit produced more than double the number of volunteers that this hospital could process at one time.

"The need for blood, both whole blood and plasma, is being sharply felt in many places. The volunteer record of the Negro troops is especially heartening," said Major J. C. Dusard, Army Medical Corps, Bedford, Indiana.

There is no racial differentiation made in army blood collections.

VIEWS and Reviews

By GEORGE S. SCHUYLER

Courier, Pittsburgh

Pg. 9-9-44

(This column represents the personal opinion of Mr. Schuyler and in no way reflects the editorial opinion of The Pittsburgh Courier.—The Editors)

The white people's great fear of Negroes, which has marked interracial relations since the two peoples first began to associate on this continent continues without fundamental change. Contrary to the twaddle about Negro docility and satisfaction with a slavish status, the colored people from their earliest introduction to this country have kept white folks in terror. The first imported Africans came from highly organized states of West Africa which had been in existence in many cases much longer than any European countries of the time. In addition they were brave and warlike people who were not afraid to die. The Europeans were superior to them only in weapons. They were skilled in agriculture, arts, handicrafts and commerce, and large numbers were literate, a state which was unusual in the Europe of that day where most people could not read or write in any language.

No sooner were the Negroes brought to America than they began to poison, burn buildings, murder their masters, escape to the Indians and plot uprisings, many of which involved literally thousands of slaves. Even when these uprisings were put down with great bloodshed, the slaves often staged another insurrection in the same locality within a few months. Bands of black patriots armed with stolen pistols and muskets terrorized whole districts. Reliable historians have asserted that the whites, North and South, were fearful of the vengeance of these Negroes and scarcely a white person in the South but slept with a pistol under his pillow. The prospect of Negro uprisings made the South an armed camp, with every white man subject to call to defend the "sacred institution," and each community having a strong guardhouse for the assembly of militia. There was much greater fear of Negroes than of Indians, although I have heard even Negroes say that the Indians fought for their freedom while the Negroes did not.

It was this fear of servile rebellion that was behind the effort to send free Negroes to Africa and led to the founding of Liberia. Since those days every effort has been made to curtail the bearing of arms by Negroes and especially to prevent the commissioning of Negro officers to lead the few combatant black troops that were permitted. Lincoln hesitated to enroll Negro troops until imminent defeat of the Union forces and shortage of manpower necessitated it. He was fearful of emancipation and the granting of citizenship rights to Negroes, and said so. Indeed, Jeff Davis was probably as much a friend of Negroes as Lincoln. Lincoln's attitude has been that of the U.S. Government ever since, and explains the difficulty of Negroes getting a square deal in the armed services, and the reason why less than 50,000 of the 700,000 Negroes in the present army are combatant troops. It also explains the conspiracy against Negro officers.

General Dwight Eisenhower in decreeing that vacancies in the 92nd Division in and above the rank of captain shall be filled by white officers is following the traditional American policy. All Negro units, especially combatant units, must be commanded by white officers, no matter how deserving any Negro officers may be. The American officer caste (which will be multiplied by post-war conscription) has this as a cardinal policy. It handicapped and smeared Negro officers in the last war, and continues to do so.

American white people in positions of leadership have a bad conscience. They privately feel that they have treated Negroes so badly that they cannot entrust them with arms and under the leadership of their own people.

This corroding fear is behind our whole military and naval policy. It explains the transfer of highly trained Negro combat officers to Quartermaster units. It explains the promotion of incompetent white officers over competent Negro officers. It explains the transfer of Negro combat troops to labor work. And it explains, too, the opposition of the Administration to the formation of mixed units. In the old days there were always some whites who made common cause with Negro insurgents, and there is fear that if colored and white men served together in the same units, they would get too friendly and might make common cause against an oppressive ruling class.

When we know the historical background, it is easy to understand why General Eisenhower issued his order. Naturally our "friend" President Roosevelt is not going to counteract that order, election or no election. There are some things that white people in authority simply will not do no matter how much they profess to love us. The old fear and prejudice is still in their hearts.

Thurgood Marshall Says Evidence Insufficient Against 50 Now on Trial

N.A.A.C.P. Investigator Finds Men Did Not Refuse to Obey a Direct Order But Are Victims of Race Prejudice

YERBA BUENNA ISLAND, Cal. — After listening to three days of testimony from the 50 Negro seamen charged with mutiny, Thurgood Marshall, special N.A.A.C.P. counsel declared "These men are being tried for mutiny solely because of their race or color."

The men are charged with mutiny for refusal to load ammunition at the Mare Island depot on August 9.

Following an urgent telephone call from Joseph James, president of the local N.A.A.C.P. branch, asking that national office assistance be given the defendants immediately, Marshall flew to San Francisco, where he has been reviewing testimony and interviewing the men. In his report of the proceedings thus far he charged:

"The last of the defendants was on the stand today and the defense might close its case tomorrow. The Port Chicago explosion was on July 17 and many of the accused were in Port Chicago at that time. Many of them were hurt.

Some Fell Out, Others Stayed

On August 9 they were transferred to another Island and told to fall in for work, meaning loading ammunition. They did not. Their officers, including the Admiral talked to them. Then their officer asked them the following: 'All of you who are willing to obey all lawful orders stand fast. All who are not fall out and give your names to the officers.'

"Some stood fast and others fell out. Those who fell out were arrested. There were 257 altogether, but it ends up that only 50 are charged with mutiny.

"The men take the position that the above statement by the officer was not considered by them to be an order and what they meant by their actions was that they did not want to load ammunition. They did not mean to disobey an order.

Reason To Be Afraid

"A typical example of their testimony is that of Seaman Bordenave who is just 17. He had enlisted when he was 16; was released when they discovered his age and re-enlisted as soon as he was 17.

"He had only been handling ammunition a week and was a 'hatch tender' which meant that he was the one who directed the operator of the winch as to how to lower the ammunition into the hole... No wonder they were all afraid to load ammunition.

How Jim Crow Operates in the United States Army

AFRO-American

Two Colonels to a Regiment; Lieutenant Outranks Captain; Five Adjutants to One Unit

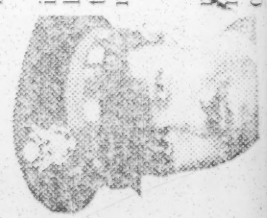
By GRANT REYNOLDS

Former Chaplain, U.S. Army

By an Act of Congress, an American receiving a commission in our military and Naval services becomes an officer and a gentleman. The ninety-fifth and ninety-sixth Articles of War, which govern his conduct, substantiate the assertion.

While I am in full agreement with this somewhat dubious statement, I am unalterably convinced that Congress cannot make a gentleman—white or black. The facts bear this out.

In the case of making officers, it has too often taken the equivalent of an act of God to confer this honor upon colored men.



Lowell Fight for [illegible]

No group of America's fighting men has faced quite the same [illegible] hominious treatment as the colored soldier. He has been [illegible] up in every way, with the [illegible] stacked against him.

Repeatedly ignored, more or less merely tolerated, frequently humiliated, the colored officer has run the gamut of everything insulting and debasing that American ingenuity could offer. Yet there has never rested upon any group greater responsibilities.

The War Department's reluctance to commission colored men in the first place, added to the strong convictions of many military brass hats that "it is inconceivable that a ——— should become officers," has made it impossible for the colored officers to once attached there were two promotions and the rank of major although the T.O. opportunities to qualify for them in this case, too, called for but given unassigned status, segregated one.

were sent from Michigan to the State of Washington, only to be told that there was no place for them to serve out there because they were colored.

The officers sat around, embarrassed and ashamed of their nation, while the military authorities frantically sought to transfer them to some post where there were colored troops. 11-4-44

Jim Crow at Huachuca

At Ft. Huachuca, Ariz., colored officers of an Infantry Regiment of the 92nd Division who worked with white officers throughout the training hours were jim-crowed in the regimental mess hall.

It is to the credit of these men that they refused to eat under the circumstances. They withdrew in a body and ate their meals elsewhere at great personal expense.

Incidentally, the colored chaplain in this case was severely reprimanded by the division chaplain (a colored officer referred to by the enlisted men as a "long coat") for sympathizing with the colored officers.

The officer who thus showed his manhood by resenting such an insult was soon relieved of his assignment and shipped off to the South Pacific.

Disciplinary School 11-4-44

At the same post, scores of colored officers assigned to the 92nd petty offenses. There never was a white officer so disciplined.

The commanding general of the division organized a disciplinary school for so-called "inefficient officers" to which only colored officers were sent.

The white officers in this division equalled, if not outnumbered, the colored officers. I suffered the personal embarrassment at this post of having been made subordinate to a white first lieutenant while I held the rank of captain.

5 Adjutants in One Unit

At Tuskegee, home of the famous 99th Pursuit Squadron, there are so many colored officers that as many as five are assigned to one squadron as adjutant.

The reason for this overstrength is the insistence upon War Depart policy of sending colored airmen to Tuskegee alone.

A similar unjustifiable arrangement obtained at Ft. Huachuca's Medical Officers' Replacement Pool. Here the Army assigned all newly commissioned medical officers of color when no immediate position with troops could be found for them. 11-4-44

Many of these men went to Huachuca from the Army Medical Training School at Carlisle Barracks, Pa. There they would be given temporary assignments in the jim-crow hospital until it could be decided what to do with

Money Wasted

Permanent assignments were often found for these men within a few hundred miles of Carlisle. But the Army would have to bring them back from Ft. Huachuca to such an assignment, a round-trip distance of more than 4,000 miles. 11-4-44

When it is understood that Army officers receive 8 cents per mile for traveling expenses, in addition to their pay, some idea is gained about the great expense involved in maintaining Army segregation.

The story of the colored officer and enlisted man in this war is one so sordid and pregnant with insult as to outrage the sensibilities of any decent American.

U.S. Philosophy a Mystery

Officers have written me, accounts of being refused food at railroad junctions while white prisoners of war were being fed.

How this nation can, in time of war, thus destroy the manhood of its fighting men, and then expect them to pay gladly with their lives for its protection, is one of the mysteries of this age.

But what else can be expected when the nation's military leadership is largely in the hands of Southerners who are totally void of human understanding?

Vet a Changed Man

America might just as well understand, however, that the returning colored veteran will be quite different from the sheltered boy who left home to join the Army. 11-4-44

These men, many of whom will have faced death from enemy fire and from dreaded jungle diseases, cannot, and should not, be expected to assume their former role of subservience to prejudiced white men. Nor will they accept with grace the role of America's forgotten men.

If, in their pursuit here at home of blessings for which they were ordered to die abroad, our soldiers precipitate bloody conflicts, the conscience of humanity must act ast their judge.

Basis Laid for Outbreaks

Mr. Roosevelt and the Southern mob which surrounds him have laid the basis for the most bloody outbreaks of violence after victory that this country has ever seen. 11-4-44

Unless this mob is repudiated at the polls in November, the blood of colored veterans will one day water the streets of American cities. A vote for Roosevelt is a knife stuck into the back of a colored service man.

Careers in Sewing Trade Two Blind Women Start New

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.
10-14-44

By RICHARD DIER

NEW YORK—When two women, both of whom are practically blind, started working on sewing machines at the Simon Manufacturing Company, Inc., 106 Seventh Avenue, on September 6, they attempted an experiment which is unique in the needle-trades industry.

Never before had industrially blind people been allowed to work side by side with their more fortunate co-workers. Previously, the only sewing machine operation done by the blind was in secluded places where efficiency and speed were no requisites.

Now, after several weeks of Miss Nora Gill, 40, of 179 Jefferson, 39, of 529 Herkimer son Avenue, and Mrs. Olga Rob- Street, both of Brooklyn, are breaking in, these two women, slowly mastering the intricacies of the trade. 10-14-44

In an exclusive interview with the AFRO, Al Simon, an owner of the company, stated that the experiment had proved a success.

"Do you know that twelve other companies refused to hire these women before we took them on?" he said.

"First, you've got to realize that even though they received five weeks of training under the Board of Education's War Industries Training Program, they are still beginners in the needles-trades industry.

Do Simple Operations

"Besides, they have to depend on their fingers to get the feel of things. They're still doing simple operations but are learning the more intricate things slowly. They should be able, in time, to reach the level of our other employees."

Mr. Simon explained that Miss Gill and Mrs. Robinson worked alone on another floor in the building during the first week of their employment, but he soon put them to work with all the rest.

"It's much better for them," he said, "and it won't make them feel as if they're isolated just because they can't see."

Fifty per cent of the working force is colored, he said.

The army and navy put more pressure on the company to turn out goods as fast as possible. Manufactured equipment includes sleeping-bag cases, mattress covers, mosquito bar nets, and insect nets. 10-14-44

Wages Based on Progress

As for wages, he continued, the blind women receive prevailing wage rates, based upon the progress they make.

Asked whether the company would be willing to hire more industrially blind people in view of the success of this experiment, he replied:

"Not just yet, because people like Miss Gill and Mrs. Robinson can only do very simple work in the beginning and I can't have lots of people doing elementary work when we have so much more complicated sewing operations. After a while, we may be able to take on another two women, but not right now.

"We're satisfied with the blind women's work and we think they're very happy to be occupied and earning a living."

Miss Gill, who has had cataracts for twelve years, told the AFRO that she used to do sewing work on aprons many years ago. She said she liked the work very much and was happy that she was doing something for the war effort.

Former Housewife

Mrs. Robinson, a victim of glaucoma for five years, explained that she never did sewing before. She was a housewife, and when she became blind, she decided that she couldn't just sit at home and do nothing; so she took the sewing course at the Board of Education and is now glad that she is engaged in worthwhile work.

At this point, Mr. Simon came over and laughingly told the women that they were going to get publicity. Mrs. Robinson said that it suited her fine. Then he instructed a girl to bring over more work for them, which they accepted with their eager and nimble fingers.

FEPC had 2,176 cases pending Oct. 1

Pittsburg — Los Angeles
11-13-44 Calif.

The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice docketed 283 new cases involving charges of employment discrimination because of race, creed or national origin during the month of September and closed 251 cases, Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, announced this week.

Operational statistics for the month, Mr. Ross said, showed that satisfactory adjustment of complaint, in proportion to the total number of cases closed, increased from 33.4 per cent in August to 35.5 per cent in September.

The number of cases closed for lack of jurisdiction rose from 10 in August to 22 in September. Of the 283 new cases, or 85 per cent, alleging discrimination contrary to Executive Orders because of race, a slight decrease from the 89.3 per cent for the preceding month.

Cases charging discrimination on account of creed increased from 14 in August to 22 in September, and allegations of discrimination because of national origin rose from 8 in August to 21 during September. 11-13-44

Alleged discrimination in hiring, dismissal, or refusal to upgrade accounted for 201 of the 283 new cases. Those charging unwarranted dismissal—which are expected to reflect the influence of layoffs and cutbacks on the Committee's work—showed no noticeable increase, however.

As of Oct. the Committee had 2,176 cases pending, an increase of 41 over the total for Sept. 1.

Post Office Bars FEP Stickers In All Mails

Chicago Defender 11-25-44

By JOHN R. ROUSSEAU

NEW ORLEANS. — The United States Post Office Department regards the permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee as being "of controversial nature" and issued instructions to postmasters not to accept letters bearing which bear stickers which support for a permanent FEPC. The department ruling was made on November 27 after a resident of this city had inquired from local officials whether or not letters bearing the stickers being distributed by local FEPC movement would be accepted for side of mail matter, the stickers city, who, in turn, forwarded

On Thursday and Friday at least two Negro business concerns which had purchased blocks of FEPC stickers and had affixed said stickers to first-class mail matters, received the following communication from the local postoffice:

"The postmaster returned the above letter mailed by you, to which was affixed a sticker bearing the words 'FEPC' endorsement.

"In this connection, the Department, Washington, D. C., ruled that postmasters should not be accepted for mailing. Receipt is acknowledged by the letter of November 27th: your letter of November 11 (df:tf), regarding the use of stickers like the specimen submitted on the letter to the postmaster

The letter was signed by Ralph Handlin, acting postmaster here.

On Thursday, a copy of the above letter was received by the Washington R. Butler, proprietor of a hosiery store at 324 South Rampart street; and on Friday a similar letter was received by the Standard Life Insurance company, 1560 North Claiborne avenue.

Evidence that postmasters out- side of New Orleans have been notified when a letter bearing stickers like those mailed by Mr. Butler to Miss Muriel Rahn, 359 Auburn avenue, Atlanta, Ga., was stamped asking the initials used in the letter to Miss Rahn on the cover of that letter to the postmaster of New Orleans.

Thousands of the FEPC stickers which bear the likeness of a Negro workman have been sold in New Orleans.

Mr. Alex Mollay, 2134 Annette street, a retired letter-carrier, is said to have sought a ruling from local postal authorities in order to settle a discussion in which he was engaged with members of a downtown club which had purchased a lot for a ruling.

The letters involved have been identified as those of officials in the New Orleans post office who wrote to the department in Washington

Britain Has Secret Jim Crow Orders; Result Of Protests

Great Britain's Enforcement Officers Given 'Super Order,' Reports NAACP's Walter White

WASHINGTON--One of the things Walter White, executive secretary of the NAACP who recently returned from a 15-week tour of war fronts, discussed with War Department officials, last week, the NNPA has learned, was a super-secret order handed down to the law enforcement officers in Great Britain to the effect that British women in uniform are to be discouraged from appearing in public with American Negro soldiers.

When the soldiers first arrived in Britain, an order to the effect that there was to be no color line was put into effect. After protests from American whites, however, the British succumbed and issued an order prefaced with the words "in the interest of harmony, therefore, it is suggested--", etc.

The order is tempered with a suggestion that it is all right to entertain colored soldiers in British homes where "difficult situations can be met more easily."

Mr. White is reported also to have called the War Department's attention to the fact that in U. S. occupied towns particularly in Italy, anti-Negro pamphlets have been distributed. He is said to have asked that Army intelligence investigate the matter because of the belief in some quarters that the pamphlets are not the work of the Axis, but of some prejudiced American Army officers.

The report of Mr. White, on the whole had an optimistic note and is said to have been well received at the War Department.

WHITE OFFICERS ONLY FOR REPLACEMENTS IN FAMOUS DIVISION

Pittsburgh Courier — Pa.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONT—Belatedly but surely, the typical American pattern of discrimination and jim crow has invaded the Italian front lines, bringing to an all-time low the morale of the men and officers of the 92nd Division combat team fighting here. Although democratic conditions prevailed during the early days of the combat team's service at the front, radical changes following the arrival of Major Gen. Edward Almond, division commander from Fort Huachuca, and a long time resident of Virginia, have instituted a completely discriminatory method of officer replacement.

According to Milton Bracken, writing for the New York Times, clared there is race problem within his army, has the complete respect and admiration of the men. According to one correspondent, he is apparently not aware of the new situation that has developed. This correspondent terms the new replacement policy as one which "kills the chances of promotion for colored officers," and which introduces "incompetent white officers into the outfit, constituting sabotage behind the lines of the 92nd division."

Colored Officers Being Transferred.

Pittsburgh Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.

According to reliable information received by The Pittsburgh Courier, the following Negro officers of the 92nd Division combat team, fighting Nazis and Nazism in Italy, have been moved from the units with which they have trained and transferred to rifle companies to make way for white replacements whom, according to their commanding general, Edward Almond, they are not permitted to out-rank:

LIEUTENANT LEE, transferred from an anti-tank platoon to a rifle company to make way for a white replacement;

LIEUTENANT MADISON, transferred from S-2 duties to a rifle company to make way for a white replacement;

LIEUTENANT MITCHELL, transferred from an anti-tank platoon to a rifle company to make way for a white replacement;

LIEUTENANT GARNET, motor officer, transferred to a rifle company to make way for a white replacement;

LIEUTENANT BOWEN, battalion liaison officer, transferred to a rifle company to make way for a white replacement;

LIEUTENANT KIDD, transferred from a heavy weapon company to a rifle company to make way for a white replacement.

General Almond is quoted as saying that he could not foresee the time when his outfit will include colored junior officers outranking white junior officers. Accordingly, although the combat team includes many Negro company commanders, captains and lieutenants, none ranks white junior officers. Moreover all current officer replacements are white. In the policy of replacement of colored by white officers, the colored men are taken from the units with which they have trained and sent into front-line rifle companies.

DISCRIMINATION IN THE REAR

Bracken reports also that in the rear areas, certain considerations have arisen out of the race question. Negro GI's are not permitted to carry knives of any sort except the regular issue bayonet. Negro and white MP's go on patrol together on the basic principle that the white man handles white offenders and the Negro handles Negroes. Negro MP's are all more than six feet tall. They do not carry pistols like the whites, but use a short club.

There is no official segregation in forward or rear areas at messes, latrines or in sleeping accommodations, Brackens reports, but on the night when he messed at the divisional headquarters, Negro officers went to one table.

Bracken quotes Almond as saying: "I don't try to choose an officer's friends for him," and that he is administering his outfit on "military rather than racial lines." His overall principle of race relations, again according to Bracken, is that the development of the division is a military, not a sociological problem.

In the meanwhile, the commanding general reports that the development and progress of the division has been normal and satisfactory. The men, reportedly, resent special attention to their activities because of their color, yet are anxious to make a good record because of their race pride. Negro officers, according to General Almond, are stressing that race is secondary to patriotism.

Aware of the historical nature of their mission as the first Negro combat team to meet the Germans, the fighting vanguard of the 92nd have been in the front line for more than two months and have successfully kept pace with the advance of more experienced divisions in some of the more fiery sectors around Bologna. The unit has had its losses and its heroes as well. One of the men is up for a citation for having killed 13 Germans with a damaged carbine.

General Mark Clark, commander of the Fifth Army, who has de-

From Jim Crow to Jim Crow

It is very saddening to note that Negro soldiers, who have been serving at the various war fronts, fighting for democracy in segregated units, are to be given relief from battle strain by furloughs in the States, quartered in Jim Crow hotels.

To carry out this Jim-Crow policy, these black heroes are to be sent to live at the Parkway Hotel in Chicago and the Hotel Theresa in New York, both in strictly Negro districts.

White soldiers, on the other hand, are being sent to swank hotels at various resorts where the best facilities available will be theirs for the asking.

It is said that the army would have adopted an impartial policy if a Negro officer had not taken it upon himself to call attention of the military authorities that quartering these furloughed Negroes with white soldiers might cause "complications."

The military authorities promptly agreed with him, so now Jim Crowism is to be the rule in this instance as elsewhere throughout the war effort.

One wonders what a battle-worn Negro veteran of the great war for freedom and democracy will think when he finds himself sent to a second-rate hotel in the black ghetto while white soldiers who have taken no greater risks are put up at palatial hostelries.

This is a shameful commentary on American so-called democracy, and the enlightened citizens of Harlem who protested to the War Department against this discrimination last week are to be congratulated.

We hope other Negroes will send similar protests against this vicious policy, which smacks of that toward the Gold Star Mothers under the Hoover administration, when White Mothers were sent to see the graves of their sons on luxury liners while Negro mothers journeyed on freight-passenger boats.

Little Dixie Is Nasty to Our Men in Uniform

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.

4-15-44 By STAFF CORRESPONDENT

There is no more important place of interest to colored Americans today than the few thousand miles of swamps called the "Louisiana Maneuver Area."

Here thousands of colored soldiers are taking their final phase of training, before entering actual combat. Events that occur daily put a bitter taste in the mouths of these men who are expected to go overseas to fight for "life, liberty and pursuit of happiness."

Other Camps Nearby

A whole infantry division, and a large number of trucking and service units are here. Each day, even before they can finish this special training, the men are sent to the "Port of Embarkation" to be shipped overseas.

In addition to the maneuver soldiers, there are several camps located near here that have large colored units.

Although the towns and many of the rural communities are highly taxed, little effort is made to make conditions pleasant or liveable for colored soldiers.

In Alexandria, Leesville and De-Ridder, white merchants close their doors when colored soldiers seek to buy. Perhaps the broader of the three is Alexandria, and it is practically white—so far as recreational and living facilities are concerned. 4-15-44

One USO

There is one USO when three would be too few. Drug store clerks pass by soldiers many times before they serve them. White cafes won't wait on them, even through the back door. These soldiers are even segregated in jail.

In Leesville, the whole colored section is off-limits to our soldiers. They dare not enter the white section. Camp Polk, which is located about six miles from here, has colored soldiers in a segregated area.

There they have a colored theater which shows pictures after they have run the white shows on the base.

An army hospital at this camp jim-crows colored patients—the prison does not. 4-15-44

Another strange paradox about Camp Polk is the prisoner of war camp, where German prisoners, under smiling armed guard, have the run of the base. Our boys are restricted to the colored section.

Soldiers told me that white persons in this vicinity never miss an opportunity to impress upon them the fact that this is a "white-man's" country.

Assert Racial Prejudice Swayed Verdict Against 2 Alleged Rapists

By GEORGE PADMORE
(Defender London Correspondent)

LONDON—(Special)—The case of two Negro soldiers sentenced to death by a U. S. court martial continues to occupy prominent discussion in the English press. The editor of the Gloucestershire Echo received a number of letters from prominent citizens living in the West country military area where the court martial occurred protesting against the death penalty. 5-20-44

Although army spokesmen repeatedly deny racial discrimination, a delegation of British writers headed by the well known English author and journalist, Reginald Reynolds, and the famous woman novelist, Ethel Mannin, will interview Eisenhower and Ambassador Winant seeking commutation of the sentence.

In each letter a point was made that the sentence suggests racial discrimination—that white Americans would not have been so severely punished.

This view, however, has been denied by U. S. army authorities. U. S. army spokesmen, asked to comment on Britishers' complaints, said the case was one of several in which American soldiers had been sentenced to death. Spokesman explained that a specific article of war provides this penalty for rape and that it is the army's duty to enforce military law regardless of individuals color or creed.

Both white and colored spokesmen added that there had been similar sentences to death in the United Kingdom and that the case would automatically be heard by a reviewing board and would be judged entirely on its merits.

War Workers Protest

A few sample letters printed in the Gloucestershire Echo showing the feelings among Britishers were printed under the headline, "Revolted by Unjustness." The first letter, signed by 30 Englishmen, read as follows, "Will you please allow the undersigned war workers at a local factory to make an appeal for the lives of two colored American soldiers sentenced to death for rape of a Bishops Cleeve girl. We agree that rape is a serious crime but we feel that if these men die it will be because they are colored.

"In England we have learned the meaning of equality and freedom and we are revolted by the unjustness of American laws concerning Negroes. In our opinion birching and prison with hard labor would be more fitting a sentence for all who commit this crime whether they are black or white." 5-20-44

Another letter signed by trade union shop stewards committee in behalf of factory workers said: "Our committee would appreciate space in your paper with regards to the death sentence for forcible rape of a girl working in this factory. Shop stewards in all departments in the factory have been approached by working people with requests to take some action to obtain commutation of the death sentence to imprisonment. In our factory and village there is a very strang feeling against such a severe sentence in the case of these men. It is almost a unanimous opinion that this severe sentence, when compared with sentences of imprisonment passed on white American soldiers for such offenses suggests a racial discrimination that will be deplored by all peoples fighting against this very thing in the war against fascism and racial persecution.

"In view of the subscription of all the United Nations to the principles of the Atlantic Charter and principles of complete freedom for all nationalities and color, we sincerely hope the sentence of these men will be commuted to a similar sentence to that given white men for a like offense." 5-20-44

Women Ask Clemency

A third appeal signed by 18 women says, "We know that this is a serious offense but surely there are other ways in which they can pay for their crime without paying with their lives. We feel had these men been white such a sentence would never have been passed. These men came to fight for us and if they can fight and risk their lives let us treat them as equals."

Says Army Ignores List Of Nurses

Journal & Guide Norfolk, Va. 6-24-44

NEW YORK—(ANP)—While the ban on Negro nurse recruitment was lifted here in November, and even though nurses are greatly needed in the North Atlantic and Pacific areas as well as here on the home front, the supply at hand of Negro nurses has hardly been touched, comes a recent report. The more than 800 Negro registered nurses here are completely ignored by the War Department.

In a protest against such Army bias, Mrs. Mabel K. Staupers, executive secretary of the National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses, said she thought the Army would have far less trouble recruiting nurses if it opened its ranks more liberally to Negroes.

"In the entire Army Nurse Corps, there are only 219 Negro women," she explained. "All of them are tan and located in the south with the exceptions of one group

The U. S. Is the Only Place Where the Ability of the Negro Soldier Is Questioned

By J. A. ROGERS

SECRETARY STIMSON'S excuse to Hamilton Fish for keeping Negro soldiers largely labor battalions has been completely answered by others; still, I feel that a few more words might be added. First, the trouble began when the Army decided to have jim-crow regiments in order to appease the exploiters of Negro labor in the South, thereby preventing the natural, commonsense course of selecting the most capable men, regardless of color, for those posts calling for technical skill.

Mr. Rogers

I do not think that even the most rabid professional Southerner will deny that there are numbers of white men incapable of doing the work that Secretary Stimson alleges that Negroes, as a group, are poor at doing. In fact, the number of white men in the Army who would be fit only for labor battalions, certainly exceeds the total number of Negro draftees, competent and incompetent. Why have we not heard anything from Secretary Stimson on these mentally unequipped white men? The reason is that white men, able and unable, are lumped together. In the present set-up the incompetent white soldier belongs to the same caste as the ablest white general; while the ablest Negro belongs to that of the Negro farthest down. America is actually fighting her war along color lines, yet, should anyone dare to say that this is a "race" war, he'd immediately be branded as a traitor.

COMPARISON OF TWO WAR RECORDS

There is little doubt that the percentage of Negroes capable of filling high positions in the Army is lower than whites able to do the same because the whites have had better educational opportunities. The report of the Bureau of the Census, June 20, 1942, says on the educational level of men of military age, "Educational attainment, the study indicated, was highest among whites and lowest among Negroes . . . Very great gains in education in the last two decades, however, have taken place in the Negro group. Among Negro men aged 35 to 44 (most of whom had finished their education 20 years ago) only 13 per cent had received one year or more of high school education while among Negro men aged 21 to 24, 26.2 per cent had attended high school. Data on the educational level of Negro selectees in the present war when compared with similar data from the last war also show a great increase. Sixty-three per cent of the Northern Negro selectees and 33 per cent of the Southern Negro selectees have attended high school as compared with 14 per cent of the Northern Negro draftees and three per cent of the Southern draftees in the last war."

IN World War I the whites had only 16 per cent of selectees who had any high school training and 79 per cent of grade school and no schooling. That is, the whites then were four times lower in high school training than Northern Negroes are now and twice lower than the Southern Negro now. Yet although the Negroes have advanced greatly against odds that no one with a white epidermis is called on to face, the utterly unjustified talk about their alleged inferiority remains the same. In fact, it is worse because Secretary Newton Baker did at times speak warmly in favor of Negro citizens.

NO CHANCE FOR COMBAT RECORD

Had Secretary Stimson said that the percentage of whites capable of filling technical positions in the Army is higher than that of Negroes, I, for one, should have agreed with him. But had he said that, he would still have to explain why capable Negroes are kept in labor battalions.

THE only place in the world I know of where the ability of the Negro soldier is questioned is the United States, and that only when some new war is on. From the days of ancient Egypt until now the Negro soldier has won renown. I can name scores of great military leaders who were Negroes in Europe, Asia, Africa and South and Central America. In the United States not a single one. As soon as a Negro graduates from West Point, he is promptly shunted off to some Negro college to train students. What military experience can one get from that? In the Navy, he is, or has been only a messman. What chances of being a trained Naval commander from that?

RACE NONSENSE GOES ON FOREVER

The fight against the Negro soldier in the United States has a history all its own. George Washington, to placate the slave masters, issued an order that no Negroes be inducted into the Army. Later, he was glad to use them. Abraham Lincoln, hoping to anger the Southless, opposed the use of Negro troops for two years. Later, he too, used them and had to admit that without them the North would have lost. The last war I heard these same old arguments, only to hear again at its end the same high praise of the Negro soldiers. Now comes Secretary Stimson to turn the same old racial wheel in an evident attempt to placate Southern politicians like Eastland and the members of the South Carolina Legislature who declare that this war is being fought to maintain white supremacy and are working to make it that.

MEN may come and men may go, but this race nonsense, like Tennyson's brook, "goes on forever." It matters not a whit that after each war since 1776, the Negro soldier has won high praise. Each new war brings back the old talk of inferiority.

Ask War Dep't. Probe On Soldier Sentences

Amsterdam News — New York, N.Y. 10-28-44

COLUMBIA, S. C. (ANP)—The adjutant general of the War Department has been asked to investigate the imprisoning of 11 Negro soldiers on the Aiken county chain-gang, it was disclosed Tuesday. Jams M. Minton, state president of the South Carolina Conference NAACP and secretary to the Negro Citizens's committee, said both organizations had made the request. The Rev. E. A. Adams signed a letter as president of the Citizens' committee. Copies of both letters were forwarded to the sheriff of Aiken county.

"The Negro Citizens' Committee of South Carolina and the State NAACP Conference are asking the War Department to make a complete investigation of the events leading to the arrest, trial and conviction of 11 Negro soldiers at Aiken," the letter read.

"If the facts substantiate the reports we have received, it appears that a grave injustice has been visited upon Negro soldiers in uniform.

"Our two organizations are astonished that such things can happen to Negroes in uniform in South Carolina, and nothing is done about it. 10-28-44

"We respectfully request a thorough investigation of the alleged mistreatment of our soldiers. We are sure that county officers overstepped authority in this case."

White Finds "No Colored" Signs in Naples Area

Afro American — Baltimore, Md. 6-13-44

WASHINGTON (ANP) — "No Colored" signs in a Naples hotel, first reported by the AFRO, January 15, were discovered again by Walter White in his recent trip abroad.

Following AFRO publication, the War Department declared it could locate no such signs, hotels, or Col. James E. Manley, who signed them.

Mr. White said he discovered in Naples manifestly forged orders to hotel proprietors, forbidding them to admit colored guests.

He submitted to the War Department an exhibti of such an order which indicated hours when personnel might visit a certain hotel, rates charged and the remark, "No Colored" are allowed. The "order" was signed by an American Army colonel.

Hits Copy of Song

Mr. White also brought back from Naples a leaflet containing a Neapolitan street song entitled "Italian Women Arm in Arm with American Negroes." It was rumored, he said, that an American army colonel supplied the copy and paid for the printing of this leaflet. 5-13-44

He recommended that G-2 (Army Intelligence) be instructed to ascertain who is responsible for the writing, printing and distribution of this anti-colored publication.

Sign Condemns Women

The War Department was also told of large signs posted in public places in Naple condemning Neapolitan women for being friendly with colored American soldiers and inviting them to their homes.

"When will your honor, your pride in being white and Italian incite you justly to scorn colored men?" the placard says. "You cannot understand how you humilate us (Italian-Americans). All Americans speak thus: 'Look, the Italian people are fond of colored people.'" 5-13-44

These placards were allegedly distributed under the auspices of the Italian-American Committee for the Preservation of the Italian Race, and posted by American soldiers.

FLA. CAMP IGNORES ANTI-J. C. ORDER

Afro American — Baltimore, Md. 5-13-44

CAMP GORDON JOHNSTON, Fla.—The War Department order banning racial segregation in government-controlled buses, service clubs, post exchanges and theatres has not been put into effect here.

Although a service club has been improvised in the 3rd Area for colored soldiers, it is not at all like the one for whites, and its opening somehow is being delayed.

Colored officers still are excluded from the officers' mess and clubs. A small beer garden for colored troops was installed beside the PX and only the intervention of colored MP's prevented white soldiers from taking it over.

Sabotaging Democracy

Journal & Guide — Norfolk, Va. 5-20-44

From Los Angeles Sentinel

News reel concerns which had trips broad stand convicted of eliminating all shots of Negro troops who were greeted or reviewed by the President.

Those shots will be assembled and shown, we understand, in a special reel to be made for Negro theatres.

It is hard to conceive of a more deliberate sabotage of the spirit of democracy than that.

It isn't hard to fathom the reasons for this deliberate underplaying of the Negroes' part in the war: it springs from the widely held belief that Negroes and whites must be kept separate and apart. The same spirit is behind residential restrictive covenants, anti-miscegenation laws, and the whole kit and caboodle of segregation measures which are imposed by law or custom throughout the nation. 5-20-44

What is hard to understand is the implicit government sanction of this kind of monkey business. Americans, of all races and colors, need to drop their notions of racism both for the sake of unity in prosecution of the war and for the sake of America's prestige in the world at large.

Our Soldiers Resent Being Called "Boys in Kitchen"

OAKLAND, Calif.---"How can we feel justified in prosecuting a war against the fascists and Nazis and other countries when we permit many of the same kind of individuals to hold vital government positions throughout the U.S. and even in our armed services?"

Thus spoke a member of the 451th AAF Base Unit Aviation Squadron, Oakland Detachment, in discussing a letter written to one of the men commending them for their services, in which he referred to the colored soldiers as "boys in the kitchen."

The letter, reportedly written by Col. C. C. Bondley, Jr., air corps ferry command commander, was quoted as having said: "You are doing excellent work in our kitchen" and "We have not forgotten you boys in the kitchen."

The [illegible] resented bitterly by many of the men, the most, some of whom are college graduates, already irked by their assignments to jobs as menials in spite of their educational qualifications.

The men, who report that morale is at the lowest ebb, say they have been stationed here more than five months, have had military training, but point out that most of their superiors get in "a lot of mop and broom work," serving as janitors and on other dirty details."

Those who work in the canteen wash dishes, mop floors and [illegible] guns after civilian use, one man pointed out, adding: "Soldiers of the U.S. Army should not be forced to work under these demoralizing conditions."

RESTRICTED PAMPHLETS

The War Department has issued a restricted pamphlet on colored troops. Under regulations, information contained in it cannot be given to the press.

However, there is nothing in the pamphlet, so far as we have heard, which changes the War Department's policy of dividing colored and white troops into separate units.

The army chiefs apparently base this policy on what Thomas Carlyle once called "the show of hands." That is, it defends jim crow by declaring it is what the people want as disclosed through public opinion polls such as those made by the Office of War Information.

Now public opinion polls are all right in their place but there are such matters as fornication, obscenity, polygamy, justice, decency, honor, or in government, the question whether we shall draft nine or ten million men, that are not settled by public opinion.

Carlyle pointed out the futility of that kind of democracy. Imagine, he said, a captain who would attempt to steer a ship around Cape Horn by a show of the hands from the crew and the passengers.

It is just as ridiculous to poll a ship's company before setting the course as it is to poll the people of the United States before deciding whether to have jim crow in the army.

The War Department ought to know that the army which fights best is a united army, and it must assume the responsibility for its failure to follow the law of military science. It cannot fall back on public opinion polls to justify its failure to do its clear duty.

By the way, public opinion polls showed nine out of ten persons favored distribution of Federal ballots to men in the armed services through the Federal Government. But did we get Federal rather than State responsibility for getting ballots to service men? We did not.

The Majesty Of Justice

Courier, Pitts. 2-12-44

Anatole France, noted French satirist, once wrote about "the majesty of justice which forbids rich and poor alike from sleeping under bridges."

We see much of this majesty of justice in the United States where the courts have consistently upheld segregation and the theory of white supremacy, often on the ground that Negroes are themselves free to segregate whites; and contended that segregation is not discrimination, contrary to all human observation and experience.

For example, the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals has just handed down a two-to-one decision in the Winfred William Lynn case that the Selective Service Administration practice of setting separate quotas for the calling of Negro and white men did not constitute illegal discrimination, despite the plain wording of the Selective Service Act.

One of the judges blandly contended that the Army racial segregation was an old tradition dating back to 1866, and that limiting the number of Negroes called up according to places available for them was a practical custom.

He could well have gone back to 1776 and proved the contrary that since Negroes and whites served in the same units in the Revolutionary War for freedom and democracy, the same tradition should be followed today.

Everybody knows that the administration of the Selective Service Act has been discriminatory against Negroes and, for that matter, against whites; else we would not have had to insist that Negroes be admitted to all branches of the military service, nor would Southern Congressmen have had to complain against undue drafting of white men while the Army prepared a segregated place for Negroes.

WHITE BOYS ARE DYING

On the question of casualties, the Laurinburg, N.C., Weekly Exchange (white) complains because the lists are mainly white.

Afro-American, Balt. Md. 9-2-44

That may be true; we have no way of knowing. There is no "c" for colored on Army and Navy casualty lists.

But suppose the North Carolina paper is correct in its claim, who is responsible?

1. Who kept colored boys from volunteering for the first eighteen months of the war?

2. Who keeps colored boys from serving on fighting ships, on Navy combat planes and with combat units of the Marines?

3. Who is responsible that the fighting New York colored regiment, one of the nation's best, does guard duty in Hawaii instead of meeting the Japs head on?

4. Who broke up the second colored cavalry division and the 184th, and changed colored artillery and infantry units into engineer post battalions and quartermasters?

Whoever did this wanted to give colored troops the laboring jobs, the dirty work, the distasteful tasks, and save for white boys the more(?) dignified business of gun-toting, flying of planes and the sailing of ships.

The Roosevelt administration is responsible for placing 75 per cent of colored troops in labor units. But the La[illegible] burg, N.C., paper didn't protest then. Why does it do so now? The Army's un-American policy of confining colored troops to non-combat service has been done over our repeated protests.

We have always known it would be changed when the casualty list grew large enough.

Army Needs Doctors, but Discharges Good Negro MDs

12-28-44

The crowning irony of the Army's Jim Crow policy can be found in the way this policy invariably bounces back at those who impose it. Here's a story that just about tops everything on the crow whirligig:

At Harlem Hospital in New York City, a group of some 15 Negro doctors are finishing up their internship which was to prepare them for active Army service. Most of them wound up their medical schooling under the Army Student Training Program. They are all M. D.'s, graduates of Grade A medical schools. They were scheduled to be commissioned as medical officers in the U. S. Army on the first of January, along with a group of white interns who worked beside them at Harlem Hospital. They were proud and eager young men, and good doctors.

Suddenly, several weeks ago, each youngster in this group of Negro interns—all of them in Army uniform, awaiting their medical commissions—received official notice from the War Dept. The notice said, in effect, that the Army had all the Negro doctors it needed and that their discharge papers would be forthcoming in January, instead of their commissions.

So, next week the white interns finishing up at Harlem Hospital will get their commissions as scheduled. The Negro interns will be left high, dry and bitter. Their futures are most uncertain. They aren't eligible for certain state medical license exams, inasmuch as they are three months short of internship requirements. (The last three months of internship were supposed to be completed in Army hospitals, under the Army student training program.) None of the men had made plans for entering private practice. It will be difficult for them to continue their internships elsewhere, since these posts are usually arranged long in advance.

Negro doctors, according to present Army policy, are used only in all-Negro Army hospitals. They are not used even exclusively for wounded Negro soldiers in "mixed" hospitals having patients of both races. With the shipment of large numbers of Negro troops overseas, the patient load in all-Negro hospitals in the U. S. A. has been reduced. The Army now faces the dilemma of either reducing its Negro medical staff at a time when military doctors are badly needed, or finally integrating Negro doctors in its general medical program. Negro and white doctors have for years been successfully ministering to white and Negro patients, side by side, in certain Northern hospitals.

There are numerous Army doctors who have been serving overseas under continuous tension for two or more years, without getting a single furlough home. They can't get a home leave, they're told, because the Army is short of medical replacements. How can the rejection of qualified physicians because of their skin color—physicians who could be used as sorely needed replacements—square with this explanation?

Dawson Plan Covers Industry

A resolution introduced in the House on March 16 by Rep. William L. Dawson (Dem., Ill.) differs from that of Rep. Clare Booth Luce primarily in the respect that it calls for study of the status of minorities in war industries as well as the armed forces. Mr. Dawson proposes a committee of the same size (seven members) and an equal appropriation ($25,000).

WASHINGTON

Texts of companion resolutions introduced in the House of Representatives last week by Rep. Clare Booth Luce (Rep., Conn.) and referred to the Committee on Rules follow:

RESOLVED, That a select committee, to consist of seven Members of the House of Representatives, appointed by the Speaker, is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the status of the Negro and other minority groups in the armed services and in attached or affiliated auxiliary military organizations for women, with a view to ascertaining:

(a) the extent of compliance by the armed services and the selective-service system with the requirement of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, that the selection and training of men be accomplished without racial discrimination;

(b) the nature and extent of any practices in the organization and placement of personnel which accomplish the exclusion of persons because of race or color from the assignment to any type of unit or any type of service on land, at sea, or in the air;

Advancement Questioned

(c) the extent to which opportunities for training, appointment, or advancement in the commissioned grades are restricted on the basis of race or color;

(d) the extent to which considerations of race or color are impeding the full utilization and development of professional and technical skills; and

(e) the relation of the system of segregated units to the effective utilization and appropriate placement of persons on the basis of individual competency and merit.

4-1-44

The committee shall report to the House as soon as practicable the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems desirable.

Subpoena Power Asked

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable.

H.R. 477

RESOLVED, That the expense of the investigation by the select committee, created by H. Res. 476 not to exceed $25,000, including expenses for the employment of investigators and clerical and stenographic assistance, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

Gibson Gives Full Credit To 'White Press' For 'Exposing' Segregation

WASHINGTON. — Nazi-like, Jim Crow transportation for Negro troops, boldly exposed and fought by the Negro press, was ordered removed this week by the War Department which specifically directed army camps to provide decent and non-segregated bus service for Negro troops between camps and towns.

The army directive climaxed a determined fight waged since Pearl Harbor by Negro publications against vicious morale-breaking, Jim Crow and "white supremacy" conditions forced upon Negro troops in the South—but conditions which were apparently unknown or unbelieved by Truman K. Gibson, assistant to Secretary of War Stimson, who stated that "We knew by hearsay that discriminatory transportation hurt the morale of Negro troops . . . but the condition was not called to the department's attention" until a story concerning it was published in the white press.

Ignores Negro Protest

Observers here expressed amazement over Gibson's contention that after reams of articles had appeared in Negro papers pointing out the injustices to which Negro troops have been put by virtue of the Jim Crow transportation system, it took only one series of articles from a white publication to force a change in the army's traditional policy.

It was pointed out that William J. Hastie, Gibson's former superior, had resigned the position now held by Gibson in protest over the army's Jim Crow policies.

The directive was transmitted by Lt. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, commanding general of the Army Service Forces, at the request of John J. McCloy, the Assistant Secretary of War. Gibson, somewhat recovered from his surprise that Jim Crowism existed in the army, said that Gen. Sommervell's directive "is notice to all troop commanders that ignorant, prejudiced bus drivers can no longer insult Negro troops, and that busses, especially those supplied by the army, are for the comfort of all troops without regard to color."

Anti-Jim Crow Checkup

Hereafter all army establishments will be inspected at regular intervals to insure the enforcement of the department's new anti-Jim Crow travel law. While the policy applies to all army locations, it was directed particularly at Southern camps where Negro morale is lowest because of poor travel facilities, the department said.

Commandants whose neglect of their Negro troops were exposed and have been ordered to correct their policies include Brig. Gen. William H. Hobson, of Ft. Benning, Ga.; Brig. Gen. Haig S. Shekerjain, of Camp Sibert, Ala.; Col. Jasper McDuffy, Craig Field, Ala.; Elmer J. Bolling, Maxwell Field, Ala., and Col. Ira E. Ryden, Camp McCain, Miss. Camp Wallace, Texas, which provided bus service for Negro troops into Houston but none for the 10-mile return trip, has been transferred to the navy, the department stated.

In many sections where bus drivers carry clubs and pistols to intimidate Negro soldiers, it was revealed that white civilians resented Negro officers so much that many were unable to leave their post without direct insult or threats.

Living quarters for their visiting families and for the men themselves while on furlough are still inadequate, dirty and outrageously expensive as are most of the eating and drinking places they are allowed to patronize.

While acclaiming the army directive, Negroes here contended that this step toward true democracy must be lengthened to include the elimination of all Jim Crow policies of the army and the nation.

"Great Britain 'Backtracking' On Race Question," Walter White Says

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.
5-13-44

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Great Britain is "backtracking" on the race question!

That discovery was made by Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, during his recent 15-week 20,000-mile air tour of war fronts overseas. Mr. White told U. S. War Department officials here last week that, in Great Britain, a secret order has been handed down to law enforcement officers to discourage the appearance in public of British women in uniform with American Negro soldiers.

AMERICAN WHITES, CAUSE

When United States troops first arrived in Great Britain, an order was issued that there was to be no color line. But later, after severe protests from American whites themselves, the British "crawfished" and prefaced a new order with the words: "In the interest of harmony, therefore, it is suggested that . . ."

The later order is tempered with "mercy," to the effect that it is all right to entertain colored soldiers in British homes "where difficult situations can be met more easily."

ANTI-NEGRO PROPAGANDA

Mr. White reported spreading anti-Negro propaganda in the North African and Middle Eastern theatres of operations as well as in the European theatres. He brought back a leaflet circulated in Naples, purported to be a Neapolitan street song to the tune of "The Cup of Coffee, which, according to the transiation, is titled, "Italian Women Arm in Arm with American Negroes." 5-13-44

The militant NAACP executive recommended that Army intelligence, or other pertinent Federal agencies, ascertain who is responsible for the writing, printing and distribution of that leaflet and a huge jim-crow sign also seen in Naples.

JIM-CROW SIGN DESCRIBED

Mr. White said the sign is a green placard, 24x36 inches, with black lettering, allegedly put up under the auspices of "The Italian American Committee for the Preservation of the Italian Race," but reportedly the work of American white soldiers. The following excerpt from the placard was quoted:

"We Italian-Americans, with deep pain, must see that a certain feminine nucleus of Naples, having been dragged in the mire, dares to walk on the street with the Negro, and dares also to invite one home . . . When will harsh reality enlighten you? When will your honor, your pride in being white and Italian incite you to justly scorn the Negro? . . . You cannot understand how you humiliate us: All Americans speak thus: Look, the Italian people are fond of Negroes." 5-13-44

FRAUD AGAINST NEGROES

A third practice in Naples, Mr. White reported, is the supplying of forged orders to hotel proprietors, forbidding them to admit Negroes. He actually presented a copy of such an order, one which indicated the hours when personnel might visit a particular hotel and listed the rates charged, but which specified, "No Negroes." The "order" was signed by an American Army colonel.

While Mr. White's consummate report was chiefly optimistic, he took a "hard-hitting attitude toward the widespread prevalence of anti-Negro propaganda he encountered and made strong recommendations to the War Department that it instruct responsible subordinates to act more promptly and vigorously against this vicious and demoralizing form of jim crowism and exploitation in the United States Army overseas.

"SEPARATE-RACE" ARMY & NAVY STILL DISGRACES DEMOCRACY

Since 1919 little or no effort has been made to eliminate the "jim crow" policy within our armed forces even though Adolph Hitler was able to establish a complete military "new order" in the same period; in fact, less than 20 years. We still officially claim, we "didn't have time" and we shall be using that same official excuse 20 and forty years from now, unless we get busy and "take the time" to remedy this undemocratic situation.

NEVER ATTEMPTED

This war has made us "take time" to do a lot of things we thought we couldn't do with colored people in America. We've taken colored people from the cotton fields and farms and made them into skilled workers; they are working in radio and plastics, piloting ships and flying planes. And all this has happened in less than five years which thus poses the accusing question, what could America have achieved by granting these and other equal rights to colored people during the entire 25 year period since the last war?

It stands to reason that if we could establish colored divisions and appoint a colored brigadier-general in less than ten years we could have—and should have—created a "mixed" army with colored officers sharing their commands with white, in twenty five years—had we tried!

And, if we could establish colored airforce units in less than five years, we certainly could have created a "mixed" airforce in nearly a quarter of a century. The same goes for the Navy. So? 10-14-44

The terrible truth isthatwe didn't try and I humbly suspect that we are not fully trying to-day.

UNFAIR JUDGMENT

Mr. Willkie, (before he left us), wrote very boldly about the racial discrimination in our armed forces and his word has been substantiated by several of our more courageous colored army chaplains, including Chaplain Luther M. Fuller of the Bay State. These conditions require no long-winded Congressional "investigations" by men of proven racial bigotry. We would gain nothing by such a review inasmuch as the "Cracker Coalition" holdspunished in unequal military opportunity and a suppression of every key position on the "judgment-seat." Mr. Deweymen can be put in our armed forces. If colored lads can be must know these facts which are so vitally important todiscrimination. in uniform for alleged military violations, other all colored voters including thousands of colored citizenscial period in punished for practicing and preaching racial in the armed forces. The very morale of the nation'sof the Church, tion. Moreover since we have reached the cru- largest minority group is involved. If we practice much about other items favoring special moneyed groups,morrow. ty to-day there can be no "reds" in America to-north or south.

WILLKIE WAS RIGHT

Our armed forces comprise a number of various racial groups, but I do not recall any special racial campaign issue which can not be ignored by either politi-units devoted exclusively to the Italian members, the cal party. There are too many colored men and women Irish members, the German-Americans or the Poles. CHAPLAINS RESIGN

The colored military status is now openly a firmand religious pass in America. 10-14-44

Why, then, a special colored army, navy and air-force? Why a special Japanese-American regiment? Will we next form an all-Chinese and all-Indian army? Arn't we getting like Mr. Churchill?

The late and beloved Wendell L. Willkie spoke of these dangerous trends toward imperialistic practices in America. They may be "all right" for Britain which boasts of a jim crow Jewish army, but do they belong in America? Are we to be one or shall we divided? That is the question.

"ONE WORLD" BEST

There is no more reason for a jim crow army in America than there is for jim crow schools and jim crow housing. The great Wendell L. Willkie, author of "One World", expressed these truths far better than this writer. The fact reveals that we have long exploited certain people, like the Chinese, the Indians and Africans and then sought to justify such action with a lot of pious phrases which were a disgrace to our alleged religious Western civilization. Of course when any one spoke against these evils they were immediately branded as "reds". Many a courageous colored "G.I." has been wrongfully placed in this category as well as colored chaplains. Even Mr. Willkie was called a radical. It is time for both Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Dewey to read up on some of Willkie's wisdom. They both have a lot more to learn about colored people and a "One World" which will mean happiness to everyone. As for Wendell L. Willkie, the whole world has lost a true friend.

GREENVILLE, Miss.—Their patience exhausted after 2 years of brutal beatings and general mistreatment by the civilian police and military police of the Greenville Army Air Field, all non-commissioned officers of the 418th Quartermaster's Platoon, T AB, and the 51st Aviation Squadron Army Air Forces Pilot school here, have forwarded a petition to their commanding officers and the commanding general at Maxwell Field, Ala., seeking some method of correcting the situation. Although all the incidents have been previously reported to their respective commanding officers, to the knowledge of the men, no action has been taken.

INHUMAN TREATMENT

The two most recent atrocities occurred within the first two weeks of this month. On April 2, Pfc. Amos Davis was cursed and hit by an MP of the 1007th Guard Squadron in the presence of his girl-friend, because Private 1/C Davis would not address the MP as "sir." One week later, April 9, Cpl. William P. Watkins was beaten by S/Sgt. Robert O. Brandenburg (white) of the 1007th Guard Squadron, in the city jail of Greenville. The petition states that Corporal Watkins was repeatedly called an offensive racial name by Sergeant Brandenburg, who "bruised and disfigured the soldier's face."

WORST OF ALL 4-22-44

The petition cites 10 such instances of brutality between November 10, 1942, to the present time, but stresses that they are but few of the cases. Perhaps the most vicious of the occurrences took place in February, 1943, when civilian authorities of Greenville entered a private home without a warrant, arrested two soldiers and brutally beat the men with blackjacks and the butt-end of pistols.

Pvt. Robert L. Scott's head was swollen to twice its normal size; he suffered a brain concussion, and received lacerations over both his eyes. The second soldier, Cpl. Theodore R. Taylor, suffered concussion of the head and temporary blindness of both eyes.

Scientific Groups Fight USO Ban On 'Equality' Book

Defender — Chicago, Ill. 4-22-44

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Thirty-nine scientific and semi-scientific organizations were petitioned this week by the Writers' War board to join in the protest against the ban of "The Races of Mankind," a booklet written by Ruth Benedict and Gene Weltfish, Columbia university anthropologists, at USO centers.

Controversy over "The Races of Mankind," a pamphlet that scientifically proves the equality of races, arose about four months ago when Chester I. Barnard, who left the presidency of New Jersey Bell Telephone company to head the USO centers, read the booklet and ordered it banned because it was too "controversial." While continuous distribution of the booklet has been made in churches, schools and clubs throughout the nation, the army cancelled its order for 55,000 copies upon protest by Rep. May (D.-Ky.) who resented the revelation that northern Negroes are more intelligent than some southern whites.

While approximately 350,000 copies of the booklet have been distributed out of 400,000 printed, a fifth printing of at least 100,000 copies is being planned, according to an announcement by the educational Public Affairs committee.

Fla. Camp Keeps Jim-Crow Pattern

Afro American Baltimore, Md.

CAMP GORDON JOHNSON, Fla. — In complete disregard of the War Department's ban on segregation in the Army's recreation and travel facilities, this post maintains a pattern of jim-crow practices that is said to be distasteful to even the average white soldier here.

The few colored officers here are victims of the abuses as well as the enlisted men. Barred from the officers' clubs and mess used by whites, and lodged in separate barracks, they are obliged to live a life to themselves, as the nearest city (Tallahassee) is fifty-six miles away. 9-16-44

Assignments Discriminatory

The headquarters detachment is divided into colored and white sections, the whites being assigned to the skilled, technical and managing jobs, and the colored enlisted men in kitchen police for white units, orderlies for officers' barracks and mess halls or in the other manual capacities.

Requests from men with technical training for transfers have been ignored.

A group of "honey dippers"—members of a sanitary company whose principal job is emptying latrine buckets—refused to work last week and were promptly placed in confinement.

No Directive Issued To End Discrimination Against Negro Troops

Problem Is Admittedly Acute, But Factually Reported Order Has Not Been Issued, Civilian Aide Says

6-3-44

By John T. Mitchell
Guide Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, D. C.—"There is no truth in the report in a Philadelphia daily newspaper that Army camp commanders, particularly in the South, have been ordered to provide decent, adequate, and non-Jim Crow bus transportation for Negro troops traveling from post stations to town," declared Truman K. Gibson Jr., civilian aide to the Secretary of War on Tuesday.

Sunday's Philadelphia Record carried an article from Windsor Booth of its Washington bureau asserting that the War Department on Saturday had issued such an order.

CALLED RIDICULOUS

Decrying as "absolutely ridiculous" the claims that a series of three articles in the Record by Orrin Evans after a tour of southern military establishments had brought about such a "desirable change" in Army policy, Mr. Gibson pointed out that for three years individuals, organizations, and particularly Negro newspapers have been revealing the hardships endured by Negro troops under the segregated transportation systems.

OFFICIAL REPORTS 6-3-44

It is known that official reports have been furnished the War Department by Mr. Gibson and Brig. Gen. B. O. Davis Sr., who made an inspection tour specifically to study the problems at the behest of the Inspector General's office, and Truman K. Gibson Jr., civilian aide to the Secretary of War.

Both have several times toured camps to gather data on the effect of the segregation pattern on the morale of Negro troops.

While granting full truth in the findings published in the articles by Evans, Mr. Gibson added that there was "nothing new about the problem" contained in the Record's articles.

DENIES QUOTATION

The Journal and Guide on Tuesday contacted Mr. Gibson, who was quoted in Sunday's Record as saying that all that "no such order (which was previous reports on happenings in southern camps had been "on-ly hearsay and now with Evans' articles we have something concrete to work on."

Secretary of War Stimson's aide, denied making that statement to the paper, and further declared that "no such order (which was the story as saying that all transmitted through channels to all camp commanders by Lt. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, commanding officer of the Army Service Forces at the special request of John J. Mc-Cloy, the Assistant Secretary of War) had been issued."

TOURED CAMPS 6-3-44

The series of articles in the Record was written by Evans after a 3,400-mile tour which took him to 14 Army camps in seven southern states, according to his paper.

Throughout the area he re-

IN POSITION TO KNOW 6-3-44

He said he did comment generally on the seriousness of the transportation problem and reviewed casually some of the efforts that had been made to improve it. The quotation attributed to him in Booth's article he flatly denied having made, and could not have made—since it was only in point had the order been issued.

portedly found the major cause of low morale among Negro soldiers to be the lack of sufficient transportation from camp posts to nearby towns.

Mr. Gibson said that Booth visited his office a few days ago and made inquiries about the purported order and was then informed by him that there was no such order.

OLD JIM CROW

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.

Will Re-Appear on American Beachheads After Initial Success

By HORACE R. CAYTON

(The views expressed in this column are those of the writer and do not necessarily express the editorial opinion of The Pittsburgh Courier.—The Editors.)

THE English postal authorities apologized in the paper a day after the invasion because they couldn't make mail deliveries on the beachheads. There is one other thing that hasn't been brought over with the Allied Army either, and that's old jim crow. He'll come later, but then there comes a time in any war when jim crowism is too expensive even for the American Army.

I'll bet that on the beachheads of France if a white soldier is shot down it won't disrupt the whole command for a Negro to take his place. I don't think that even a poll tax general would object to a Negro sergeant taking over a platoon of white soldiers if their non-commissioned officers had been wiped out. It is my hunch that the carefully labelled containers of white and colored blood won't be watched if a white soldier is dying and needs an immediate transfusion. In the English Channel if a ship is attacked by the Germans, even our lily-white naval officers won't mind if a second Dorie Miller mans a machine gun to assist in the attack. During an invation lots of things will have to go by the board and, like the English mail deliveries, won't return to normalcy until the critical days of the first attack are over. Even Americans know when enough is enough.

Mr. Cayton

It is curious in a battle where their existence is at stake men drop off many senseless and useless prejudices and react to each other as human beings facing a common danger. It is tragic that this feeling of comraderie can't be carried over to more normal times. My hunch is that it would be. Men who've faced a common danger can never feel the same prejudice toward one another. Fighting and dying together binds them together, regardless of past experiences. It would be but . . . and that "but" is the real hatred which exists in the high command of the Army and Navy and is pounded into every enlisted man and officer from the time he dons his uniform.

IT'S my feeling that most Americans are pretty decent human beings. It is further my notion that most human beings, when they face a common danger together, change their attitudes. The Army knows this and the Navy knows it and they fear, above all else, that this may take place and destroy the racial barriers which they are so anxious and careful to nurture.

WE LEARN THE HARD WAY

A Negro is taught from the time he is inducted into the Army that he must take commands from white p, but never under any circumstances must he command a white man. White soldiers and sailors are taught that they must not fraternize with Negroes, cannot drill with them, cannot sleep with them, cannot attend the same theatres, purchase materials at the same PX's. That is as carefully taught to them as is respect for an officer and the necessity to respond to a command.

NOW, and for the next few weeks, until a firm beachhead is established, it'll be a group of American men fighting the German nation. There'll be no separate mess halls for Negroes. The boys will get their food where they can and lots of times won't be able to get any. But as soon as success is in sight, like the English mail delivery, old jim crow, American style, will come in to re-establish the color caste system in a part of the world where it has never existed before. We learn the hard way, we Americans, and will sacrifice everything or nearly everything for our sacred prejudices. We'll win this battle, though it'll be costly, but we'll have to have many a battle and many a beachhead established before the final victory over American racism is achieved.

Seabees Case Being Reviewed Dec. 11th

NEW YORK (C\—According to the Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Forces, a hearing has been secured for December 11th before a Navy Board of Review for Issac McNatt, Harvey Steels, Robert Louis Mims and Clarence O. Arthur Garfield Hays, noted civil liberties lawyer, and Gerald Weatherly are handling their case before the Navy Board, set up for the purpose of hearing grievances of discharged men under the Servicemen's Adjustment Act of 1940, better known as the G.I. Says Mistreatment Of Negro Troops In Italy Hurts Cause

Discrimination And Jim Crow Puzzling To Italian People

NEW YORK — (ANP) —"Racial segregation and discrimination which were imported into the liberated areas of Italy by American troops had much to do with the rejection of democracy by the masses of Italian people," said Ollie Harrington war correspondent of the Pittsburgh Courier, just back from the Europeon fighting fronts.

Harrington made these remarks in the course of his discussion on race relations on the Europeon fighting fronts which he was giving in the lecture series "A World View of the Negro Question," presented each Saturday afternoon at the Schomburg Collection of the New York Public library.

GIVES ACCOUNT

Harrington gave a vivid account of the experiences of Negro combat engineer and aviation units as he has seen them fighting in Italy and France. He described the enthusiasm and high morale of Negro servicemen when they first landed on Italian soil. The Italian people received them with open arms. However, white American servicemen circulated stories among the Italians that Negroes were sub-human and criminals. Italian girls were arrested for no reason than for being seen in the company of colored servicemen.

"Since the Italian people had to depend upon the allied military government for their food and clothing, there was little choice but for them to avoid the Negro soldiers," said Harrington. He emphasized the influence of this undemocratic attitude of the Americans on the Italian people. It made them doubt that democracy was better than fascism. This fact is part of the explanation of the difficulty in Italy today.

PRAISES FIGHTERS

Harrington described the splendid record of the Negro fighters and gave special praise to the Negro trucking units, without which the Cassino and Salerno victories would never have been won.

Supplementary remarks were made by Mrs. Ruth Danenhower Wilson, the author of Jim Crow Joins Up; Chapiain Luther M. Fuller, who for 2½ years was stationed in the Pacific theatre of war; and Sgt. Conrad Lynn, whose brother, Winfred Lynn's case against discrimination in the operation of the Selective Service act has been carried by the American Civil Liberties union and affiliated organizations up to the Supreme Court.

Charge Bias Still Rules At Benning

FORT BENNING, Ga.—(ANP)—The army's recent manifesto against racial segregation and discrimination on army posts is being defied here by army officials according to an ANP investigation last week. Racial segregation at this army post continues unabated, with Negro and white soldiers being compelled to ride on separate buses.

Vicious practices of racial discrimination and segregation against Negro soldiers by the Howard Bus Lines, Inc., the only officially authorized bus line, are said to be sanctioned by diehard anti-Negro white army officials.

While white soldiers and civilians wait in comfortable waiting rooms and pass through the new turnstiles at the local bus station here, Negro soldiers must await their buses in an unpainted segregated shed, labeled as a bus station. Negro buses have been re-routed to go up back streets and out across the post, to avoid passing the main station which only white soldiers, officers and civilians use.

Because of this change in route for the buses carrying Negro soldiers, they must walk longer distances to their companies. Negro soldiers may not enjoy any of the time saving methods devised by Howard Bus Lines, Inc., for white soldiers.

Officers Confined in Bus JC Case

Punished for Observing New Army Order in Fla.

CAMP GORDON JOHNSTON, Fla.—Despite the Army's anti-right to sit anywhere in Army order at Esler Field, La., where they declared that colored enlisted men and officers are still ported this week, to all servicemen the discrimination order, three officers of this post who refused to move to the rear of a post bus were recently restricted to their quarters for a week. Contending that the Army order declares that colored enlisted men and officers are still stationed at the post PX's, theatres and buses, they declared that they would not move to the rear of the bus. Similar violations of the Army order have been reported in other parts of the country, where Negro soldiers have been forced to ride in the rear of buses. It has been rumored, moreover, that the units, which have trained here for over a year, will be broken into labor battalions and that only a small number will go overseas as an anti-aircraft unit.

Meanwhile, thirty-four members of a casualty company, recently transferred here from Fort Huachuca, Ariz., are now serving from four to six months in the post stockade for refusal to work.

The men, sentenced by court-martial three weeks ago, contended that they were assigned the work of cleaning up latrines and that that work is always assigned to the colored soldiers.

Jim Crow And Lack Of Combat Duties Told

11-17-44

From two sources this week came reports of discrimination being experienced by Negro GIs serving with the armed forces in France—one from a serviceman and one from a war correspondent.

Injection of the Jim Crow pattern of the South in France by white officers was disclosed in a letter to President Sherman Scruggs of Lincoln U., by one of his former students, Sgt. Earl A. Howe, Jr. Growing resentment of Negro GIs over apparent wholesale and almost total consignment to labor battalions, or non-combat units was told in a press dispatch by Roi Ottley, author and war correspondent of the P. M.

Ordered from Cafe

In Sgt. Earl Howe's letter, which passed the censor, he stated "I often wonder why we should have to fight and go through all of this for the thousands back in the states who have the same ideas and grudges about us. It is really not the French people. It is some southerners who are causing all this trouble."

He related how his comrades were ordered out of a cafe by an American officer who told them "this cafe is for white people only." When one of the men courageously defied him with the question "When did that order come out, Sir?" he disdainfully replied, "I've never heard of it, but there's the door."

The incident was reported to the white first lieutenant in command of the men's company, who when he sought an explanation received only boastful defies from the major and captain who had ordered the men from the cafe. Their names were forwarded to the regimental commander.

Another insult was given the Negro GIs when a sign was posted in a stationery store stating "This store does not serve Negro troops. Negro troops are served at 12 Rue Grand."

Men Want Combat

Ottley in his release stated "Despite neatly-handled ballyhoo, the Negro soldier in France still is doing little else than most Negroes do in civilian life—they are heavin' bales and totin' bags."

"Until an anti-tank unit arrived in France recently, not one Negro division had had actual physical contact with the enemy. Most observers here feel that this is no accident. The almost exclusive use of Negroes as service troops is an open scandal in this theater of operations."

He told how Stars and Stripes, GI newspaper, has received letters from white soldiers complaining that Negroes are being "overplayed" in the news. How more "rotting" letters arrived over Gen. Eisenhower's praise of the Red Ball Express, the supply line which contains more than 70 per cent Negro personnel.

He told of a conversation with Lt. Ben Johnson, former Columbia U. track star saying, "I want combat duty, I do not feel in a strong position to demand better treatment after the war, because I'm not up there trading punches with Jerry.

"I guess certain officers fear the Negro may become cocky after the war.

"The men who oppose Negroes doing combat duty, know that when a white man and a Negro are in the same foxhole day in and day out, it breaks down barriers. And they don't want that to happen."

Colored MP's for Southern Trains

Colored MP's will be assigned to jim-crow coaches in the South, it was learned this week from authoritative sources.

The purpose of the War Department order is to reduce the friction caused by the entrance of white MP's into colored coaches to preserve order or to remove colored soldiers from trains.

Army Should Immediately Knock Jim Crow In Head In Redistribution Centers

ONCE again (it's too bad) the War Department (Army Service Force) has put its foot into its mouth at a time calculated to do the most harm, by denoting Jim Crow redistribution and orientation centers for returning Negro soldiers—on their way from fighting the Germans to fight the Japanese. It is the general understanding that more than 50 of these centers are to be set up. Of this large number, only four are to be in the North. Of the four in the North, two are prospectively earmarked for Negro soldiers, one in Harlem and one on Chicago's Southside. The other centers, the two in the North and the 50 in the South, are for whites only. It is understandable that the Negro public and Negro soldiers should have immediately protested against any such segregated arrangement. The arrangement is not only morally wrong, but egregiously stupid. Somebody in the War Department made a great big unnecessary mistake. This mistake should be corrected at once if it is not to have a pronounced influence in the present political campaign.

9-30-44

LET NEGROES CHOOSE

ACTUALLY, really and truly, no special plan is needed for Negro soldiers. No plan is needed which from its outline looks like it was specially carved out for Negro soldiers. If the men behind this program had only been smart, they would have known that the Negro soldiers will, in a sense, segregate (?) themselves if given the chance. That is to say, if Negro soldiers were given the same liberty of choice given white soldiers, they would choose to go to centers in certain locations, principally Chicago and New York. They would not choose to go to Miami. The number which would choose centers so far off God's path would be too small to create any problem. White Southerners are just as repugnant to Negroes as these Negroes are supposed to be to them. Of course, prejudiced white Southerners are meant and they are setting the pace in the South so far.

> "The unity of nations fighting for a free world includes men of every color and race."—Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

MORE NORTHERN CENTERS

WHAT the Army should do is to set up more first-class centers in the North and give the soldiers, white and black, freedom of choice. I say first-class centers because I do not believe the currently spoken of Theresa hotel in New York or Pershing hotel in Chicago to fit the bill. The Army should try to obtain the Congress hotel in Chicago, or a similar hotel and should do the same kind of a job in New York. And it should make all hotels in either city available to white and black soldiers. Inasmuch as most of the centers have already been earmarked for the South where most of the Negro soldiers will not want to go, the Army might wisely reserve most of the space in these Northern centers for Negroes, but not all. There are plenty of Northern white boys who will not want to go to the inhospitable South either. And they would not mind sharing a downtown Chicago hotel with Negroes either. They will have just come back from sharing fox holes together.

PRESENT PLANS CRUEL

BY all means, the Army should proceed at once to revamp its plans along more practical and just lines. The present plans are not only undemocratic, they are cruel.

Them slobs back home had better forgit that stuff in a hurry. We're fighting a war over here, and if it takes a black man's blood to save a white man's life, he's gonna git that blood, and we don't care what they say back there. They better git on the ball or else they ain't gonna be allowed to have no blood."

Men At Front Rap Segregated Policy

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.
6-17-44

By OLLIE HARRINGTON, Courier War Correspondent

NAPLES, Italy—With Rome, the Holy City, now occupied by Allied troops of all races; with the fighting fliers of the 99th Pursuit Squadron helping to pave the way that will lead to the ultimate destruction of the enemy; with Negro combat, engineer and service troops active not only in the Italian theatre of operations, but in the stupendous new invasion of Nazi-held Europe as well, one inescapable fact emerges from the full flow of "blood, sweat and tears." It is the utter inability of undemocratic and medieval theories to keep pace with the drive of hundreds of thousands of grimly determined fighting men generated by the electric force of revitalized democratic principles.

The torrent of blood which surged against Hitler's concrete and steel walls—sweeping over them relentlessly, destroying all in its path—flowed from the torn arteries of men of all races, religions and creeds. Life spilled from torn bodies of fair-haired Tommies and Yanks, shiny-black Africans and brown Asiatics, from Frenchmen, Poles, New Zealanders and Italians. Whistling steel honors no complexion differences. It may take the rest of the world a little time to make this discovery, but to the fighting men in Italy it has been a grim lesson.

SUBTLE CHANGES BECOME MANIFEST

A concrete example of the subtle changes becoming manifest in the combat areas is found in the situation of hundreds of blood bank stations behind the lines. In each one of these little, overworked tents and huts is being quietly solved a problem which for years has aroused bitter controversy back in the rather remote United States.

This struggle centered around a system endorsed by powerful agencies, that of separating blood plasma donated by Negro patriots from that of whites, although the need for such separation is completely unsubstantiated by the findings of medical science.

This theory received a fair test at the approaches to the Gustav and Hitler lines, and it is rather ironic that these lines, the very symbols of evil racial and social theories, should with their steel and fire have provided conditions which destroyed this evil in our midst. For the shock of battle was so great that our blood plasma reserve was found inadequate and, with mangled bodies of civilized men screaming for blood, it was gathered from their willing comrades in every area, regardless of race or complexion or creed.

Last week in the streets of Naples and on roads leading up to the front, I talked with many men, most of them fresh out of line. They were Northerners and Southerners, black men, white men and brown. I wondered what they thought about the fact that blood for their wounded buddies was not being kept "pure." I felt that their views were extremely important, for they were giving their lives and it would be they who would fashion the new world. I was startled by the ferocity with which they answered and I felt proud and gloriously hopeful for America and the world. One of the men with whom I talked was a huge, raw-boned Texan out n he told me the story of an ld accident in which he had horribly burned. His body d for grafts. There was a black man who had worked e him for many months, a man who didn't talk much, hen the skin was needed, he uaid: "Take some of mine, lenty." The Texan rolled his sleeves needed for the huge black back down and said: "Now about of the oil fields. I met him in a bar on the Via Roma, the main street of Naples.

Ex-Army Chaplain Terms Spiceley Case Last Straw in Dixie-Inspired Humiliation

(Grant Reynolds, ex-chaplain, who left the army because of its segregation, and resigned his NAACP post in order to campagin against Roosevelt, tells also how colored delegation cooled heels in capital last week. In the delegation were Walter White, Dr. Channing Tobias and Mrs. Mary Bethune.)

By GRANT REYNOLDS

Any hope I might have entertained about remaining inactive during this political campaign was quickly dispelled by the recent verdict rendered in the Spiceley case. 10-7-44

Pvt. Booker T. Spiceley, a young colored soldier, was murdered in cold blood by a white bus driver in Durham, N.C., last July. When the all-white jury hastened to free his slayer on September 22, my indignation reached a state hitherto without parallel.

For two years and ten months while I served on active military duty as an officer in this war, I witnessed first-hand the humiliation and debasement of colored soldiers. 10-7-44

What is more, I was on more than one occasion the object of similar un-American treatment. In each instance I did not fail to press for justice. The result was that a set of circumstances developed which finally led to my being relieved from active duty.

Book Too Hot

Since April 2, when my military career ended, I have been seeking the best technique for making known my resentment over the beastly treatment accorded colored service men.

I have even written a book revealing the sordid story, but because of difficulties in finding a publisher with courage enough to handle the story, it still remains in manuscript form.

The miscarriage of justice in the Spiceley case, however, forced upon me the necessity of finding a course of action which would not only articulate this resentment but would set in motion necessary remedial procedure.

Blame Due Roosevelt

My decision was that, somehow, those responsible for the mistreatment of colored service men should not be allowed to escape the wrathful indignation which must smolder in the hearts of every colored citizen who has a loved one in uniform. 10-7-44

Franklin D. Roosevelt, Commander-in-Chief of our military forces, must shoulder responsibility for this evil. Any logical chain of honest thought leads unequivocally to this fact.

I further concluded that to perpetuate in office this man and the gang which surrounds him would not only condone the present abuses, but would demonstrate that colored citizens would be satisfied with such treatment for four more long years. For me this became unthinkable.

Hands Tied in NAACP

As a paid staff member of the NAACP, and knowing its nonpartisan political stand, I could not in good faith continue in my capacity as administrative assistant in its Washington bureau and at the same time play an active role in any effort to have Mr. Roosevelt defeated on November 7.

I therefore followed the dictates of conscience and resigned. I thus freed myself to retire my moral obligation to colored men in uniform by contributing to the repudiation of their unworthy Commander-in-Chief. 10-7-44

The lamentable murder of Private Spiceley should act as a call to arms for colored citizens throughout the nation. It should remind them that their loved ones cannot be protected against the barbaric treatment of lynch-minded Southerners who know that the Department of Justice is powerless to act in such cases.

The verdict in the Spiceley case is in fact tantamount to encouraging "open season" on colored service men.

FD Kept Too Still

Mr. Roosevelt could have discouraged this travesty on justice.

Some months ago the Senate passed and sent to the House a bill which would have made assaults upon men in uniform a Federal offense. House action on this bill is being thwarted by the chairman of the House Judiciary Committe, Representative Hatton Sumners (Dem., Tex.).

Surely in the interest of providing protection for his soldiers the Commander-in-Chief could have forced a member of his Administration to see that this bill was reported for House action.

It is unthinkable that he could order the death of American soldiers on far-flung battlefields and thus confess his inability to offer them protection as they prepare to make the supreme sacrifice.

Cause for Repudiation

If he is powerless to do this he thereby admits a good reason why he should be repudiated and thus lay the foundation for the complete reorganization of the Congress. 10-7-44

Certainly it is time to rescue the destiny of America from the hands of southern demagogues and race haters who brazenly insult thirteen million colored Americans.

A few days ago Mr. Roosevelt showed similar contempt for colored Americans in general.

A delegation of colored leaders had been invited to confer with him on Thursday, September 28. Ten minutes before the hour set for the conference Pa Watson announced that Mr. Roosevelt could not see them. One of the group prevailed upon the White House to see the delegation the following morning.

Could See Radio Stars

As they cooled their heels in Washington waiting to see the busy President they learned through Friday morning newspapers that the President, who could not interrupt his schedule to see them, could find time to have tea with Frank Sinatra, Rags Ragland and Toots Shore.

Mr. Roosevelt needed no colored leaders, however important, to advise with him on vital matters relating to the welfare of thirteen million colored citizens. That is what his southern advisors like Jonathan Daniels are being paid for. 10-7-44

Two Aims at Stake

In the light of this, coupled with the deplorable treatment of colored soldiers, it becomes impossible for me to understand how colored voters can fail to cast a strong protest vote on November 7.

This will accomplish two objectives. It will teach Mr. Roosevelt that he cannot expect to trifle with the lives of colored soldiers and get away with it. It will also serve notice on any succeeding Administration that colored citizens will no longer countenance such willful disregard for their loved ones in uniform.

South Whipping Negro Soldiers Report Says

Defender – Chicago, Ill.
4-29-44

NEW YORK — A detailed list of ten instances in which Negro soldiers have been beaten severely, either by military or civilian police, in Greenville and Leland, Miss., during the past 21 months has been submitted to Brig. Gen. Robert H. Dunlop, in the Adjutant General's office of the War Department by the NAACP.

In submitting the list which contained names, serial numbers and dates, the NAACP said these were only a "few instances" of the mistreatment of Negro soldiers in Mississippi. The letter, signed by Roy Wilkins, assistant secretary, declared: 4-29-44

Affects Morale

"That these incidents and the related fear felt by other Negro soldiers is definitely affecting their morale and their effectiveness as soldiers is by now a foregone conclusion. The situation is critical and during the past two and one-half years has passed beyond the investigating stage.

"We submit that the War Department owes a duty to men in the armed forces to protect them from abuse and violence when it sends them into camps and strange surroundings. An attack on a soldier is an attack on the United States, whether perpetrated by a foreign or domestic enemy." 4-29-44

Names Given

The letter cited the following victims of military police: Pvt. William P. Watkins, Pvt. Morris L. Murchison, Pvt. James Brown, Pfc. Amos Davis and a second beating of William P. Watkins, now a corporal, on April 9, 1944.

The following victims of civilian police were cited to the Adjutant General's office: Pvt. Harry T. Hacket, Pvt. Stuart Marks, Pvt. Robert L. Scott, Cpl. Theodore R. Taylor, and Pvt. Joe N. Lewis.

distribution of the pamphlet in its various centers, and now Representative Andrew J. May, (Dem. Ky.) chairman, said that a threat by the House Military Committee to "expose the motive behind this book" has blocked distribution of the pamphlet by the Army.

Some 55,000 copies of the pamphlet had been purchased by the War Department for distribution in connection with Army orientation courses, but following refusal of the USO to allow it to be circulated in USO centers, the Army followed suit. Age-N.Y., N.Y

The War Department's explanation of its decision not to use the pamphlet because some of its material was regarded as inadequate, doesn't sound sincere. The real reason, more likely appears to be the fact that the authors of the pamphlet presented the biological and psychological findings that there is no difference between the races, except for color of skin, and that Northern Negroes were equal in intelligence to Southern white men. 3-18-44

Dr. Gene Weltfish, member of the anthropology department of Columbia University, co-author with Prof. Ruth F. Benedict, Columbia anthropologist, has denied that the pamphlet "contended that economic differences are largely responsible for racial differences", pointing out that no scientific explanation of racial differences such as skin pigmentation was given. What the pamphlet did contend was that economic and educational advantages made a difference in measurement of mentality by intelligence tests, and that such tests showed no difference between the races.

As to the threat made by The Kentucky Congressman to bring the matter out on the floor of the House of Representatives if the Army distributes the pamphlet, Dr. Weltfish commented:

"I hope Mr. May does bring the matter to the floor of the House. The pamphlet does nothing more than present the biological and psychological material in support of an ancient principle that 'all men are created equal,' set out in the Bible, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, and it is time that Southern advocates of racial inequality should be obliged to defend their stand."

A spokesman for the War Department is not intended for soldiers in the orientation quoting as explaining that the pamphlet was courses but for use of officer-instructors as

"THE RACES OF MANKIND"

Age-N.Y. 3-18-44

STRANGE how a little pamphlet, which tells the truth, should cause so much concern in these United States. And yet that is just what "The Races of Mankind", published by the Public Affairs Committee, Inc., of New York City, has done.

First, it showed the USO up in a very unfavorable light when that organization banned background mateial to help counteact the Nazi theory of a super-race. What better material, then, could the Army use to help counteract the Nazi theory of a super-race than the use of this pamphlet? Unless, of course, the Army is interested in helping to counteract the Nazi theory of a super-race only among whites.

The Army's Jim Crow Policy

Amsterdam News - New York, N.Y.

Assistant Secretary of War John J. McCloy, in a recent statement for publication, has given for the first time a clear-cut explanation of the Army's basic policy with respect to Negro soldiers. By any rule it was a good statement in that it set forth exactly where the War Department stands. He began by saying: 4-22-44

"We have taken as our basic policy that there will be segregation of Negro regimental units. This has been the policy of the Army since the Civil War and even before. We are fighting a tough war and our troops have to go up against seasoned champions. Therefore we cannot trifle with morale. We have to go the tried way . . ."

Mr. McCloy is alarmed that Negroes should be displeased with these conditions for he says quite boastfully that Negro soldiers are much better off in this war than they were in World War 1, and that every effort has been made in this war to give the Negro the same service and equipment received by other men in service.

The secretary complained about the attitude of Negro leaders who have made the Army the focal point of their criticism. He considers our policy short-sighted in the light of improvements that the Army has made in its program dealing with Negro soldiers. 4-22-44

Perhaps Mr. McCloy is correct in his opinion of Negro leaders, but we think the War Department has been short-sighted in its failure to use the daily press, the radio, the movies and other means of communication to publicize the contribution of Negroes in the Army and in other phases of the war effort, both here and abroad.

If the great metropolitan press and official leadership could be prevailed upon to co-operate in the task of creating better race relations in civilian, as well as in Army life, the problems of the War Department would be less difficult. This would certainly have compelling effect on the attitude of Negro leaders and the Negro press, although even that would not stop them from crying out against the evils of segregation and discrimination.

Right now the very excellent film, "The Negro Soldier" is gathering dust on the shelves at Twentieth Century-Fox studio, because the War Department has not shown enough interest in morale to induce the nation's theatres to present the picture. 4-22-44

Thus it seems that there is something more than mere segregation in the Army that has contributed to the lowering of morale among Negro soldiers and civilians. It is, rather, the belief that nothing substantial is being done or even contemplated to undermine the vicious practices which make such segregation considered necessary.

It is regrettable to note that Mr. McCloy presented only one side of the issue.

No Jim Crow Says Army, in Banning This Article

The following are excerpts from an article written by a soldier assigned to 3rd Aviation Engineer Training Unit, MacDill Field, Tampa, Florida, for publication in the Carryall, a paper of the outfit.

It was okeyed by a white lieutenant, but after it had been set up and proofed, the commanding officer, Col. R. J. Burt, banned it.

The heason given by the officer for bannng the article was that there is no racial problem in the army.

6-24-44

No doubt the average colored soldier is of the opinion that he is the least thought of and the most unappreciated member of our nation's armed forces. This not only applies to the soldier, but also to those who are in the Marines and Navy.

As he goes about his daily tasks, his bewilderment increases and at times wonders why he has on a uniform in the first place when he is beset from all sides by bigotry and prejudice.

Despite his likes or dislikes, he must realize that his stake in this war is in a way much greater than that of his white brother-in-arms.

Not only is he fighting the Nazis and Japs, but he is also waging a war against nefarious discriminatory tactics that have plagued his progress as a people, since the days of the carpet baggers. 6-24-44

White Officers Resentful

Many of our colored troops find themselves under the authority of white officers. Many of these officers regard this as a very distasteful assignment, and in some cases have either asked for transfers or made their disgruntlement known to the troops.

On the other side of the fence, we find some colored soldiers who are resentful of the fact that they have to serve under white officers. The usual result of such an attitude on the part of either, or both of them is the lowering of morale on both sides.

To understand fully the colored soldier, white officers should realize that he is a human being. It is granted that the percentage of illiteracy among colored troops is higher in proportion to that of white troops.

This is the result of inferior educational opportunities. Nevertheless, the colored man is making great strides in the field of education. 6-24-44

This has resulted in a soldier who is definitely above par, mentally and physically, over the colored GI of World War I.

Realizing this the officer should strive to deal with his men in a manner that will not offend the intellegentsia of his command yet meet the approval of the soldiers who have a lesser degree, and in many cases, no education whatsoever.

Colored Soldiers' Duties

On the other side of the ledger, the colored soldier should strive to better himself. He should (along with the white GI) put aside all petty racial animosities and prove himself worthy of the democracy for which he cries.

In the post-war world, when everyone will be scrambling for the spoils, he can voice his opinion and rest assured that it will bear an unquestionable amount of weight. 6-24-44

Collectively speaking, if both white officers and colored enlisted men, plus those of the Marine and Naval components, put the unfortunate prejudices of the past and present behind them and work hard towards winning this terrible war, we will find that as a result of this war-time co-operation, post-war collaboration will be much smoother.

Tries Suicide As Protest To Armed Forces Jim Crow

Amsterdam News - New York, N.Y.

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON (ANP)—A suicide pact was entered into two years ago by three students at Howard University as a protest to what they considered the unfair treatment of Negroes in the armed forces, and the treatment generally accorded Negroes in the United States. The pact was to be perpetrated on the steps of the Capitol.

Three weeks ago one of them, Pvt. Norman W. Spaulding of Chicago, slashed his wrist four times with a razor blade in an attempt to live up to the agreement he and his classmates had solemnly entered into. Today he is confined to a "restraint ward" at Walter Reed Hospital.

Navy Yard Will Abolish 'C' Badges

BROOKLYN. — Brooklyn Navy Yard badges carrying the letter "C" to designate colored employees will be abolished according to a statement by navy officials to the FEPC here this week. Workers had been compelled to wear badges for several years in spite of protests. A series of conferences with navy officials here and in Washington resulted in the change.

Several skilled workers in the navy yard secured promotions as a result of FEPC investigations this year.

Redistribution Center Plan Of Army Shuts Negroes Out Of Hotels

Informer — Houston, Texas
12-9-44

By Harry McAlpin

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA)—The Army Service Forces, under Lieut. Gen. Brehon Somervell—now famed as the author of the statement concerning returing Negro servicemen, "I'd like to dump the coons in the middle of the desert"—has set up a priority system for referring soldiers to the hotel-type redistribution centers as opposed to the camp-type centers. The priority system is one which works to the detriment of a disproportionately large number of Negro servicemen.

Highest priority will go to men who have been patients in hospitals overseas and nearing completion of their convalescence but not quite ready for duty. In this same group will be placed prisoners of war who have been repatriated or have escaped.

Second priority will go to men with combat awards and the greatest length of service overseas. This will probably be the largest group qualifying for hotel accommodations.

After these groups are accommodated in the luxury hotels maintained by the Army if the hotel accommodations are not exhausted, other men may be sent there, probably on the basis of length of service overseas and physical condition.

Because Negroes are used overseas primarily in capacities which give little or no opportunities for winning combat awards, it is apparent they will get few of the hotel accommodations.

Just two months ago, the Army was a very rosy hue from the red faces of the brass hats resulting from the furore raised when jim-crow redistribution centers were planned for the Theresa Hotel in New York and the Pershing Hotel in Chicago which were discarded only after President Roosevelt stepped in and ordered a change of plans. Memory of this fact has given rise to speculation as to whether the priority system—which on the face seems a natural procedure—isn't really a move to defeat the housing of any large number of Negroes in the luxury-type hotels maintained as redistribution centers in various resort locations.

So far, only one camp has been activated as a redistribution center. It is Sam Houston in Texas. The NNPA pointed out in a release at the time the Army announced its revised redistribution center program that persons familiar with the usual Army plan of operation had cautioned Negroes to watch closely to see that when the camp phase of the program was put into effect that Negroes are not herded into Southern camps where their opportunities for relaxation and recreation will be hampered by the traditions and customs of the communities in the surrounding area. That caution seems to hold good still.

War Dept. Gets 13 Points on Treatment of Soldiers

AFRO-American Balt., Md.

Recommendations Cover Lectures to White GI's, Fair Trials, End of Red Cross Bias

WASHINGTON

Thirteen recommendations, ranging from lectures to American white soldiers to a special board of review for court-martial cases, were made by Walter White in a report to the War Department, it was revealed here last week. They included:

OFF LIMITS—That General Eisenhower's directive to abolish "off limits" of towns and pubs (taverns) be enforced in all areas. Colored soldiers were found to rescout bitterly the off limits orders, or orders setting "odd" and "even" nights for white and colored troops to visit towns and places of amusement.

Discriminatory Punishment

COURT MARTIAL—A special board of review of court-martial cases. "Great unhappiness" has resulted among colored soldiers "because of their belief that they are punished more quickly and more severely than white soldiers." The special board of review should include an eminent colored lawyer with appropriate rank.

COMBAT TROOPS—Send colored combat troops to England. Stories were being circulated that there are no colored combat troops in England because colored men are "afraid to fight." White termed "unfortunate" the fact that, with the exception of some anti-aircraft units, only colored service troops had been sent to the European theatre.

Mixed Air Units Urged

Colored medium-bomber crews should be sent to England "to fly in non-segregated units," and service troops now stationed there should be given refresher courses in the use of combat weapons, as "many of these troops will closely follow the assault waves of invasion, will be under fire, and need to be made competent in the use of weapons."

5-27-44

Colored and white fighter squadrons should function in the same groups and the conversion of the 2nd Calvary division into service troops should be recommended.

In connection with the morale value of the presence of colored combat troops, more colored officers above the rank of captain should be sent to England.

Action On Rumors

ANTI-COLORED RUMORS—Some colored soldiers abroad have taken the spreading of vicious and fantastic rumors about members of their race as a joke, but some have resented these stories deeply; G-2 (Army Intelligence) should try to track down and scotch morale-sapping stories.

There is less anti-colored propaganda in the Mediterranean than in England, but Army Intelligence can run down the people who were issuing leaflets, placards and other material seeking to poison Italians against colored people.

MILITARY POLICE—White MP's are armed, but colored MP's are not. No MP's should be armed except when guarding payrolls.

PATERNALISM—Paternalistic attitudes on the part of white officers is resented. Both well-educated and less-educated colored people resent being treated as "boys." The idea that Southern white officers are best for colored troops because they "understand" colored people should be abandoned, although many white officers from the South are fair and decent in their treatment, while there is no guarantee that a man will be free from prejudice just because he happens to be from the North.

Whites Need Lectures

LECTURES—Lectures to American white troops aboard ships as they near England, on the difference between the British and American attitudes toward color, together with lectures to British troops by competent Americans, on America and the true place of the colored man as a citizen of his country, would be helpful.

A connection was noted between the venereal disease rate among colored troops and the attitude which has barred them from normal association with respectable families. A soldier was quoted as saying they were more and more restricted to women picked up in pubs. A colored physician should be attached to the office of the Chief Surgeon.

More colored actors and singers are needed for the entertainment of both white and colored troops.

Red Cross Flayed

RED CROSS—The "white" and "colored" Red Cross clubs located in many areas introduce segregation to the British, and deny white and colored American soldiers the opportunity to know each other better. The non-segregated pattern of one club was cited as a model for the Red Cross everywhere.

LAGGING BEHIND—Continuance of segregation and discrimination is in part responsible for a less determined spirit in the Army than is necessary to meet the very crucial days which lie ahead before this war is won.

A REAL DEMOCRATIC ARMY

Defender — Chicago, Ill.
9-9-44

Shortly after the start of Selective Service, the army issued a statement reaffirming its Jim Crow policy. The reason given was that the army's job is to fight a war and not solve the nation's social problems.

The army dominated by southern influence has thus far not only kept Negroes in separate units but assigned most of them to engineers, quartermaster and other service groups. Seventy per cent of all Negro soldiers are in service units.

From the very beginning progressive groups headed by the N.A.A.C.P. advocated the trial establishment of a volunteer mixed regiment. This group was to be composed of only those whites and Negroes who agreed to be placed in this mixed unit. To date the army has not touched it.

But despite this, the U. S. Army has helped train a unit composed of blacks and whites. They did it for the British. These troops will never wear the U. S. Army uniform. This unit, although taking their place as a full fledged fighting unit alongside other British in shrouded with secrecy, is made up of recruits from the British Caribbean possessions. Trinidad furnished about 22 per cent and the rest came from Jamaica, Barbadoes, British Guiana, Bermuda, the Windward Islands, Leeward Islands, British Honduras and the Bahamas.

Although no definite information is available, it is estimated that the Caribbean regiment is composed of about half Negroes and half whites. There are Negroes holding the rank of major. This is not a service group. Their weapons include Bren guns, mortars and anti-tank guns, and these men will

But we cannot dismiss the feeling that the fifty Negro sailors in California, who have just received sentences ranging from eight to 15 years on one specification of mutiny for refusing to load ammunition after scores of their comrades had been killed and injured in the disastrous Port Chicago explosion, are, in a sense, martyrs.

These boys went into the Navy expecting to receive the same treatment as other seamen and hoping to be able to strike a blow for democracy.

Instead they found themselves doing the arduous, unsung, undistinguished and dirty work of laborers and stevedores with no hope whatever of getting transfers to active, military service.

12-2-44

Their experience taught them that they were not in a democratic institution, but a jim-crow institution where colored men could do only the dirtiest and most dangerous work without any of the compensation derived by white boys of their same age and rank.

It is easy to understand their state of mind when they saw their buddies blown to bits and were asked to take the same chances they took.

Fed up with their status as second-class citizens fighting in a first-class war, they could see no reason why they should risk their lives for little or no reward.

True, they should have done as they were ordered, as all good sailors and soldiers should, but all of us can understand why they balked, and to that extent they are martyrs, paying the penalty for the sins of a Nation.

This sorry case should be a warning to the Navy to change its racial policy and to give colored youths the same opportunity to serve in all branches of the Service as white youths and to serve alongside them, rather than in jim-crow units.

Will They Try to Discredit Our GI's?

N.Y. Amsterdam News 12-2-44

At the conclusion of the first world war, army and other high officials made the most cruel, untrue and unjust attacks upon Negro troops ever perpetrated against any group of citizens. They were accused of being yellow, rapists, and many other bestial things. Unfortunately, such rumors were believed by many people to the discredit of the entire colored race.

N.Y., N.Y.

Unless the U. S. Government halts its traditional practices of discrimination and jim crow against some 900,000 Negro citizens in the armed services in this war, they will be attacked the same as their fathers and brothers were in the first world war. The responsibility rests entirely in the hands of the Government.

Although army officials from General Marshall down make the hypocritical excuse that they have a war to win and have no time to solve the race question, the army itself is the chief surveyor of race prejudice, discrimination and segregation. Wherever Negro and white troops are stationed in the north the army has established jim crow camps, recreational facilities, etc. As a result Negroes are now discriminated against in such places as Seattle, Washington, and Portland, Ore.

Indeed, the army and its Commander-in-Chief must be indicted for not only condoning jim crow and discrimination, but also for its spread at home and abroad. The sad status of the colored service men is a grave national issue. If something isn't done to improve it, it may cause a serious blow up after the war.

Un-Covering Washington

By HARRY S. McALPIN

White House Correspondent

(Released Through the Atlanta Daily World by NNPA)

N.Y. Amsterdam News 4-22-44

N.Y., N.Y.

WASHINGTON—When an Army officer with several years' ratings of "excellent" finds his morale so low as result of service in the South where he has been subjected to discriminations, insults, segregation and lack of opportunity to use his skills to the fullest, says he would feel better if his fellow-Americans would just treat him like they do the Nazi prisoners—it's time for the War Department to sit up and take notice.

This officer is a Negro. He is educated. He is not a "squawker". He has been a good soldier. He admits a lot of progress has been made—over a hard, bumpy road—toward improvement of the Negro's plight in the Army. He cites the advance in aviation brought about through the efforts of Judge Hastie, of the present Civilian Aide, Truman Gibson, and public pressure—particularly the Negro press. He is not unmindful of the increased number of Negro officers as compared to the last war, nor of the broadened base of training given Negro enlisted men.

it is from a man who is living it every day. He can't do much, if anything about it as a member of the armed forces. He has gone on being a good soldier and an "excellent" officer—as he should.

The correction of such conditions should be a "must-drive" on the part of civilian Negroes and liberals during the Victory-year of 1944 as an integral part of the spirit of democracy—not to mention the political campaign this fall.

Too Many Lack Respect

But he is bitter about the lack of respect the uniform of his country gets when it is draped upon the body of a Negro—officers and enlisted men alike.

And significantly, he says, the problem is not among the rank and file, in the Army, nor among the lower ranks of officers. Whites and Negroes can and do work together, play together, eat together, whenever they are not ordered not to do so. White officers have insisted he accompany them to hotels, restaurants, etc., in the deepest South. He has done so. White enlisted men go to the "colored" movie on the post, though Negroes are refused tickets to enter the "white" movie. He has seen white soldiers, in protest against discrimination, take the seats at the "reserved tables" for Negroes in mess halls, where Negroes have been ordered to sit, but the whites have not been ordered not to sit.

The "problem," he says, is usually the creation of the top ranking officers, who "decree" separate movies, separate mess halls or tables, separate officers' clubs, separate seating on buses, separate toilets, etc. "In the interest of harmony, good order and morale," or "in compliance with local laws and customs," they generally say. Yet they do these same things in Iowa, Michigan, New Jersey and most places outside of the deep South, even where laws and customs are in direct opposition to the Army policies of segregation—even when past experiensce proves the detrimental effect on morale.

Many Are Jealous

What is needed, says this officer, is orders from Washington on the matter of race. Every officer, and particularly those wearing "leaves" and "eagles" and "stars," are "order-minded." They are jealous of their rank and conscious of the shame they may bring upon themselves and their families by disobeying orders. They would even curb their prejudices "on orders."

A lot of us have arrived at similar conclusions by observation from the "outside." Here

"Fixing" Responsible for Keeping Negroes Out of Key Positions At Base; Want Colonel Davis to Return

Courier – Pittsburgh, Pa.

By JACK DAY, Special Correspondent

(Third In a Series) 9-30-44

WHEN the Tuskegee Army Air Field was planned, it was announced that it would be an ALL-Negro field. Three years later, the field is being run by a clique which perpetuates white officers in all of the key positions. Why? Who is responsible? Those who know Army planning, say that no other Army base in the entire armed forces has had such an uninterrupted tenure of its key personnel as has the Tuskegee Army Air Field. It is a known Army policy that key men on Army bases are constantly shifted elsewhere to prevent the forming of such vicious cliques as the one that exists here at Tuskegee. Why has such a clique been condoned at the only "All-Negro" field in existence? 9-30-44

One explanation is that the training of Negroes has remained as an experiment subject to the whims of some individual or operating agency that has set himself or itself up as an "authority on how to handle Negroes." The conclusion here is that the operation of TAAF is not subject to the overall policy of the Army Air Forces. It is pointed out that if TAAF were considered by headquarters, Army Air Forces, as the 2143rd Base Unit (its proper Army designation) instead of as "The Negro Field," this field would have experienced the same turnover of key personnel as any other such unit. Negroes here say that somewhere along the channel from headquarters, Army Air Forces, to Colonel Hazard, the responsible party or parties will be found.

WHAT ABOUT IT, MR. SECRETARY?

This writer feels that any charge that the perpetrator of such a policy may be found as high up as headquarters, Army Air Forces, must go even farther and say that Secretary of War Stimson either condones or is ignorant of the existence of such a policy. It is not expected that the Secretary of War will have so much time on his hands that he can supervise the running of any one air field, but if he has not insisted on being thoroughly informed as to the spirit under which THIS FIELD is run, then he has laid himself open to the burning criticism of the Negro population of the Nation who are anxiously awaiting the outcome of this so-called experiment. Who keeps the word of the War Department, anyway? Negroes ask. Is the Secretary of War too busy, even at a time like this, to protect the hopes of 13,000,000 citizens from the ravages of the petty conspiracy now on a rampage at Tuskegee Army Air Field? Negroes say that if Secretary of War Stimson condones such a policy then the promise to make this an ALL-NEGRO field was never a faithful one. What hope is there for anyone, they ask, if the War Department, the strength of a Nation, is operating on broken promises? 9-30-44

Headquarters Army Air Forces must be a very busy place at this time. One can imagine all sorts of charts and maps with vari-colored pins protruding in a jagged panorama, but Negroes here say that someone had better pull out the pin covering this field and give it some close examination. They say that headquarters AAF should remember that it is a policy-making body, subject and answerable to ALL of the people of this country. They point out that many Army officials from headquarters have visited Tuskegee and should know the score. Have they inspected thoroughly with knowledge of the far-reaching interests involved? Or have they winked and laughed at the intimidation of "The Negroes" at Tuskegee?

MAXWELL FIELD

To Maxwell Field, in Montgomery, headquarters of the Southeast Army Air Forces Training Command, has gone the honor of being the operating agency for "the experiment." Negroes here point out the predicament of the small contingent of Negro troops stationed there as a positive example of how officials at Maxwell Field stand on the question of equality and fairplay for Negro soldiers. As ditch diggers, garbage mongers and barracks flunkies, Negro troops there are forced to be "hewers of wood and drawers of water for their more favored brethren." How, Negroes ask, can they expect justice from such an atmosphere as an operating agency? 9-30-44

Is there even a greater clique at Maxwell Field supporting the clique here? If so, Negroes say that the whole SEAAFTC needs a thorough "going over and weeding out." If not, then the officer there who approves the policy at Tuskegee is responsible to the War Department, the Negro people and the Nation for condoning or perpetuating such a dastardly crime against the loyal Negro officers who have come to Tuskegee.

Negroes are amazed that the War Department would trust the handling of an "experiment" which means so much to so many, to some irresponsible subordinate at Maxwell Field. Whatever goes on outside TAAF Negroes can only surmise for the machine works smoothly and there is no proof. Nevertheless, like the fellow who consistently lost his shirt playing Twenty-One to the dealer who always hit nineteen with the deuce, they know that somewhere between Maxwell Field and Secretary of War Stimson, somebody has sold somebody a "bill of goods." They say that no fairminded American will appreciate the soiled condition of those goods when they are hung on the line to air out. 9-30-44

COLONEL PARISH

Foppish, polished, affable Colonel Noel F. Parish, Commanding Officer of Tuskegee Army Air Field, has shaken more hands and flashed more smiles than a Republican Presidential candidate in the early days of the New Deal. Negro audiences have been hypnotized by his stylish decorum in rendering speeches. He is a man gifted with the art of beautiful expression. His witty remarks have had Negro audiences rolling in the aisles; that is all except one—the audience of Negro officers here who know the story and can't hear his jokes. His jokes fall on deaf ears to Negro officers here for they remember all too well the many qualified Negro officers who have passed through here in one long line of bitterly disappointed and disillusioned men.

Colonel Parish is a politician and a diplomat. Negro officers here say that no other man alive can paint as beautiful a picture of the future to the Negro captain, over whom he is about to place a white second lieutenant, as can Colonel Parish.

PARISH VISITED SELFRIDGE FIELD 9-30-44

Most serious indictment is that Colonel Parish has set himself up as an authority on Negroes. It is said that he has read the complete works of Booker T. Washington and has exhausted the scientific files on anthropology. It is also said that it would have been far better if he had read, instead, the Constitution of the United States. Negroes here say that it is impolitic for any one to be so presumptuous as to give the impression that he is an "authority" on a race of people. They say that the only way to be an authority on Negroes is to BE ONE at Tuskegee Army Air Field.

One Negro here remembers that when there was some disturbance at Selfridge Field some time ago, Authority-on-Negroes Parish dispatched himself to the scene. It is not known what he actually said or did there, but shortly thereafter ALL Negro flight troops were transferred to the hell-hole at Waterboro, S. C. Again, when the fighter group stationed at Selfridge received orders to go overseas, Authority-on-Negroes Parish was once again on the scene.

CRACKED JOKES AT GRADUATION 9-30-44

Another Negro here recalled a certain graduation exercise most vividly. It is a custom in the AAF to have graduation exercises for each class completing its flight work. In the auditorium for this occasion were mothers and fathers of graduating cadets who had come many miles to witness this sacred tribute to their sons; some of whom they might never see again. Imagine the gall of Colonel Parish, the Commanding Officer of the field, who opened his remarks on that solemn occasion by telling a sly and profligate joke about the occasion on which he was mistaken for a Negro.

"Strangely enough," my informer recalled, "some stupid Negroes actually laughed at the damn joke."

Among the cadets who sat there at their graduation, there was not even the slightest twitch of a facial muscle—only a deafening cataleptic silence. They knew. They had been through the depressed atmosphere of Colonel Parish's administration. They felt that they were entitled to more at their graduation than sarcastic jokes about races. Two of the cadets graduating that morning have since died at the controls of their planes.

IS PARISH RESPONSIBLE? 9-30-44

Negroes here draw a comparison between Colonel Parish and Colonel Kimble (now Brig. Gen.) who preceded him as Commanding Officer of this field. They say that Colonel Kimble was a man who had no love for Negroes and did not try to hide that fact. Colonel Kimble spoke out and at least Negroes knew where he stood. Not so with his successor Colonel Parish who seeks with smiles and beautiful words, to camouflage his real beliefs and acts of discrimination. Negroes here point out that Colonel Parish is by far the more dangerous of the two and should be looked upon as such. They say that he is riding to the top as an Air Corps officer, purely on the strength of the supposition that he is THE Air Corps officer to "handle" Negroes. In view of this fact it is said that in this country "All Gaul" is not divided into three but TWO parts: viz, United States Army Air Forces and Parish Army Air Force.

This, then, is the picture of the Commanding Officer of Tuskegee Army Air Field as given by a cross-section of Negroes here in Tuskegee. Is HE responsible for the fact that No Negroes Are Serving In Key Positions At This Field? 9-30-44

The first answer that comes to the mind is the fact that ALL ASSIGNMENTS OF OFFICERS TO THEIR DUTIES ON ANY ARMY POST ORIGINATE WITH THE COMMANDING OFFICER. In fact, the assignment of officers to their duties is listed as one of the MOST IMPORTANT tasks of a Commanding Officer. If Colonel Parish is the FAIRMINDED angel that he would have Negroes of this country believe, Why Has Colonel Parish Persisted In Assigning Only White Officers To Key Positions At Tuskegee Army Air Field?

Also, is Colonel Parish not the one who calls the liquidated Negro officer in to placate him with a beautiful picture? Does this not constitute Complete Knowledge of What is Happening to this Officer and the Necessity for Letting him Down as Easily as Possible?

(By this time the reader is saying that this is 1944 and I am writing about a unit of the most democratic army on earth. Certainly, no such discrimination could exist without some justification being offered as to why it was necessary. There IS an implied explanation and it will sting and shock you as it did the writer).

The explanation for appointing only white officers to key positions at TAAF is that in all of the branches of the Armed Forces there are no Negroes qualified to fill these positions. Not only that, but here at this field there are no Negroes qualified or with enough intelligence or previous experience who can be trained to qualify. What a reflection this seems to be on the intelligence and preparedness of countless Negroes in this country who are successfully filling far more responsible jobs than even that of Commanding Officer of Tuskegee Army Air Field. 9-30-44

INSIDIOUS MANNER

The insidious manner in which the above conclusion is drawn provides a new low for Army Air Force policy. Negroes here are appointed to positions for which they are either ill-suited or not trained. When a Negro officer, so appointed, fails in his duties, there is a spirt of "I told you so" on the part of the administration. Having thus "convinced" Negro officers that they are incapable of successfully holding such positions, a white officer is then appointed. 9-30-44

One graphic instance of this technique is shown in the first half-hearted attempt to use Negroes as flight instructors. When the very first class of Negro cadets graduated, it was decided to try them out as flight instructors. Consequently, Lieutenants DeBow, Ross, Custis and Roberts were appointed as flight instructors. A short time later they were removed. Colonel Parish is alleged to have used this as an example that Negroes would not make good flight instructors. It is admitted here that these four men were not as proficient as the white instructors were at the time. That, however, was no proof that Negroes in general could not instruct. Nor was it even proof that these four men could not instruct. In the first place, these four men had just graduated. In controlling the cadets under them they were attempting to teach men with whom they had, only a few weeks before, been associated as fellow cadets. Second, unlike all of the white instructors who had gone to an Instructors' school and had completely failed as instructors, this would constitute no proof that Negroes as a race of people could not perform in positions for which they are ill-suited or not trained. When a Negro officer, so appointed, fails in his duties, there is a spirt of "I told you so" on the part of the administration. Having thus "convinced" Negro officers that they are incapable of successfully holding such positions, a white officer is then appointed. 9-30-44

ill-APPOINTS FORMER BUSINESSMAN TO PX

Another instance of the technique of appointing Negroes to positions for which they are unprepared is that of Next came Negro Captain Martin to succeed Captain McCoy. Captain Martin had been a teacher of physical education as a civilian. Exchange here on the recalled that first, Ne- (now Major) McCoy, was appointed Post Ex- By no stretch of imagination could cer. Imagine the post- one expect a teacher of physical outstanding lawyer education to make a success of an the task of buying and intricate system of bookkeeping as commodities and balances demanded of a Post Exchange officer.

Finally, came Negro Captain Percy Jones, who as a member of the Army Reserve for many years had never served in a similar capacity. It is said that he also failed to do a good job in the Post Exchange. 9-30-44

Shortly after this fiasco of appointments the word was spread around—"Negroes simply could not operate the Post Exchange." The stage was now set. White Captain Bowen, a former businessman, was appointed to the position.

In all fairness, this writer could not prove the intent in the mind of Colonel Parish's administration concerning these above appointments. Nevertheless, his failure to bring to the field some Negro officer capable of doing the job, along with his unwillingness to send some Negro officer from this field to be trained at the Army's Post Exchange school, forces the conclusion that neither Colonel Parish nor his administration was committed to the policy of placing a capable Negro officer in charge of the Post Exchange.

WANT COL. DAVIS AS COMMANDER 9-30-44

By his talks and acts, Colonel Parish has proved that he does not look with fairness upon the Negro people as human beings no different from any other man. He believes that Negroes are inferior in many respects as shown. Somehow, he has come to the conclusion that he has been appointed the lord protector of Negroes in Army aviation and thus always knows what is best for his "children." He has masqueraded as the Negro's friend and at the same time used underhand methods to relegate him to the ranks of the peculiar and inferior. He has sought to twist the basic premise of anthropology to prove to Negro officers, wearing the uniform of their country, that they are inferior to others. He has written a new set of Army regulations for the operation of this field. He is building himself with the War Department as THE authority on Negroes. It is said that he is in the act of compiling his own record of Negroes in the Army Air Forces to be submitted to the War Department as a doctrine by which Negroes are to be judged in other wars. Knowing his warped ideas and theoretical patterns concerning Negroes as a race of people, they say here that he is the most dangerous influence in the future of Negroes in the Army Air Forces. 9-30-44

Colonel Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., has served TWO assignments overseas; Colonel Parish has served NONE. Every Negro I talked with agreed on this one desire: They want Colonel Davis back here immediately as Commanding Officer of Tuskegee Army Air Field.

Launch Million Dollar Radio Fund To Bring End To Army Jim Crow

N.Y. Amsterdam News 11-18-44

"Today it is more imperative than ever for Negroes to unite into one voice and protest the injustices heaped upon them," declared Edgar G. Brown before a special meeting of the Baptist Ministers Conference of Greater New York and vicinity held at Metropolitan Baptist Church Tuesday.

Mr. Brown, director National Negro Council, outlined a nation-wide drive by the council to raise $1,000,000 for a Radio Broadcast Fund to "keep up the fight for justice and equal rights with no jim crow for our million servicemen, women and returning war veterans." The Ministers Conference endorsed the program and pledged full support.

Invited by the conference to outline what program should be adopted to end jim crow and abuse in the armed services, Mr. Brown pointed out that nearly one million persons throughout the country signed petitions (issued by NNC) asking the President (Commander-in-Chief) to end army discrimination and establish equality, and reported that to date nothing has been done.

Even worse, Mr. Brown outlined recent abuses such as an army officer and his wife being ousted from the Arlington Hotel in Hot Springs, Ark., and "the cold-blooded murder of a GI who sought to protect two of his buddies in Petersburg, Va.—only two days after the reelection of Mr. Roosevelt."

New Plan of Attack

Emphasizing that Negroes cannot afford to take-it-easy after hearing nice-sounding campaign pledges, Mr. Brown urged his audience to take up the fight and force the realization of these disgraceful conditions which confront Negro servicemen and women is over the radio—a new venture in the art of propagandizing the cause of the Negro by Negroes themselves.

In brief, one dollar sent to the National Negro Council, 1717 Euclid Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., by one million individuals will create a Radio Broadcast Fund large enough to go on the air weekly and tell the nation in details of the plight of our people. Once the public is awakened to the real conditions, corrective measures will follow, according to the National Negro Council director.—S. W. G.

Obey Jim Crow or Else, U.S. Tells Service Men

3-20-44 Ohio-American Baltimore Md.

NEW YORK—Precise and "official" information as to what a colored man in uniform may expect by way of personal humiliation if assigned to a training camp in the South was revealed last week by the Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Forces.

The committee, organized on a nation-wide scale, with offices at 360 W. 125th Street, to fight jim crow in uniform, began national distribution this week of a sheet of instructions titled "Laws Concerning Segregation of the Races."

The sheet, an exact reproduction by photo-offset of the original mimeographed paper, is, according to the committee, the key part of a "so-called indoctrination course" given every colored trainee upon arrival at the Naval Air Technical Training Center in Memphis, Tenn.

Called Typical Example

"The paper is all the more damning," the committee adds, "in that it is not an isolated instance of official backing up of jim crow by Federal authorities, but rather is typical of the kind of 'indoctrination' colored troops are subjected to throughout camps in the South."

While the committee points out that "it comes as no surprise that the army and navy carefully practice segregation," it adds, "it comes with something of a shock to see the details actually on paper and to read the cold, contemptuous language in which it is written."

The offending "order" picks up all of Dixie's jim-crow laws, rules and regulations providing for separation of the races in public transportation, hotels, restaurants and places of amusement, and places behind them the official sanction of the Federal Government.

The so-called "indoctrination" paper in full follows:

Laws Concerning Separation of Races

1. The laws of the State of Tennessee require the separation of races on all public transportation systems in this State.
2. Members of the colored race upon entering a street car or bus shall occupy those seats which are located at the rear portion of street car or bus and whenever seats in the bus or street car become vacant which are to the rear of any member of the colored race, such person shall vacate the seat which he then occupies and move back and occupy the rear seat which is then vacant.
3. The conductor or other person in charge of the street car or bus shall have the right to increase or decrease the space so set apart for either race, or he may require any passenger to change his seat when or so often as the change in passengers may make such change necessary.
4. All passengers on street cars or buses are required to take the seats assigned to them, and any person refusing to do so, shall leave the street car or bus, or if they remain in the street car or bus after having been asked and refuses to take the seat assigned to them shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not more than twenty-five dollars ($25).
5. The laws of the State of Tennessee also give to the owners and their employees of hotels, inns, theatres, public houses, moving picture shows, restaurants, places of amusement, or other business the right to determine for themselves the kind of patronage, customers, or guests they desire to have, and to exclude from their premises or business any person or persons for any reason they think necessary.

Army Jim Crow Slaps Negro Actors

Amsterdam News New York N.Y.

Negro Stars Of "Hi, Yank" Did Not Go To Lake Placid Because Of Racial Identity

Another case of Jim Crow in the Army was revealed to the Amsterdam News with the disclosure this week that three of the stars of the Army show, "Hi, Yank," did not go with the rest of the theatrical company when the outfit moved to Lake Placid, N. Y., because of their race.

The three, Sgt. Bobby Evans, long a popular figure in the theatre; Cpl Jimmy Boxwill, a featured artist with Cab Calloway before he was inducted, and WAC Pvt. Suzie Brown opened with the show at Ft. Dix, N. J., August 7. The Philadelphia daily papers who reviewed the show, hailed the entire cast with particular praise heaped on the Sepian stars.

The show travelled throughout the 2nd Service Command, consisting of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and the District of Columbia. No animosity toward the three Negro performers was found except in isolated instances. At all camps the company lived together as a unit.

A few weeks ago the unit was detailed to Lake Placid to work on other shows, similar to "Hi, Yang!" for performanace for GI's overseas. Three names were missing from the reassignment order. They were the names of Evans,, Boxwill and Miss Brown. 9-23-44

Un-Covering Washington

N.Y. Amsterdam News 9-2-44

By HARRY McALPIN
Atlanta Daily World and NNPA Washington Correspondent

FROM LOUISVILLE, Ky.—This trip to Godman Field, just outside of Louisville has opened my eyes to a thing which has been apparent to most of us, but which never before has been so vividly impressed upon me.

I have been amazed at the versatility of Army officials, from the chief of staff down to post commanders, and taking in all the intervening ranks.

While the stunning progress of the war is a tribute to one type of versatility on their part, that isn't the type I mean.

They are the most versatile group of men in the world when dealing with rules and regulations promulgated by the War Department and laws affecting the operation of that department. Particularly is this true when those laws, rules and regulations have a direct bearing on the Negro soldier.

When Congress passed Sen. Taft's amendment to the soldier voting law prohibiting distribution of political propaganda, the Army was so strict and technical in its interpretation that a modification had to be put through Congress in order to let the boys read a newspaper.

Ignored Jim Crow Ban

But when Congress, in 1940, passed an amendment to the Selective Service Act, prohibiting discrimination in selection or training on account of race, creed or color, the Army blandly ignored the mandate and set up separate quotas for white and Negro selectees, sent Negroes to separate training camps, built up a jim-crow army, put Negroes in their own outfits, regardless of their previous training and experience, in service units, and in general told Congress to go to hell.

All this was done at the very top of the War Department, in the face of the fact that the Army, over the signature of the adjutant general, sends out despite the discretion left to the post commander by the Army regulations, all non-commission officers or colored enlisted men in grade 4 months before eligible for promotion to sergeant, etc. It takes 33 months under this system to reach top sergeant. And because of the post theatre at Fort Knox, should tell two Negro soldiers "I don't give a damn about Ulio's sig- exceptions are made, nature or any other, I give the orders at this theatre and you either sit in the colored section or get out." Gen. Ulio's order against discrimination is "just one of those things, with no teeth in it." But when it comes to the prejudices of the officers and racial blind spots of the officers

Says Col. Davis' Air Unit Suffers From Jim Crowism

Call—Kansas City, Mo.
12-22-44

Can't Obtain Badly Needed Replacements

WITH THE 15TH U. S. AIR-FORCE IN ITALY.—(ANP)—Jim-crow policies, patterns and restrictions, imposed upon Col. B. O. Davis' all-Negro air unit by American racial tradition, are slowly killing the highly publicized jim-crow fighter group. The death knell was sounded when the outfit went into battle and was forced to rely upon the army's jim-crow pattern of filling the casualty gaps in its ranks from Negro air schools.

While the bottom for sufficient air replacements has admittedly been scraped, it is generally known that there has been a drastic reduction in the number of air cadets that are being trained in Negro air schools. The critical personnel situation exists, the men say, because Col. Davis' air unit must rely upon jimcrow air schools to fill all gaps in the ranks.

With 19 months of combat service to their credit, the all-Negro fighter group has seen action over Munich, Vie[illegible] Toulon, Ploesti, Sofia, Belgra[illegible] Friedrichshafen, Budapest and Salerno. They accounted for 17 enemy fighters and bombers in one day's work over the Anzio beachhead and has provided cover for heavy bombers, patrolled harbors, conveyed ships, hunted U-boats and made reconnaissance flights.

Composed of four all-Negro fighter squadrons, it comprises every department for keeping pilots flying, from mess and maintenance to armaments, engineering, morale and administration. All phases of the group's duty routines duplicate those of other U. S. fighter group and all are performed by Negroes.

Nearly 30 per cent of the combined air and ground personnel have attended college, records show, and at least three-quarters of the 200 commissioned officers were born and reared in the North The bulk of the enlisted men come from below the Mason-Dixon line.

Not only are the replacements they get handicapped by having been trained by white instructors without experience, the flyers stated, but they are unfamiliar with the type of aircraft pilots will fly in combat. The inexperience of Negro officers, pilots and mechanics, explained the men, and the mental strain of competition against the entire corps of white pilots and ground crews, constitutes a serious handicap.

Members of this all-Negro air unit are also conscious of differentials applied by the air corps command in the judgment of their performance and feel the effect of intellectual isolation, produced by having all Negroes in one organization away from every other fighter pilot group.

Since high military officials know that the jimcrow air unit can not survive without sufficient personnel replacements and since they have ordered a reduction in the number of trained Negro air cadets at Negro air schools, many of the men believe that anti-Negro army officials may be determined to just let the outfit die from a lack of replacements. It will be a matter of jimcrow killing jimcrow, they point out.

"Back home I've seen a white man kick a Negro till his nose bled," said one Negro pilot from Dixie. "Sometimes I don't know why I fly," he added, "but I guess I want to do my part to prove that Negroes can do their job as well as whites."

Personnel of this all-Negro air outfit represents a cross-section of Negro people. Some are the sons of tenant farmers, cotton pickers and share croppers. One southern born youth admitted that he earned less than $1 a week before entering the army. Another said he had never handled mechanical tools before, coming to this air unit. All of the men are admittedly getting their first real opportunity and are desirous to make good, but entertain no assurance Negroes will be given their proper places in post-war aviation in America.

White And Colored Soldiers To Be Housed Together

Negro Medical Officers To Be Included In Revamped Program Announced By War Department

By HARRY MCALPIN

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—Official announcement of the abandonment of the Army plan to seize the Theresa and Pershing Hotels in New York and Chicago respectively, and to abolish its jim crow proposal for Negro soldiers was made by the War Department on Sunday.

The announcement did not mention the two hotels by name but said "in order to avoid taking over additional hotel facilities in housing shortage areas, Negro returnees will be processed with white returnees through existing northern Redistribution Centers."

For almost a month, after President Roosevelt received protests concerning the proposed seizure of the Pershing and Theresa Hotels for jim crow centers and ordered the Army to work out new plans which would eliminate segregation, the War Department has been trying to work out a "face-saving" statement for release.

PLAN FURTHER REVISED

The plan evolved, in consultation with White House representatives as exclusively revealed by the NNPA last week, was further revised when Secretary of War Stimson reviewed the new proposal and determined that inadequate provisions had been made for the large numbers of soldiers who would be returned to this country come V-Day.

10-14-44

The official announcement says: "The War Department announced today that its program for processing soldiers in Redistribution Centers on their return to the United States from combat areas overseas will be altered and expanded through the utilization of existing Army Camps.

10-14-44

"The expansion is necessitated by a growing volume of soldiers sent back home by the Army's Air, Ground and Service Forces. At present, hotel facilities are being utilized in the Redistribution Program, where the returning veterans are housed while resting and being processed, reoriented, reclassified and reassigned. These hotel facilities, however, are taxed to capacity, and it is becoming increasingly difficult to find additional hotels which would he suitable quarters for the establishment of Redistribution Centers," the announcement states.

On the matter of the previous jim-crow plan, the announcement declares: "Pending the establishment of the camp type Redistribution Centers, and in order to avoid taking over additional hotel facilities in housing shortage areas, Negro returnees will be processed with white returnees through existing northern Redistribution Centers.

Thereafter, all returning soldiers, white and Negro, certified by a medical officer as being most in need of this type of accommodation, will be housed in hotels retained for convalescents in the same manner in which they are at present being cared for in the hospitals or convalescent centers."

NEGRO MEDICAL OFFICERS TO BE USED

Assurance has been given by Assistant Secretary of War McCloy that Negro medical officers will be included in the program for determining whether Negro soldiers should be "certified" as being "most in need of" the hotel type of accommodation. Without this assurance, this is viewed as a weak spot in the program, offering a loophole to keep Negroes out of the hotel centers after the camps are established.

The "same manner" referred to in connection with hospitals and convalescent centers is one of full integration of white and Negro soldiers. This program of non-segregation in these phases of the Army's program has been in effect all along.

As for the Army camp phase of the Redistribution Center program proposed for the future, the Army says: "Under the new Redistribution Program, certain of those Army camps which are better situated and more attractive will be selected for use as Redistribution Centers. Many such camps are becoming available through the movement of trops overseas."

Persons familiar with the usual Army plan of operation are cautioning Negroes to watch closely to see that when this phase of the Army program is put into effect that Negroes are not herded into Southern camps where their opportunities for relaxation and recreaiton will be hampered by the traditions and customs of that section.

The upshot of the Army's announcement for the present is that Negroes will be integrated in the centers at Lake Placid, N. Y., and Atlantic City, N. J.; that the Pershing and Theresa Hotels will not be seized as originally proposed; and that a tremendous step has been taken in combatting jim crow in the Army.

White GI's Tell How Afro American—Baltimore, Md. Unsegregated Army Works

By DWIGHT MacDONALD
(from Politics)

The unsegregated training programs in the army are really a laboratory of race relations on a huge scale. From [illegible] soldier writes: "I lived four [illegible] months in a mixed company without color restrictions (except the less desirable jobs) quite without incidents. There was a small amount of talk about how ern white boys, like myself, found ant. Behind their backs, we com-pared our evidence for contradict-ing the southerners' charge that they 'smelled,' and agreed that they didn't, at least not differently than we did." 8-26-44

Another soldier in ASTP at Camp Lee, Va., writes: "The barracks here are mixed — colored men sleeping, messing, studying with us. First fine feeling the army has given me. Big changes take place when the segregation bar is down."

Men Will Fraternize

A corporal in a southern camp, also in an ASTP course, says: "Here there is no segregation. Even between the southerners and colored soldiers, friendships spring up. It is a great pity that this policy doesn't prevail throughout the country. The fact is that if you put two human beings in fatigues in the same kitchen, they will fraternize."

A lieutenant training for the signal corps at Fort Monmouth, N.J., recently said that he observed no overt friction among the 15,000 colored and white soldiers who went through the unsegregated course with him. Some southerners grumbled privately, but in public treated colored soldiers with cautious courtesy.

My only colored informant, a sergeant, told me an amazing story about his brother, an officer, and a southern lieutenant who was put in the bed next to him in a military hospital in Pennsylvania. 9-26-44

Fast Friends

The southerner objected loudly, but the doctor refused to make the change. After several weeks flat on their backs side by side, the two officers became fast friends, and after they got well, the southerner and his wife took the colored officer out to dinner at a local restaurant.

When the manager balked at serving the colored man, the southerner kicked up a fearful row and carried his point. Afterwards, they went to several night spots, where the southerner absolutely insisted that his new friend dance with his wife.

DISCHARGE OF 15 SEABEES LAID TO RACIAL TROUBLE

Washington, D. C., Dec. 11 (AP).— A naval officer testified today that 15 Negro Seabees were discharged for "unfitness" after racial issues arose in their battalion while they were in Trinidad.

Today's testimony was given by Lt. Comdr. Norman F. Godbe at a hearing granted for the Seabees by the navy's judge advocate general. The Seabees contend no grounds existed for their discharge.

Charges "Seditious Meetings."

Godbe said that tho the men were not charged with specific offenses and were not given dishonorable discharges, they had attended "seditious meetings," attempted "sit-down strikes," "refused to obey orders," and "threatened sabotage." Not all the counts applied to all 15 men, Godbe said.

Arthur Garfield Hayes, New York attorney representing the Seabees, said that because the men have other than an "honorable discharge," they are deprived of certain benefits under the "G. I. bill of rights" and that their discharges carry a "stigma."

Voiced Grievances.

Isaac Glenn McNatt, 27, of 534 W. 152d st., New York City, who edited the battalion's newspaper, testified that he and the ohers had been discharged after attending an off the record meeting called informally Sept. 26, 1943, by the commanding officer of the Trinidad post.

He and the other Negroes, he said, were invited to discuss any grievances, and some of them said that they felt they were being discriminated against in regard to rank because of their race. He said he mentioned no grievances.

The remaining 14 Seabees still are to be heard. Capt. Anton B. Anderson, presiding at the hearing, said a decision probably would not be reached for three or four weeks.

Jim Crow Raised Against Veterans

N.Y. American-Pm News 11-18-44 N.Y., N.Y.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. — That Uncle Sam's Army jim-crow has officially been raised against returning veterans was disclosed here last week when a colored couple was refused admittance to the redistribution center in the famous Arlington Hotel by Army commanders.

Fellow service men and townspeople were incensed when the pair, whose names were withheld were ousted by Army officials after W. E. Chester, veteran manager of the hotel and himself a Southerner, had assigned them to one of the best rooms in the establishment.

The manager, who for many years has employed several hundred colored workers, contended that since many nationalities, including Indians and other darker races were already guests at the resort, he saw no reason that the colored veteran and his wife should not remain.

Sent Back to New York

But an Army captain ordered the couple removed and they were shipped back to Lake Placid, N.Y. The redistribution centers are established for the reorientation of troops who have seen overseas duty before their reassignment to new posts in the United States or in new theatres of war.

The personnel is kept at these posts for periods ranging from two to three weeks, during which they are given thorough physical and mental check-ups. The military part of the program is planned to be carried on as briefly as possible and to take up only a few hours of the day in order to permit complete relaxation of the men.

Facilities are provided so that wives, relatives and sweethearts may visit with the veterans. Such centers are established throughout the country.

Here the simplicity of the problem ends. That complex question of color is permitted to enter, and with it come the difficulties. Negroes be sent to the same redistribution centers with the whites? They've been facing the same death--watching their buddies get wounded--and the same foxholes—sleeping in the same mud—and torturing their souls wondering what and how were doing—just like the white soldier!

But the army, before it thought about the color problem, already had selected 49 hotels in the resort centers at Miami Beach, Fla., Asheville, N. C., Hot Springs, Ark., Santa Barbara, Calif., and Lake Placid, N. Y.

Army "Jim Crow"

As an afterthought, the army selected the Pershing Hotel in Chicago, and now the Theresa Hotel in New York, for its colored soldiers. These they label "for colored." The other 49 are "for white."

The Negro press and Negro leaders and organizations are rightfully raising hell about this segregation. No Negro can afford to condone segregation! This is true despite the fact that the Negro soldier who comes back undoubtedly will be much more able to relax and have that "helluva good itme" in the Pershing and the Theresa. He could hardly get into the frame of mind to go back into battle under the treatment to which he would be subjected when he went out into the town from a hotel in Miami

Rebel at Being Led

Negroes, like all other people, rebel at being led by the hand and told "this is what you must do," on the assumption that it is what they would prefer to do.

The army would be so much wiser and make far a much better program and a wider acceptance of it, if it would give Negroes a choice. With very few exceptions, the Negroes would go to the Pershing and the Theresa. The few who would choose to go elsewhere should be permitted to do so.

But the army's southern hierarchy and its dumbness on race relations has put it in a very embarrassing position, subject to attack. It can still pull itself out and save some of democracy's "face."

Army Needs Men—But White Only; Clamp Lily-White Ban On Specialists

Defender—Chicago, Ill. 12-9-44

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON.—The manpower shortage has hit the army—but not too hard.

There's a critical shortage of lily-white GI specialists, the army indicated this week.

Boldly barring Negro soldiers from a large number of specialist jobs, the United States army is conducting a diligent Jim Crow search to reduce its "critical" need for skilled men.

An order signed by the army's Chief of Staff, General G. C. Marshall, was recently issued by the War department instructing officers to recheck the qualification of their personnel for specialist assignments.

The purpose of the order was "to conserve skilled manpower, maintain morale, and prevent the misassignment and maldistribution of critically needed specialists."

'For White Only'

Qualifications for a number of the "critically needed" specialists appeared to be skilled hands and white skins. 12-9-44

The broad outline of the memorandum ordered officers to assign men "without regard to physical profile." But asterisk-marked as the one regard for physical profile to be watched for, the following positions were listed for GI's who could fit the "whites only" qualification:

Marine Engineer
Locomotive Engineer
Locomotive Mechanic
Diver
Master, Ship
Mate
Master Mechanic, Marine
Mechanic, Marine Engine
Blacksmith
Bridge Builder
Canvas Cover Repairman
Car Carpenter, Railway
Conductor, Railway
Locomotive Fireman

The replacement training centers restricting specialists to "whites only" were the Army Service Force training center at Fort Warren, Wyo., and the ASF training center at Camp Gordon, Johnson, Florida. 12-9-44

The memorandum, No. 615-44, entitled "Critically Needed Specialists" was issued by the War department on September 18, 1944.

The list was slated to be revised each month.

Stubbornness in Race Relations

WASHINGTON—One of the most difficult problems of this war has arisen as result of the Army's desire to do something for its soldiers who have seen action overseas and become battle-weary. The solution the Army is trying is typical of its blindness and stubbornness in race relations.

The Redistribution Center plan, initiated by the Army Air Forces—in which there is no segregation—has struck a responsive chord and has been adopted by the army ground and service forces.

Into these centers men will be brought from overseas after being afforded a short furlough to visit their parents, friends and relatives at home.

The whole purpose of the centers, however, is to get the men in a frame of mind to go back into combat—usually in some other theatre of action. This task is a tremendous psychological problem. Men who have faced death, seen their buddies wounded and die, lived in foxholes, slept in mud, tortured

Negroes, in such men feel when they are brought back to the States that the war for them is over. They are inclined to believe that some of the other fellows, still in this country, should finish the job.

But the Army Knows

But the army knows these battle veterans are its greatest asset. They are needed in combat theatres because of their experience. To get them in the mood to return to war is the job of the redistribution center. The first step in this direction is to have the men relax completely, forget war for a short time, and have a helluva good time in the meanwhile.

their souls wondering what and how their folks back home from the racial standpoint—leaving out the strain it puts on the already inadequate civilian housing in the Negro neighborhoods involved. It is the labeling of them as "Negro" and the restriction of Negroes to these places only.

What's Behind 477th Shift to Dixie?

7-15-44

(The following is condensed from the current issue of Politics, and was written by a bombardier. The 477th Bombardment Group began with 50 officers and 350 enlisted men all colored, and was trained at Mather Field, Calif., with white bomber personnel. Maj. Gen. Ralph P. Cousins first ordered separation of the soldiers in the mess hall. Later the unit was shifted to Selfridge Field, Mich.)

In true Army fashion, officials at Selfridge Field refused to permit 477th officers to apply for membership in the base officers' club, knowing that the men would have to travel 30 miles to Detroit for recreation. Col. Robert L. Selway, Jr., commanding officer of the group, reprimanded the officers for submitting applications, and a letter was read from the base commander stating that it was not the policy of the War Department to mix colored and white personnel in the messes and clubs.

Col. Selway stated that if anyone wanted to use the group to solve any racial problem or to further the race, his services in the group would be considered unsatisfactory.

Maj. Gen. O. D. Hunter, after an unexpected visit, declared there was no racial problem at Selfridge and that he would tolerate none.

Discrimination, he said, had been going on for over 100 years and that it could not be solved overnight.

The country is not ready for the revolutionary change of mixing colored and white officers. The general promised to furnish a separate club. 7-15-44

Shifted to Kentucky

Construction of the separate club was started, only to be halted when the entire group was moved to Godman Field, Ky., under the pretext of field training conditions. The real reason was to shift the 477th to a Southern field where the local jim-crow laws would back the army's policies.

At Godman Field, the group was given the same facilities that accommodated the air corps in the last war, plus one new building.

In comparison, Selfridge Field is one of the best bases in the entire United States and Godman Field is one of the worst.

Because the facilities are inadequate for night flying, one phase of the training program must be carried on elsewhere. The movement was dictated by spite rather than in the interest of the service and the nation.

Conditions Deplorable

The enlisted men are housed in barracks of World War I vintage. The officers' living conditions are likewise deplorable. One high ranking investigating officer was tactfully shunted to inspect the one barracks which most nearly resembles conditions prescribed by the army. 7-15-44

Ironically the barracks housing the pilot personnel was circumnavigated during the inspection by the group commander.

Despite the fact that the flying personnel is confronted with increasing humiliations, and the enlisted men have no incentive to do their best, this group has established a safety record of 137 days without an aircraft accident.

Culminating several investigations was a visit by the second highest ranking officer of the army air forces, Lt. Gen. Barney Giles.

He and his group from the Inspector General's Office called a meeting of all flying officers with the group commander present. The men were asked if there was anything bothering them.

They asked if the group was to remain at its present station to complete its overseas training, and the answer was yes.

With the commanding officer present, no complaints were expressed. The accepted practice for an inspection of this sort is to hold private meetings at which all who have complaints can make them, without fear of future reprisals. 7-15-44

From this inspection, General Giles promised swimming pools, squash courts, an enlarged post exchange, bus service to Louisville and other unimportant items. He was not aware that what the men most desired was freedom from oppression that the South affords.

Bombardiers Sleep in Halls Because of J.C.

COLUMBUS, Ind. (ANP) — So crowded are the barracks being occupied by that portion of the 447th Bombardment Group stationed here that navigators and bombardiers recently arrived are sleeping in the halls of the barracks to which colored officers are assigned.

There are only about 40 white officers and there are many more colored. The whites have a separate barracks which is not nearly full, but colored officers are not permitted to share it. Rumors are that before long the group will be moved back to Godman Field, Ky.

Supported Financially and Morally, FEPC Would Bring Prosperity to the South

July 1, 1944

By M. S. STUART

(The views expressed in this column are those of the writer and do not necessarily express the editorial opinion of The Pittsburgh Courier.—The Editors.)

"HONEY," said my host to his wife, "you came up last night and left the lights downstairs burning all night all over the place. We have a daughter to educate and we cannot afford to waste money like that."

"Well, no matter if I did," retorted wifey hotly, "you waste money, yourself. I remember one time you came out of the bathroom and left the water running. Another time you put too much sugar in your coffee and wasted more coffee to make it right, and when you get in a hurry you grind nearly half your pencil away sharpening it. You waste as much as I do."

Mr. Stuart

"But Honey," my host explained, "those were only petty errors, and, anyway, that is not the point. Blaming each other does no good. What I am trying to show you is that it is to our mutual interest to be economical."

But wifey refused to acknowledge the point. "Talk like nobody makes mistakes but me. Always picking on me," she almost yelled in an angry, screechy note as she stalked out of the room.

"Well," said my host apologetically as he handed me the big daily paper he had been downstairs to fetch, "when my wife sets her head a certain way it is useless to try to show her the point about anything. She construes everything you say as critical and she grasps the most trivial straws to support her contentions."

RIDICULOUS SIMILARITY

The leading editorial in the big daily was about FEPC. So similar to that of my host's wife was the position at the heart of that editorial, and so strikingly trivial the argument advanced in support of it, I was tempted to lay the paper aside and laugh outright. Here it is at last, I thought, an apt picture of the South, a fussy, sensitive housewife who interprets every suggestion for mutual benefit as personal criticism, and thereby fails to co-operate for general improvement.

FROM that editorial, which I consider so utterly unbecoming the high plane of logic and dignity appropriate for a big metropolitan daily, let me quote a brief excerpt or two:

"Supporting the FEPC are organizations in the cities of the North which seek to break down segregation. The obvious answer is to tell them to eliminate segregation in their own communities."

Now, here you have what I consider a compound fallacy. In the first place there is a misstatement of fact in the premise. The organizations supporting FEPC, and the committee, itself, have been more vigorous to eliminate discrimination in employment outside the South than in it. This is so well known that the big daily could not be ignorant of it.

The other brother in the twin fallacy quoted above is the amazing spectacle of a great daily marring its lead editorial by trying to justify unfairness in one section of the country by claiming that the same type of it exists in another area. That is a case of the garlic complaining about the bad breath of the onion, and the puerility of such reasoning is obvious.

BUT the most flimsy argument advanced against FEPC is the big daily's statement that "The Committee contradicts itself in its creation. Sixty-eight of the personnel is colored, 48 white. Only one-tenth of our population is colored."

It is utter childishness to contend that the objective of FEPC is to force employment in defense plants in proportion to population. The impracticability of such a program, if it had been proposed, would have defeated the committee before it got started. If the South were not too blind to see its own best interest, it would be strong for FEPC, for with its large population of Negro laborers, the better wages which fairness in employment would accomplish, would raise the general level of prosperity to the advantage of all, and particularly the white merchant class.

Joe Makes Protest

Joe is said to have protested vigorously, pointing out that he had religiously respected jim crow laws in southern cities and towns but did not have to stand for jim crow on army territory. Both fighters are reported to have been very angry. At this point the MP is said to have asked both to stand for him to the guardhouse. Captain Walter Buck, post provost marshal, is said to have visited them a short time later and explained that the jim crow signs in the post bus depot were ordered by the post commander. A New York Times reporter quotes the white colonel as saying that he does not foresee the time when his outfit will include colored junior officers. Although there are many company officers, captains and lieutenants in a regimental combat team of the 92nd Division in Italy, none ranks white junior officer.

A charge which was flatly denied by the post commander. Lieutenant Carroll's version of the incident is that when the MP's complied, he said, Walter Buck informed him crow rules were in effect only to conform with state camp takes the responsibility of "sorting" passengers at other than have them this colored outfit are white.

Army Denies Louis, Ray Jailed In Jimcrow Tilt

NEW YORK. — (ANP) — A denial to the report that S-Sgt. Joe Louis Barrow, world's heavyweight boxing champion, and Sgt. Ray (Sugar) Robinson, uncrowned welterweight champion, members of the army's morale boxing team, were placed in the guardhouse by a white MP at Camp Sibert, Ala., last week for protesting camp jim crow rules was issued Saturday by Lt. John F. Carroll, post press relations officer.

"I'll bet Louis couldn't even find the stockade there," Carroll said. Carroll admitted that Louis and Robinson were apparently mollified by the jim crow practices on army territory and said they were escorted back to the bus station by MP's.

Separate Busses

The story involving S-Sgt. Joe Louis and Ray (Sugar) Robinson broke when both tried to get bus transportation from the camp to Birmingham after filling an engagement there. According to reports, they discovered that in conformity to local race traditions colored soldiers are assigned to one of three busses; that the bus depot, located on army territory, is divided into "white" and "colored sections." When Ray and Joe grew weary of waiting for a bus, they decided to make their journey back to Birmingham in a taxicab. 4-8-44

While the army had sought to conform to local practices regard-ing the separation of the races, Joe and Ray found that the bus depot is reported to have asked them to leave, the tenant of MP's walked in and ordered them out. Both Joe and Ray asked why. "Do you know what color you are?" the MP officer replied. Joe and Ray then placed in the "white" section with Ray be taken to see the commanding officer. The MP's sat on army territory to have been very angry. At this point the MP is said both to have asked them to the guardhouse. Fifty Sailors Face Munity Charges For Refusal To Work

9-23-44

Special to Journal and Guide

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Fifty Negro enlisted men went on trial Thursday, Sept. 14, in San Francisco, Calif., on charges of mutiny. (Mutiny carries possible death penalty). The men had refused to load a Navy ammunition ship as an aftermath of the Port Chicago, Calif. explosion which claimed 322 lives on July 17.

In response to an inquiry from the JOURNAL AND GUIDE the Navy Department at Washington gave the following statement: 9-23-44

"Immediately following the Port Chicago explosion, the Navy personnel which made up the ammunition loading crews were given short furloughs before beginning loading operations at a new location in the San Francisco area.

"After the men had been at work in the new location a few days, slightly more than 300 Negro enlisted men refused to continue on the job. When orders to work were repeated individually to the men, all but 258 returned to work. 9-23-44

"The Commandant of the 12th Naval District then visited the location to address the insubordinate group. He explained the importance of their work to Navy operations and the serious consequences of refusal to obey orders. The men were given opportunity to explain reasons for their actions. About 25 men did so and spoke freely and respectfully. After the visit all but 44 men stated they would comply with the orders and did so. Later six men stopped work again.

200 FINED

"The approximate 200 men who stayed away from work, but returned after the visit, were tried in Summary Courts and fined. No further action against these men were taken. The 50 who refused to go back to work after the Commandant's visit are those who are now on trial before a General Court for disobedience of orders."

Negro In The War

Many a boy will have been sacrificed in this war upon the altar of racial prejudices. The segregated system in our Army from which we refuse to budge is a cause. According to the GI's Stars and Stripes and reports from the front there is intense resentment because Negroes are in the main, still toting bales and doing the same kind of laboring work they have been relegated to in our peacetime economy. Until recently when an antitank unit went into front line duty in France, it is reported not a single Negro division had been in actual combat with the enemy. Post

Of course, not many Negroes are being killed. The point is, however, that Negroes want combat service. The situation is reported as lowering the morale of both white and Negro troops. General Eisenhower has lavishly praised the men who keep the supply lines, smooth the roads and do the menial services, but Negro boys write home that they want to get at the Heinies, whom they recognize as their natural racial enemies.

Has the Negro guts and courage? That 70 per cent of the amateur and professional fighting champions in the ring have been Negroes, lately, attests to the fact that they have fighting skill and abdominal fortitude. Who can say that in athletic contests of any kind, if given equal training and chance to compete, the Negro athlete is not tops? Even Hitler knows this since the 1936 Olympics. Endurance, neuromuscular skill, and courage are among the outstanding qualities of healthy Negroes in America. In combat in the air, on the seas or land, and in every one of our wars, the Negro has won a fair share of meritorious awards. Whole regiments in the last war were awarded the French Croix de Guerre.

Lieut. Ben Johnson, Columbia University's former track captain, is working in a trucking unit on the French invasion front and regrets that he can't get a crack at the Jerrys. The writer knows of dozens of college-trained boys, some holding graduate degrees with exceptional IQs, loading and unloading lumber or technical noncoms over units of laborers, jobs that any road gang boss with less than a fourth-grade education could do as well.

We keep our Army in a segregated pattern because we don't want to give up the very theory of race that brought on this war. Is it not time to radically alter our thinking? A few good fighting divisions of tough Negro soldiers of the kind of our former Ninth and Tenth Cavalry, and Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Infantry Regiments would possibly speed up our advance in the Rhineland and toward Japan.

Perhaps The Truth Hurts

Army Booklet Called Unfit For Soldiers

Courier – Pittsburgh, Pa.
5-6-44

WASHINGTON, D. C.—"The Races of Mankind" is unfit as reading material for soldiers because it is filled with Communist propaganda and conveys the message that Northern Negroes living under better conditions are intellctually superior to underprivileged Southern whites, a House Military Affairs sub-committee charged here last week.

Headed by Rep. Carl T. Durham (D., N.C.) the committee issued a formal report denouncing the pamphlet which was written by Dr. Ruth F. Benedict and Dr. Gene Weltfish, of the Columbia university department of anthropology and published by the Public Affairs Committee, Inc.

DENOUNCED BY MAY

The pamphlet previously was denounced orally by Rep. Andrew J. May (D., Ky.), the committee chairman, who said the War Department banned the booklet at his request.

The War Department, which purchased 55,000 copies for use in orientation courses, said it changed its plans because the material was "inadequate," and authorized distribution only for "off-duty discussion." 5-6-44

The inquiry into the pamphlet began after certain Southern Congressmen charged the authors indulge in "thinly disguised sophistries" and "drop anthropology for politics, sociology, labor unionization and similar subjects employed by propagandists of Communism."

"Adam and Eve," says the report, "are depicted with navels."

THE BATTLE THE ARMY LOST

Defender – Chicago, Ill.

The Army has rescinded the order making the Theresa Hotel in Harlem and the Pershing Hotel in Chicago rest centers for battle-weary Negro soldiers. This cancellation by the Army came after President Roosevelt issued an order prohibiting the Jim Crow treatment of these war veterans. 10-28-44

The Commander-in-Chief has made it possible for Negro troops to be admitted on an equal basis with white soldiers to the swank Lake Placid club in Lake Placid, N.Y., to the resort city of Santa Barbara, Calif., and to other rest centers to be obtained in northern states.

The President stated that he had no knowledge of the unfair treatment planned for Negro fighting men until it was brought to his attention in the telegram sent by Negro leaders. After meeting with a committee of three prominent Negroes the President immediately instructed the War department to abandon the segregated project. The resulting order was issued by the President without publicity or fanfare. It was just an order.

Contrast this action by President Roosevelt with Republican lip service to the Negro. Republicans emphatically state their opposition to the poll tax, yet will not vote for cloture in order to have the tax eliminated. Republicans advocate the establishment of a permanent F.E.P.C., yet offered no support when the hearings were recently held on this bill. 10-28-44

The new Army policy regarding rest centers can be viewed in three lights. First, it is a signal victory for non-segregation in the Army. Secondly, the comradeship that will be created between Negro and white soldiers during this rest period will, like the comradeship on the battlefield, be a great contribution toward making democracy work after the war. Lastly, it refutes emphatically the Republican charge that President Roosevelt has deserted the Negroes.

Race, Not Mutiny, is Issue in Seamen's Trial---Marshall

Tribune — Washington, D.C.
10-21-44

After listening to three days' testimony of the 50 Negro seamen charged with mutiny for refusal to load ammunition at the Mare Island depot August 9, special NAACP counsel, Thurgood Marshall declared, "These men are tried for mutiny solely because of their race or color."

Following an urgent telephone call from Joseph James, president of the local NAACP branch, asking that National Office assistance be given the defendants immediately, Mr. Marshall flew to San Francisco, where he has been reviewing testimony and interviewing the men.

In his report of proceedings thus fare he charged:

The fatal Port Chicago explosion was on July 17th and many of the accused were in Port Chicago at that time.

Many of them were hurt. On August 9th they were transferred to another island and told to fall in for work, meaning loading ammunition. They did not. Their officers including the Admiral talked to them.

Then their officer asked them the following: "All of you who are willing to obey all lawful orders stand fast. All who are not fall out and give your names to the officers." Some stood fast and others fell out. 10-21-44

Those who fell out were arrested. They were 257 altogethre but it ends up that only 50 are charged with mutiny.

Not An Order

"The men take the position that the above statement by the officer was not considered by them to be an order and what they meant by their actions was that they did not want to load ammunition. They did not mean to disobey an order.

"A typical example of their testimony is that of Seaman Bordenave who is just seventeen. He had enlisted when he was 16; was released when they discovered his age and re-enlisted as soon as he was 17. 10-21-44

He had only been handling ammunition a week and was a 'hatch tender' which meant that he was the one who directed the operator of the winch as to how to lower the ammunition into the hole. No wonder they were all afraid to load ammunition.

"Every man testified that since the Port Chicago affair they were 'afraid to load ammunition.' Three of the accused men handled winches, one had ten months' experience, two had two months' experience . . . all experience was with ammunition. 10-21-44

"Liuet. James F. Coakley, former assistant prosecutor of Alameda County, Calif., under the present Governor Warren is the Judge Advocate. He asks each of the accused who is from above the Mason and Dixon line 'Where are you from?' He never asks any of the good southern boys the question. Today he asked one of the accused where he was from and the man said, 'Chicago.' He asked him where he took boot training, the boy replied, 'Great Lakes,' whereupon Coakley said, 'Didn't they teach you to address officers as Sir? Why can't you say, Sir to me?'"

Insufficient Evidence

There is no sufficient evidence of mutiny or conspiracy.

There is no evidence of refusal to obey a direct order.

These men are being tried for mutiny solely because of their race or color.

The meaning of mutiny, under which these men are being tried is — "collective insubordination with intent to disobey a lawful command."

In order to find defendants guilty of mutiny it is necessary for prosecution to prove there was collective insubordination and concerted refusal or omission which consists of a persistent to obey orders, or to do duty. None of these men appears to have conspired collectively to disobey or perform duty with insubordinate intent.

Hastie's Resignation

It is now more than fifteen months since William Hastie resigned as civilian aide to the Secretary of War. His job was to advise on matters and policies touching upon the colored soldier.

At the time of his resignation there was much in the record to recommend to him the course he followed. His action seemed not only plausible but laudable.

Mr. Hastie hoped that by his resignation the scales would be struck from the eyes of the policy-makers in the War Department. He hoped to make a live and living issue of specific army policy dealing with colored Americans.

He had met anti-colored bias at every turn. He got a nasty dose of it from the Air Corps men. He was instrumental in tearing down enough of the prejudice to get colored men in army aviation training; but he could not prevent, as he wanted to, the setting up of the segregated training center at Tuskegee.

What he could do, he did do; but he had to fight so long and bitterly to get done what was done that he lost hope in the fight. He resigned. It seemed the only possible step, and it seemed courageous and unselfish.

It meant making the kind of sacrifice few men are strong enough to make.

Failed of Purpose

But Mr. Hastie's resignation failed of its highest purpose. It did not change fundamental Army policy. It did not make things better for our soldiers. Since March, 1943, the colored man's position as a soldier has deteriorated amazingly, and it seems to grow worse from week to week.

How bad the situation is must be a matter of speculation for the private citizen, but all he hears is not merely malicious rumor. I talked with an Army chaplain the other day, and he told me that his greatest problem was to keep men from "going over the hill."

"It is not the Army routine that they mind. All Army men gripe about that. It's the infernal stuff they have to take because they're colored, segregation in PX's, segregation in movies. It seems to have gotten worse since the drive opened in France."

"But what about that no-segregation ord[illegible]" I said. "General Ulio or someb[illegible]y—didn't he issue an order?"

"Oh, that?" the chaplain said. "A post commander can ignore or follow that as he wishes." 10/7/44

But aside from the personal observations of a few men who may, after all, be merely disgruntled, one can gather from the papers a sense of something wrong.

Two-thirds (one dispatch says nine-tenths) of the colored troops trained for combat restrained for Service of Supply . . . The morale troubles in Arizona . . . The mess at Godman Field . . . The TWO-MAN mutiny at Claiborne.

So now — though I applauded Mr. Hastie's resignation at the time—I wonder. I still think it was a courageous action. But I wonder. I wonder whether sticking it out would not have been more helpful. They need somebody to do a job that's not being done. They need somebody very badly.

Race Friction Abroad Hurts War Effort, Says White On Broadcast

Racial friction between colored and white American soldiers overseas, although corrected to a marked degree by General Dwight Eisenhower, is still hurting the war effort and should be completely eliminated, said Walter White, NAACP secretary, in a nationwide radio talk over the Columbia Broadcasting System, Sunday, April 30.

"The division in our ranks and the fomenting of racial and other antagonisms are postponing the day of victory," he declared. "They are creating doubt among our Allies as to our sincerity when we assert that we are fighting a war for freedom for all peoples. Whoever causes the war to last one single day longer than necessary is, as much a traitor to our country as one who sinks a troop ship or reveals military secrets to the enemy. If for no other reason than to win the war as soon as it is humanly possible and to save the lives of American men—perhaps among them the life of your son—it is imperative that any person, whatever his race, who causes trouble, should be stopped. That will be done only if the people of America and their government stop evading or temporizing with this fundamental question whose solution is imperative if we are ever to have a world of peace."

White, who spent 15 weeks in Great Britain, Ireland, North Africa and Italy, said he had traveled more than 20,000 miles and had talked with many officers, soldiers, and civilians. 5-13-44

Censors Hide Race Friction In Army Overseas

WITH THE U.S. 9TH ARMY—Racial friction inside the army is hidden by a "total blackout," John M. Mecklin of the Chicago Sun Foreign Service charged Thursday.

In a dispatch discussing censorship curbs imposed by the army overseas, Mecklin disclosed that correspondents are forbidden to mention several other topics, which results in "denying to the British and American people an honest report of what this war is."

Mecklin complains of the "ban on taking any kind of a poll of opinion among the soldiers on controversial issues." "A third total blackout," he continues, "applies to the mention of racial friction inside the army."

End Lynching, Poll Tax Evil, Jim Crow In Armed Services

Under the leadership of Lincoln, in the fires of Civil War, the Republican party's struggle to save the Union was transposed into the great moral issue of human freedom. By the Emancipation Proclamation and by amendments to the Federal Constitution, under Republican leadership, the Negro was legally and constitutionally guaranteed exactly the same rights as every other citizen of the United States.

It is therefore strange that Republicans, year after year, yield to the old States' Rights argument and a narrow interpretation of Federal power, to prevent the passage of Federal statutes which constitute the only practical method by which the Negro's rights can be assured him.

RIGHT TO VOTE IS BASIC RIGHT

One of these basic rights is the right to vote. Another is the right to live free of the haunting fear and the too-frequent actuality of mob violence. The first can be guaranteed, under the circumstances existing today, only by a Federal statute eliminating State poll taxes and other arbitrary prohibitions against the free exercise of the voting franchise; the other only by a Federal statute making the crime of lynching tryable in Federal courts and punishable by Federal law.

The Republican party in its platform and in the declarations of its candidates should commit itself unequivocally and specifically to Federal anti-poll tax and anti-lynching statutes.

NEGROES WILL NOT BE SATISFIED

The Negro people of the United States understandably refuse to accept the technical arguments against cloture in the debates on anti-lynching bills, or even the sincere claims of constitutionalism which prevent such just measures from becoming law. And the very

Redistribution Center Plan Will Keep Negroes Out Of Hotels

Priorities Will Go To Men Who Have Won Combat Awards

12-6-44

By HARRY McALPIN

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—The Army Service Forces, under Lieut. Gen. Brehon Somerville—now famed as the author of the statement concerning returning Negro servicemen, "I'd like to dump the coons in the middle of the desert"—has set up a priority system for referring soldiers to the hotel-type distribution centers as opposed to the camp-type centers. The priority system is one which works to the detriment of a disproportionately large number of Negro servicemen.

Highest priority will go to men who have been patients in hospitals overseas and nearing completion of their convalescence but not quite ready for duty. In this same group will be placed prisoners of war who have been repatriated or have escaped.

SEEN LITTLE COMBAT

Second priority will go to men with combat awards and the greatest length of service overseas. This will probably be the largest group qualifying for hotel accommodations.

After these groups are accommodated in the luxury hotels maintained by the Army, if the hotel accommodations are not exhausted, other men may be sent there, probably on the basis of length of service overseas and physical condition.

Because Negroes are used overseas primarily in capacities which give little or no opportunity for winning or no opportunity for winning combat awards, it is apparent they will get few of the hotel accommodations.

MOVE OF EVASION

Just two months ago, the Army was a very rosy hue from the red faces of the brass hats resulting from the furore raised when jim-crow redistribution centers were planned for the Theresa Hotel in New York and the Pershing Hotel in Chicago, which were discarded only after President Roosevelt stepped in and ordered a change of plans. Memory of this fact has given rise to speculation as to whether the priority system—which on the face seems a natural procedure—isn't really a move to defeat the housing of any large number of Negroes in the luxury-type hotels maintained as redistribution centers in various resort locations.

So far, only one camp has been activated as a redistribution center. It is Sam Houston in Texas. The NNPA pointed out in a release at the time the Army announced its revised redistribution center program that persons familiar with the usual Army plan of operation had cautioned Negroes to watch closely to see that when the camp phase of the program was put into effect that Negroes are not herded into Southern camps where their opportunities for relaxation and recreation will be hampered by the traditions and customs of the communities in the surrounding area. That caution seems to hold good.

Private Denies Afro American Bias at Ga. Camp

CAMP GORDON, Ga.—Recent stories reporting that all except one colored outfit had been moved from the camp here and that the remaining unit was working as a labor detachment under whites, were refuted by Pvt. Joseph Valdez of Tampa, Fla., in a statement to the AFRO recently.

Declaring that such unconfirmed reports are more dangerous than rumors, he said that the company is not under the control of the two white units left, and that its soldiers performed both skilled and unskilled tasks.

Guard White Prisoners

Their duties, he added, include work as guards for white prisoners, as military police in nearby towns, as night dispatchers and as mail orderlies. There is also a colored orientation officer, he continued.

Baltimore, Md.

Denying the report that use of the service clubs, post exchange, theatres and the swimming pool had been refused, he said that the colored soldiers are entitled to use the facilities and do so.

Military asked to stop use of racial epithet in Belgium

12-29-44

NEW YORK—On Dec. 12 the NAACP wrote to Assistant Secretary of War, John J. McCloy and Ted Poston, OWI News Bureau, protesting the offensive use and definition of the word "nigger" in a pocket-size English-French dictionary widely used in Belgium. The matter was brought to the attention of the Association through a letter from a Negro GI in that area who said, "I don't believe it is the intention of the Belgium people to insult us because they are exceptionally friendly and nice, but it is an unfortunate situation caused by the person or persons responsible for printing these books."

Suggesting steps to be taken by the War Department to eliminate this humiliation to Negro soldiers, the NAACP said:

"In the English-French section 'nigger' is defined as 'negre' meaning a black man. In the section of the dictionary giving simple short conversational phrases occurs the sentence, 'the niggers who are with you, where do they come from?'

"This dictionary is not issued by the United States military authorities as far as we can determine, but this Association feels certain that United States military officials in Belgium can make known to the Belgium people the way American Negro soldiers feel about the use of the word. We suggest an announcement over the radio and in the Belgian newspapers will help correct the situation."

It was pointed out that hearings were conducted by a select committee of Congress to investigate executive agencies, at which Mr. Pollatsek was put on the stand. His unwillingness to discriminate on account of race is said to have offended certain members of the committee.

the War Manpower Commission has been fired, allegedly because he complied with Executive Order 9346, forbidding discrimination on account of race.

Pollatsek said that the Civil Service Commission took the position that he could not have been so strict on the race question unless he was a Communist.

The Fruits Of A Day-to-Day Policy

Journal + Guide — Norfolk Va. 9-16-44

THAT the Army has no policy yet on the Negro, on his utilization and disposition, was again evidenced this week by disclosure that it has set up the first of segregated redistribution centers for returned veterans of its ground forces; and this on the heels of the commendable (if widely ignored) order of ADJUTANT GENERAL ULIO banning discrimination at facilities on Army posts.

Once again it becomes clear that, before the war, the Army had no policy and probably no plans to use any but a bare minimum of Negro troops. Instead, beginning with the amendment to the Selective Service Act prohibiting racial discrimination, it has met problems as they have arisen, compromising on some, moving backward on others, and occasionally getting on firm, democratic ground. But no fixed determination or guiding principle by which to deal in a specific way with each question was in existence, nor has come into existence, except in a piece-meal way. 9-16-44

The pressure of public opinion and a serious morale disaffection among our service men prompted it to such steps as admitting Negro men to the Air Forces and sending them overseas; to committing selected combat-type units to action, such as the 93rd Division, the 24th Infantry, and the 54th Coast Artillery Regiment; to a slight liberalization of its policy for commissioning and promoting Negro officers; and to giving command posts to officers of color.

Those things we commend and applaud. They are steps forward. But the confusing and discouraging factor is that for each such step ahead there is a comparable step backward.

Such units as the 369th Regiment (famed as New York Fighting 15th), trained for combat, are given routine guard duty.

Others are converted to service and stevedore units. One, trained for over two years, not counting its peace-time preparation as a National Guard unit, got overseas but was given non-combat duty even though GENERAL MARK CLARK requested it for a combat assignment with his Fifth Army. Similiar illustrations could be multiplied. 9-16-44

At the pace the war is going there may not be enough time to effect an over-all policy, a liberal and democratic policy, before the shooting is over, at least for all practical purposes.

But already the War Department, through its chief of staff, GENERAL GEORGE C. MARSHALL, has laid down the basic plans to keep America militarily prepared when peace returns. To realize those plans the responsible officials have months of study and execution ahead of them.

THE JOURNAL AND GUIDE calls for full and fair consideration of loyal American Negroes in any of these plans and studies.

It will have more to say from time to time on this subject.

We must solidify our own opinion as a racial entity to get results. Our leaders must know what we want and what we expect, so that they can speak with authority in representations made on our behalf to the military and political leaders.

We must gain the support of influential people in other races and groups. We must do everything possible to get the masses behind our aim for a fair deal. We must let our representatives in Congress know where we stand. We must insist on their giving weight to our wishes. 9-16-44

Extremists at either end of the poles of opinion must give and take.

We will lose everything by division among ourselves because of stubornly held viewpoints. Let's have some good program, comprising the best, most sensible, and the most immediately obtainable goals. Once having such a program, let us all unite behind it.

Divided nations are defeated nations. Divided peoples are oppressed peoples. The one sure way of getting nowhere with any program for a fairer deal in the Army (and in the Navy, Coast Guard, Marines, and Air Forces) is to be divided among ourselves.

No Rest Yet

After a July order banning discrimination between white and Negro troops on all its posts, the Army hoped that things would cool off. But by last week one phase of the problem of how to treat Negro soldiers was hot and growing hotter.

The newest flare-up began last month when the well-meaning Army decided to set up separate redistribution centers in Harlem and Chicago's down-at-the-heel South Side for Negro troops of the Army Ground Forces (TIME, Oct. 2). Although they are in overcrowded sections and only equipped to the lower-drummer-trade standard, the Hotels Pershing and Theresa, the Army wishfully reasoned, would still be more restful to battle-weary Negroes than any of the 49 fancy hotels taken over for whites in resort centers like Miami, Santa Barbara, Lake Placid.

At this announcement shouts of "Jim Crow" went up from the Negro press and public. The President promptly called off the plan, left the Army with a choice of 1) sending Negroes to centers for white Ground Forces soldiers; 2) setting up equally fancy centers, probably up North, for Negroes only. 10-16-44

Either choice would bring its troubles. The Army Air Forces, which has only a few Negro troops, operates 18 centers successfully without any segregation. But the much higher proportion of Negroes among ground troops makes the Ground Forces' problem another kind of exercise in race relations. So Ground Forces officers considered all-Negro rest hotels in first-class resorts, gloomily reflected that, if that solution were selected, they would hear loud squawks from the managements of any hotels they chose. And again the Negro press would cry "Jim Crow."

At week's end, the Army was still struggling with its dilemma. Until it comes up with an answer, Negroes will continue to be sent to Camp Butner, N.C., where all ground troops, white & Negro, went for redistribution before hotel centers were organized. 10-16-44

SEGREGATION IN THE ARMED FORCES

Northwest Herald
Seattle, Wash.

The National Citizens Committee for Wilfred Lynn has become the Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Forces. Announcement of this change was made by unanimous decision of the committee. 5-10-44

In the committee's quarters, at 360 West 125th Street, this city, yesterday afternoon, Wilfred Kerr, co-chairman, explained that the recent decision was an attempt to meet the growing concern throughout the country on the matter of racial segregation that represented in a bi-racial American army, two armies in fact, one white and the other black, waging a war for freedom and democracy abroad while it perpetuates at home those things against which it professes to fight," said Mr. Kerr.

"The Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Forces welcomes the support of all Americans who believe that segregation is un-American, un-democratic, uncivilized and un-just, and contrary to the best interests of our country," continued Mr. Kerr. 5-10-44

"Out of the welter of struggle and discontent on the part of both the Negro and white people with the racial program of the War and Navy departments, of the Red Cross and other auxiliary services there come almost weekly new cases which deserve attention. These we can now undertake," he concluded.

Originally the Lynn Committee was organized to push the case of Winfred Lynn, a Negro gardener of Jamaica, Long Island, who in 1942 brought suit in federal court against the "Negro quota" system by which he, as well as all other Negroes, was being drafted into the U. S. army.

Lynn, now a corporal serving in New Guinea, maintained that the very idea of a "racial quota" was in itself a plan of racial discrimination, and that, as such, it was illegal and unconstitutional. His is the only legal attack made to date against discrimination in selective service. 5-10-44

The legal basis of Lynn's case is in Section 4-a of the 1940 Selective Service and Training Act, which provides that "in the selection and training of men under this Act . . . there shall be no discrimination . . on account of race or color."

In February of this year the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals were handed down a two to one split decision against Lynn. The fact that one of the three justices dissented in his favor means that a firm legal basis has been laid for an appeal direct to the Supreme Court.

The Lynn Committee is at present engaged with attorneys of the American Civic Liberties Union in the preparation of the case for argument before the Supreme Court some time this summer. It has the cooperation of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Workers Defeuse League and the March on Washington movement. Each of these groups is preparing a supporting amicus curiae brief. 5-10-44

With its reorganization the committee is prepared to assume new obligations toward certain cases of racial discrimination in the military services which have recently come to its offices and toward whatever other instances that may yet come.

Mr. Reynolds continues:

"IN THE FIRST INSTANCE HE OBSERVES HIS DAILY TREATMENT WHICH IS BOTH LAMENTABLE ON THE ONE HAND AND UNSUPPORTED BY DECENCY ON THE OTHER. HAVING A RECORD OF LOYALTY AND DEVOTION TO THE NATION THAT IS UNEQUALED AS WELL AS UNQUESTIONED, HE SEES THE WAR DEPARTMENT DESTROY HIS LOVE FOR HIS COUNTRY BY MAKING HIM A MILITARY 'UNTOUCHABLE'.

"THE CONSTITUTION AND ITS ACCOMPANYING BILL OF RIGHTS HAVE BEEN LITERALLY TORN UP AND THE BITS INSULTINGLY THROWN INTO THE NEGRO SOLDIER'S FACE. YET THESE SONS OF AMERICAN MOTHERS ARE EXPECTED TO DIE AND ARE DYING IN THE FACE OF SUCH INDIGNITY."

That is strong language, but the facts justify it.

It must be remembered, also, that soldiers cannot do anything about such conditions during a war. They must obey orders or suffer dire punishment. All fighting men, regardless of race, creed or color, must and should obey orders. No army can function without absolute authority to enforce its orders.

BUT THE PEOPLE ON THE HOME FRONT CAN CHANGE THE ADMINISTRATION WHICH MAKES THE ORDERS THAT STIFLE DECENCY AND MAKE A MOCKERY OF DEMOCRACY.

Across the desks of Negro newspapermen and women have come a continuous stream of complaints and heart-breaking letters, which tell of almost unbelievable persecution, beseeching them to do something to relieve these soldiers from the torment they endure. No man with a spark of love in his heart for his fellowman could sit idly by and watch this kind of wholesale slaughter of the human spirit.

Almost to a man, the Negro Press has attempted to change this condition. Reporters have been sent to investigate these complaints, letters have been sent to Army and Navy officials, blazing editorials have been written, and, perhaps most significant of all, the major portion of the Negro Press is supporting Governor Dewey for President.

These well-informed men and women know that the War Department and Commander-in-Chief are responsible for the mistreatment and discrimination suffered by colored soldiers.

Those who are supporting President Roosevelt also know the truth, but they excuse these unpardonable crimes by placing the blame on Southern Democrats. Strangely enough, however, they refuse to see that the backbone of President Roosevelt's support is the 126 electoral votes which come from the Southern Democrats; that Mr. Roosevelt's victory is their success; and that it is impossible to support the one without the other.

Rev. Reynolds Tells Of War Dep't Plans For Bringing Back Soldiers

10-21-44

By GRANT REYNOLDS

(Formerly Chaplain, U. S. Army)

BALTIMORE—I decided to oppose the re-election of Mr. Roosevelt because I became convinced that he should be repudiated by colored voters for the unforgiveable treatment visited upon colored service men in this war.

I know what it means to have my lofty regard for my country transformed into bitterness because my Commander-in-Chief refused to protect me against the brutalizing designs of my homefront enemies.

The sons of colored American mothers stationed recently at Camp Gordon Johnson, Fla., who are relegated to the despicable "sugar detail," will certainly not criticize my efforts to help them escape their daily torment.

These men, many of whom are casuals (men declared unfit physically and mentally to perform military service) have been forced to work this detail.

Says That Whites Are Given Extra Pay

White soldiers at the same military post were offered $3 per day, in addition to their regular monthly salary, to do this filthy work but declined the offer, it is reported. Colored soldiers, however, offered no such monetary inducement, were ordered to work the "sugar detail" just the same.

It was not reported whether the prisoners of war who were quartered on the same post were given the same consideration as was extended the white soldiers or not.

It is safe to assume, however, that they were, since their general treatment has always been more dignified than that accorded American soldiers.

(Work on the "sugar detail" to the uninitiated, means the nauseating assignment of emptying ten-gallon cans of human body waste.)

Stand of Indignant, Independent Voter

My stand is that of an irate and indignant independent voter who has supported Mr. Roosevelt for three terms, but who now seeks his defeat for the beastly treatment which he, as Commander-in-Chief, has allowed to befall my comrades still in arms.

And, I hasten to repeat, this repudiation of Mr. Roosevelt will serve due warning to any fair-weather friends who now seek the colored vote.

Never before in American political history has the colored vote meant so much as it will mean in the November election. In this admittedly close election his ballot is quite likely to determine what shall be the lot of his loved ones for the next four years.

I can hardly think that voters will show the same wilful disregard for their loved ones in uniform that is characteristic of the present administration.

Says Negro Fears of the GOP Unfounded

For us to coninue to support Mr. Roosevelt, who must assume full responsibility for the mistreatment of colored service men simply because they fear the alleged "reactionary policies of the Republican party," is fallacious and blind admission that they are inflicted by emotional poverty.

It is like asking a man in a burning house to content himself with his lot and not yell for help because he does not trust the fire department.

The army has of recent date announced its plan for returning war-weary veterans home after V-Day. A careful study of these plans reveals that they are not designed in the best interests of the colored soldier. Priority will be given veterans having the longest record of combat service and to those having shown gallantry beyond the normal call of duty.

Colored soldiers, many of whom have been in training since March, 1941, have only within recent months been given combat assignments.

For the most part they have been relegated to the menial and service categories where they are forcd to do the dirty and heavy work, and where there is little opportunity to share in the glory of victory.

Says White Soldiers Are To Come Home First

They must stand aside and with aching hearts observe their white comrades win citations which mean early trips back home. The result then of the present demobilization plan for the colored promises that white troops will be brought back home first.

It is then reasonable to assume that colored soldiers will remain abroad to act as scavengers of the world as they clean up the mess left behind by the whites.

Maybe colored voters can be made to like this kind of treatment for their loved ones. Maybe they will continue in office the man who has permitted this kind of treatment. I promise that I shall not be among those so guilty.

I, therefore, announce the organization of the Non-Partisan Council for the Elimination of Discrimination in Military and Veterans' Affairs to act as a force dedicated to the abolition of the colored soldiers' abuse.

I invite the co-operation and support of those who join with me in this lofty enterprise. Address me, 628 N. Eutaw Street, Baltimore, Md.

Segregation Called Race Bias By WMC

Defender — Chicago, Ill.

11-4-44

(Defender New York Bureau)

NEW YORK. — Employees of the War Manpower Commission throughout New York State were instructed this week to regard any form of racial or religious segregation in war plants as discriminatory, and were ordered not to serve such plants by WMC Regional Director Anna M. Rosenberg. The new procedure resulted from a recent agreement between Mrs. Rosenberg and Edward Lawson, FEPC regional director. It represents a notable advance in Federal Government policy which hitherto has maintained that segregation is not of itself discrimination.

Closely following the FEPC's hearing against the AFL Seafarers' International Union, in which segregation of Negro seamen on ships of the merchant marine was shown to lead inevitably to job discrimination, the WMC instruction indicated that the two agencies have joined forces to stamp out the last vestiges of war job bias in New York State.

THERE is no doubt that the officials who run the United States Army think very little of the Negroes who are in the service and fighting for what is termed Democracy. From things that go on every day and are done by those who control the Army, making the rules and regulations, they seem to place the Negroes in a class with dumb-driven animals. Is this their intention or are they the dumb ones?

Rules and regulations are made daily which embarrass, insult and humiliate every colored person. The latest injustice was hurled in the faces of Negroes a couple of weeks ago when the Army decided to take over the Pershing Hotel in Chicago and the Theresa Hotel in New York as special and exclusive re-distribution centers for Negro soldiers. They selected forty-nine hotels in resort centers as Miami Beach, Fla.; Ashville, N. C.; Hot Springs, Ark.; Santa Barbara, Cal., and Lake Placid, N. Y., as places where the men who had seen action could be given a psychological "lift" to prepare them to again go into battle. The idea is a good one. However, the question arose as it always does, what to do with the Negroes?

We cannot see why this question should ever have to come up. If the 49 hotels were selected for MEN WHO HAD SEEN ACTION and since Negroes are certainly men and many are seeing action and fighting for the same things that the other men are fighting for those resort centers should be for them as well as others. 10-7-44

To jim crow the Negro soldiers into the only two first class hotels that because of customs of this great Democracy, Negro citizens are able to use, and which are far from resort centers and not fit places to house men who need a psychological "lift", does more to hurt their morale and instill the very hate they are fighting against.

One month we read that orders are handed down forbidding discrimination in Army camps and right on top of that we read about discrimination being handed down as an order. By now every one, even our enemies, should know that in this great democracy, even our captured enemies are treated better and placed in prison camps that are far more comfortable than most of the barracks that our Negro soldiers are forced to live in. If the prisoner wishes to complain, he can readily do so even if it doesn't help his cause, because he has no fear of a "blue" (dishonorable) discharge. But if a Negro soldier complains he will be charged with being an agitator, trouble-maker or hard to handle when he is only trying to get what is justly due him. 10-7-44

At the same time plans were made by the United States high command to segregate battle-worn Negro veterans, General Eisenhower issued a decree that German anti-racial laws were to be abolished. Does it make sense that the United States Army enforces anti-racial laws in America while it is seeking to destroy them abroad? It proves conclusively that the Army has the power to abolish segregation within its own ranks. This fact more than proves that those in control do not want to do so; and that when they are considering the needs of men they are not including Negroes as men.

Negro Seabees 1st to ask for "Rights" under G. I. Bill

Tribune — Los Angeles, Calif.

NEW YORK—In one of the first requests for a hearing as provided for under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, more commonly known as the G.I. Bill of Rights, two of the 19 Seabees who were discharged without hearing last October after they had complained of intolerable Jim Crow conditions at the Caribbean bases, have written to the Secretary of the Navy asking for a review of their cases. The Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Service is handling the men's cases and will provide counsel for them at the hearing. All previous appeals, including letters to President Roosevelt, have proven of no avail, the committee claims.

According to statement by the committee, Harvey Steele, 28, and Isaac G. McNatt, 27, both living in New York at present, were discharged on the grounds of "unfitness," denied mustering out pay and other rights and privileges provided for veterans. It has also made it impossible for them to resume their normal place in civilian life, barring them from many schools and opportunities for employment. Steele, after passing all his examinations for a Civil Service job, was told he could not be hired because of his type of discharge. McNatt, who is studying law at night, cannot be admitted to the New York Bar because of it. 9-11-44

Further, the committee alleged that: The Negro Seabees, all volunteers, were discriminated against and Jim Crowed from the very first day of their boot training. They were offered inferior and Jim Crow mess halls, recreational facilities, ship's store service and liberty leave. Of the 1,000 men in their battalion, only 200 were white, but all officers and petty officers above second class were white, and the men were told openly that no Negro would be promoted above second class. 9-11-44

The 19 men were discharged, the committee said, after they had been invited into the CO's office and asked about conditions at the base. They were assured that this was a 'man to man,' off-the-record talk, and were asked specifically to discuss the racial situation. The men were therefore very frank in airing their grievances. The next day, the regimental commander had the men called back into the CO's office and upbraided them for 'griping' and petty complaints, and told them that he would tolerate no conferring and 'committee-ing'." A few days later the 19 men were discharged, 16 as undesirable on the grounds of unfitness, and three on grounds of inaptitude. These three later upon appeal were given honorable discharges. 9-11-44

The Servicemen's Readjustment Act directs the Army and the Navy to establish boards of review to hear cases of discharge from the armed services with the exception of those resulting from a general court martial.

The NAACP and the CIO, through the Veterans Division of its National CIO War Relief Committee, are also supporting the case, the Lynn committee stated.

Soldier's Morale Drops After Jim Crow Incident

4-8-44
Defender — Chicago, Ill.

I am an American Negro soldier who is to be shipped to another continental point for duty in just a matter of days. As a matter of fact, I was released from the base hospital here only recently where I was taken to recuperate from a nervous disorder sustained while going about my daily duties. But, my precise reason for establishing contact with this newspaper is that I boarded a Greyhound Bus at the air base a few minutes ago and seated myself three seats from the rear of the bus beside a white male civilian. He protested vigorously and rang the bell to howl to the driver, but did not after the vehicle taxied to a gentle stop. Later, a white American army officer who occupied the seat directly ahead of me, turned and said, 'Mister, did this boy get your permission to sit there beside you?' The civilian replied, "I told him not to sit down there, but he dropped down anyhow."

The army officer, speaking to me, said, "It looks as if you'll have to get up fellow." For a minute I sat, parching from anger. Then the officer, noting my hesitance to move, asked, "Well, are you going to get up?" I asked him, "Sir, is that an order?" He said, "Yes," whereupon I arose and dismounted the bus and walked to town. After having written letters to President Roosevelt and Chief of Staff General George C. Marshall, I'm still as hot as a glowing hell! 4-8-44

I volunteered for the service 15 months ago, and have been genuinely faithful and patriotic. I insisted that the doctor dismiss me from the hospital on December 24, so as not to miss the overseas trip with my comrades.

Right now, it is hard, very hard indeed for me to maintain the same standard of love and devotion for my country when I have been so deeply hurt by a person whose duty it is to boost my morale, not to trample it. It seems that some of those damn Nazis are sleeping with me! Gee, it's disheartening to know that soon my blood too may flood the trenches of some distant battlefield, that possibly this minute the only blanket over the bodies of my other three soldiering brothers is that of blistering lead and deadly shrapnel, and still be aware of the fact that some white American army officers can't learn to like me.—A Negro Soldier.

Resents Treatment To Colored Soldiers

As a former resident of Chicago, I am surprised at the mistreatment of colored soldiers in that city. On a recent trip through the city I was informed that uniformed men were unable to secure places in which to spend the night. I was also told about the conditions that brought about this move. 4-8-44

I realize that the idea behind such a move is to protect the soldiers but I also realize that under such circumstances, we soldiers might seek other quarters in order to spend the night. Sometimes we might even be obliged to accept quarters that might not even measure up to the standards of a third class hotel.

We can appreciate the public interest in our health and welfare but how about making it possible for us to find decent lodging even if it is government supervised. That would be better than having to wander through the streets looking for some place to stay.—Pfc. T. C. Hutchinson, Paine Field, Washington.

What Will Roosevelt Do Next?

White Soldiers Can't Believe There Are Negro Paratroopers

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.
4-22-44

ATLANTA, Ga.—(ANP)—When members of the 555th Airborne infantry, the paratroopers, invaded Atlanta over the week end as guests of the servicemen's center, white paratroopers and military police simply couldnt' believe their own eyes. Apparently Uncle Sam had not told them he had a dark contingent of the Army's "glamor boys."

Accosted by two white paratroopers on a downtown street, Pvt. B. F. Lane, Jr., of Chicago, wondered if he wouldn't have to resort to some of the rough tactics he had been taught to use on the Nazis and Japanese in an effort to convince his brothers-in-arms that he too was really and truly a bona fide member of the paratroops.

"THERE AIN'T NONE"

"There airn't no n——r paratroopers in the Army," the two belligerent white jumpers insisted and Private Lane, adding insult to injury, summarily decided to change their minds and physical appearances, when suddenly two military policemen appeared on the scene to settle the argument.

Being part of a group, Paratrooper Lane had no Fort Benning pass to account for his presence in Atlanta, or to prove his status as a paratrooper. It was only after Negro officers of the 555th appeared at the MP headquarters at the city jail that Lane's status was verified.

4-22-44

As Lane left custody accompanied by two paratroop first lieutenants, the four white soldiers, two paratroopers and two MP's, stood nodding their heads as if to say, "What will Roosevelt do next?"

Fort Bragg Flies Afro-American Jim-Crow Flag

Baltimore, Md.

FORT BRAGG, N.C.—The jim-crow flag is still flying from "white" PX's, theatres and eating places on this post and "I can personally substantiate every charge made by Private Twysbain in a recent AFRO article," a soldier told the AFRO here last week.

Even the special training unit here is steeped in jim crow, he said, pointing out that while colored men could do the job as well, white enlisted men—"American Nazis who go so far as to belittle the men"—are assigned to instructing colored illiterate inductees.

Both Races Hate System

"I do not stand alone in making these charges," he added, "for there are numerous men on this post, members of both races, who would be willing to stand behind me in making known these things that have been covered up for so long.

"My plea that something be done to save the sagging morale of these men, and done now, is an honest and just one. I am dying a thousand deaths just allowing my mind to dwell on the fact that I soon will be fighting as other members of my race are fighting to keep white supremacy alive."

477th's Difficulties Blamed on Colonel

Assignment of Whites Under Air Force Order Is Main Problem

[EDITOR'S NOTE: Second in a series on Godman Field, Ky., where the 477th Bombardment Group is preparing for overseas duty.]

By HARRY McALPIN

WASHINGTON. — (NNPA) — Three things are uppermost in the minds of the enlisted men and officers of the 477th Bombardment Group, stationed at Godman Field, Ky., where morale is low, nerves are on the verge of cracking and tensions are at the breaking point.

The men want, first, to fly and maintain their planes without flaw or mishap. Secondly, they want to be "rescued" from the Southern atmosphere into which they feel they have been thrust "in order to teach them to stay in their places."

Thirdly, and of equal, if not transcendant importance, they want to get rid of their group commander, Col. Robert Selway, in whom they see the embodiment of all their problems and griefs.

Antagonism New

But these men, especially those who have been with the unit from the beginning, are quick to point out, however, that they have resented the colonel only since the "officers' club incident" at Selfridge and the subsequent move to Godman Field.

In the early days at Selfridge Field, Colonel Selway was liked and respected for his apparent interest in the welfare of his men. He left few stones unturned in placing colored men in command positions in the fighter group then under his command.

When the group went overseas, it had all colored officers from the group command down, with Col. B. O. Davis, Jr., the group commander.

Ambition Blamed

But the colonel, an ambitious West Pointer, is now believed to be leaning over backwards to adhere to the Air Forces' wishes that these men be "kept in their places."

Instead of placing qualified colored officers and non-coms in the positions their capabilities merit, he has assigned white officers to all command and staff positions, regardless of their lack of experience.

The First Air Force, in an order sent to the commanding officer of the 477th Bombardment Group on July 19, authorized white officer personnel for the group headquarters and for each squadron.

Supposedly Temporary

The order, however, added that such authorizations were temporary and were "to be filled by colored personnel before the unit is committed."

The order says further: "As vacancies authorized for white personnel are filled by trained colored personnel, this headquarters will be notified in order that white authorizations may be reduced accordingly."

Officers' Point of View

One officer at Godman summed the matter up this way:

"When several of us came to the 477th from transition training at Mather Field, we found white personnel in all command functions. Then we didn't have the experience on B-25's.

"It was perfectly all right to bring in those men at the beginning as supervisors. However, we have only one man with overseas experience, and that is Capt. McDowell, commanding officer of the 619th Squadron.

"Instead of have three or four men of his training and experience, they have men from instructors' schools in Columbia and Greenville, who are converted fighter pilots like we are. They have fewer hours than some of us have.

Can Learn Only by Doing

"Now we have had the time in B-25's. Therefore, since these white officers are not going overseas with us, I say get them out of here and let us learn by doing."

There are a number of specific examples to illustrate the situation.

One lieutenant has had nine months' training as an engineering officer and 700 hours of specialized training on B-25's. Recently, he left the field to attend school further. He was then engineering office of one of the squadrons.

Upon his return, he found he had been relieved of his duty and placed as assistant engineering officer to a white lieutenant who has had neither the additional training nor the engineering experience of the colored officer.

7,000 Hours Immaterial

Another lieutenant, with 7,000 flying hours to his credit, including his civilian flying, is now under a squadron commander who has fewer hours in B-25's than he and no overseas experience.

The commander, Captain Parker, recently called a meeting of the colored officers and told them he wanted them to help him quell racial disturbances by enlisted men.

After his speech, Captain Hodge, colored, is reported to have told the officers that segregation is the Army's policy and that they have no right to try to break it up.

Then Captain Parker, seconded by Captain Hodge, said: "If this thing doesn't stop, we are going to break up this squadron and you officers will be sent to engineering battalion and service units."

Three times during an interview with Colonel Selway, he refused to give the background of training and experience of the four squadron commanders, all white, and only generalized about the probability that some changes would be made one of these days.

[Next week's article will give the reaction of officers and enlisted men at Godman Field.]

Refusal to Teach Negro Fliers At Bowman to Be Investigated

C.A.P. Says Funds Lacking

Rayner Voices Protest.

Herbert Rayner, white commander of the local C.A.P. Negro unit, composed of Central High School youngsters of 15 to 18 years of age, declared refusal of the instructors to fly his charges "is a crying shame."

"They are as fine a bunch of children as I've ever seen or known anywhere," Rayner said. "I was tickled to death to get the command. And you can bet I was especially pleased when those kids, after only eleven weeks' training, won a cup in the annual ates to new demonstration for being the best-have been drilled unit. Remember, they weeks, he were up against units that had drilled for a couple of years—and they ran away with it!"

Pleasure Trips Banned.

W. C. Thompson, flight school operator, confirmed that two teen-age Negro girls were refused a 6-minute flight on November 12 because "instructors here won't teach the colored how to fly."

Shupp told The Courier-Journal, "Wouldn't it strike you that the C.A.P. has its own planes and they should ride in those?"

He explained that gasoline for Rinehart, Rayner and Jefferson operation is obtained through the Civil Aeronautics Authority and can only be used for instruction. Pleasure flights for instructors at Bowman Field cadets.

Therefore, he cannot sell tickets to Negroes for "demonstration" flights Thompson said. His statement was concurred in by W. D. Hampton and E. G. Eberline, instructors.

"We give no flight instruction in the Civil Air Patrol, only pre-Rinehart said. members who have to take private in-is set up for us to teach flying."

C.A.P. Planes Disabled.

The Louisville and Jefferson County Air Board at its December meeting will consider refusal of instructors at Bowman Field to teach Negroes to fly, Roger Shupp, Bowman Field manager, revealed yesterday.

He made his statement after the Louisville Defender, Negro newspaper, published a story charging that two Louisville Negro Civil Air Patrol cadets were refused rides and a young man was refused instruction.

Indiantown Gap Makes Democracy Work; Colored, White Co-operate

Tribune — Philadelphia, Pa.

10-21-44

By Wm. B. CARTER, Jr.

INDIANTOWN GAP — In times like these when the disturbances at Claiborne, Plauche, Gordon, and the other veritable hell-holes in the South are coming to the fore, it is pleasant relief to see a Camp run efficiently from the operative point of view and from what is so important to us the racial side of things.

The Gap is probably the only Camp in the country where men of both races live, work, and eat together, not in pseudo-circumstances, but rather in a genuine feeling that they are doing the right thing. This condition is due in no little measure to the perfect cooperation that Lt. Frederick Morrow, former co-ordinator of branches of the N. A. A. C. P., is getting from Col. Forrest E. Ambrose, commanding of the Army Service Forces here.

NO DISCRIMINATION

This feeling is the whole story of the Camp. Col. Ambrose, an Illinois product, has insisted that as long as he holds command there will be no discrimination under his charge. This has been largely true despite the fact that natural rebukes must have resulted from the less liberal higher-ups. The other side of the question is that Lt. Morrow, a Bowdoin & Harvard man, has put himself in the position of no compromise.

I don't mean that his is an attitude of unreasonableness, but that he is not holding his position merely because he agrees with the decrees of the brass-hats. The Lieutenant is really a man of foresight and planning. He recognizes what can be done, what should be done and, what's so important, the best way to get it done.

The measures of improvement since his coming here seven months ago are unmistakable. He heads the Orientation department, where men are taught, advised and counselled. Actually, it is responsibility to protect the rights of the several thousand colored troops being trained here. He is not sort of a liaison man between the white officers, in getting things done for his men, and a patron-saint for his own command.

One can see the job is not easy. Some of the soldiers complain, as is the natural habit of anyone deprived of the normal living right, and others actually abuse, what is for them, an ideal condition. These are the factions then that must come under the Lieutenants jurisdiction.

NEGRO OFFICERS

Men of the press were invited here for a day's tour of the grounds and for the awarding of another decoration for the much honored Pfc. Alton W. Knappenberger, of Spring Mount, Pennsylvania. The result was that I was so impressed by the job being done that I lengthened my stay to two days. During this visit I got to meet a good many of the men, see our troops operate under heavy infiltration fire, visit the Harrisburg USO, eat GI food, ride in a jeep, and manage to get myself called Jodie so many times.

One of the highlights of the trip was the witnessing of men crawling under machine gun fire and near exploding land mines. This is called by the Army, "Mental Conditioning," for me it would have been mentally breaking. The tracer fire was just inches above the dire-smeared faces of the men, and provided the sort of battle conditions that the men may actually meet "over there." The inspiring part of this performance was that the particular group was officered by Negroes.

They were commanded by Lt. Wm. A. Williams, of Indianapolis, Ind.; Lt. Gordon P. Flagg, of Gary, Indiana; Lt. Jesse Johnson, of Washington, D. C.; Lt. Wm. McPherson and 2nd Lt. Calloway, of Gary Indiana. The men responded in a way that was nothing short of glorious. With a feeling of pride that permanently debunked the theory that our boys can only produce under white leadership, they showed the more than fifty assembled white newsmen they were definitely "on the ball."

PHILLY MEN IN BAND

The USO visit showed me quite clearly also how good our boys are in the music field. (as though I didn't know). The Gap has the 333rd A. S. Band that would place unashamed, with the Ellingtons, Basies and any others you might find. The fellows are actually good. The group is commanded by Mr. Wallace L. Wells, WO-JG, of Gary, Indiana, and has among its performers, Sgt. "Shep" Shepard, Philly lad who was formerly with Jimmy Gorham's orch., and who also arranged for Benny Carter and Stan Kenton.

Another local lad with them is Cpl. Billy Burke of Central High School and featured vocalist and guitarist. Both men were more than glad to be doing their chosen work, and believe me they were doing it well. The band is lead by Sgt. Eugene C. Adams, of Buffalo, N. Y.

SUNNY WOODS HERE

A feature of the Camp that stands out too with the other notable achievements is the fact that listed among the personnel are, Pfc. Sunny Woods, formerly with Louis Armstrong's band and star of Lew Leslie's Blackbirds, and the much-heralded Sgt. Robert Wyatt, expert of, and improvisor on, the Hammond organ. Thes, two men keep the calibre of entertainment high for the men.

Speaking of entertainment reminds me that all the good work isn't being done by colored alone, but also by the better thinking whites here. The officer in charge of the Special Service Section which provides entertainment for the men, is a Boston man, Lt. Charles Quinn. He has brought such bands as Duke Ellington, Count Basie, Earl Hines, and has slated to appear soon, Louis Jordan, Cab Calloway and the King Cole Trio. 'Tis safe then to say that the amusement side of the soldier's life is not forgotten.

PARADE MOVING

Indiantown Gap is idealy situated for the training it gives the men. It's just 22 miles from Harrisburg and covers nearly 30 square miles of ground. The completeness of the place is well nigh perfect. The center here is for the training of Port Battalion companies, and is equipped with everything from land boats, to artifical lakes where the men practice abandoning ship. I had never before realized how efficiently must we prepare for our wars. Nothing is left to chance.

Probably the most stirring part of the visit came when our men took part in the Retreat Parade Review. For a far as the eye could see black men marching down the Freedom Road, showed the assembled visitors just how good they really could be when they received the treatment of men, rather than the animal stuff slung at them in some of the camps that keep insisting to them that they are firstly, inferior colored troops, that must do nothing, but "tote that barge, and lift that bale." Some of them sang as they marched, others showed a determination that foreboded nothing but ill-will for anyone who got in their way, either German, Jap, or mis-called American.

FINE SERVICE CLUB

Another feature I musn't leave out is the Service Club No. 2, where the soldiers, and I don't mean just the colored GI's but the white soldiers too, have their entertainments and of course, their cokes, ice cream and good food. It comes under the management of the military, but is actually run by Mrs. Pauline Reynolds of Harrisburg. The men can go there and get a good meal whenever the GI bill-o-fare isn't exactly up to snuff. And to make this report an honest one, it isn't always, though more times than not it does offer the men a well-balanced meal.

But getting back to Lt. Morrow's department I musn't neglect the work of his staff, composed of six colored men and five whites. They work together harmoniously and efficiently. Second Lt. Elmo S. Davis, of Newport News, Va., heads the education section and commits himself well. The other men are: S-Sgt. Clarence A. Carlisle and S-Sgt. Thomas M. Johnson, of New York City; Cpl. Lewis W. Jones, former assistant to Dr. Charles Johnson at Fisk University; T-5 Robert E. Claybrooks, of Chicago, and T-5 Floyd E. Booker of Richmond, Va. All of the men are college grads and former teachers.

The whole Camp is attempting what for most of them is a new departure in race relations, and though the ever-present minority is at hand, they are doing a whale of a good job.

Soldiers Tell of Abuses in Texas

Afro American 3-18-44

Baltimore, Md.

RICHMOND — Some of the worst atrocities against colored soldiers yet revealed are being practiced at Pampa (Texas) Army Air Field, according to colored men stationed there.

In a letter to Dr. J. M. Tinsley, president of the Richmond NAACP, asking an investigation, the soldiers, members of an aviation squadron and a quartermaster company, listed eight forms of abuses which, they said, colored soldiers are forced to endure.

3-18-44

Want to Fight

"We can and would fight if trained to do so, but as yet we hardly know what a gun, tank, combat plane, hand grenade and machine gun look like, the letter continued.

Furthermore, the soldiers said that they have had only three weeks of basic training, the time required to learn the manual of arms.

Eight Abuses Listed

The eight forms of brutality which the letter said they soldiers suffered are:

1. Relegated to permanent KP's, allowed no advancement, being forced to "work life slaves without any ratings to speak of," except KP "pushers" who are made corporals and sergeants;

2. Discriminated against in post theatres, the hospital, recreation hall and forced to serve as waiters and "flunkies" for aviation cadets at social functions.

3. Denied opportunity to qualify for officer candidate school and as aviation cadet, although eligible;

4. Denied advancement, despite the fact that many men have gone to specialist schools;

5. Refused consideration from commanding officer (an Easterner) for transfers or support when injustice is meted out to the men.

Attacked by Civilians

6. Attacked by civilian police, who pull the soldiers out of Army cars and belabor them, with impunity;

3-18-44

7. Segregated on buses, with only four seats provided for colored troops on such vehicles, and,

8. Abused by white civilians, who go out of their way to molest them.

Taft Questions Army Jim Crow

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.

4-22-44

WASHINGTON, D. C.—In a statement made public Friday, Senator Robert A. Taft, Ohio Republican, called upon Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson to re-examine War Department policies to determine whether maximum use is being made of colored soldiers.

Officers on the General Staff having preconceived notions of race superiority and denying to colored soldiers an equal opportunity to engage in combat with the enemy, he declared, "should be ferreted out and removed from the service."

ARMY J. CROW MUST BE KNOCKED OUT

Guardian—Boston, Mass.

OLD COMPANY L'S WAR RECORD PROVED 'MIXED' UNITS BEST

10-21-44

The immediate creation of a special board for reviewing those questionable "cases" of colored military veterans believed to be victims of unfair verdicts, jim crow discharges, demotions, transfers and general "black-mark" brandings, should be considered at this time.

A FAIR REVIEW

Since the colored soldier is still unquestionably the most loyal segment of the American Armed Forces and since 90 percent of the "cases" against many of our villified veterans are based mainly on spirited protests—sometimes called "rebellions" — against discrimination and evil efforts to dishonor a colored man's U. S. uniform, then it seems only fair, in view of the facts, that more than one colored soldier boy (also lads in the Navy and Airforce) rates more than an impatient, and sometimes intolerant, judgment by officials who are of themselves not always qualified to judge other men. I would therefore suggest a mixed board of qualified civilians as well as military experts (including colored men like Judge Hastie and Colonel Gourdin) to sit in on judgement of men convicted of "rebelling" in such places as a Southern city, on on a jim crow bus or railroad train, or a military restricted recreational area, not to mention those who become "trouble-makers" by opposing discrimination overseas. I would also suggest witnesses (and their fellow sufferers) who should be available by the dozens, including the well respected word of certain army chaplains. There is often much more behind these "cases" than one may imagine. And many a civilian gangster, has had far more liberal court judgement than some mother's colored soldier boy. 10-21-44

PRISONERS GET BREAKS

If, after this war, some ex enemy killer of U. S. troop who suddenly became an Allie co-belligerant) should apply fo and share in Allied veteral status with all the jobs and "gravy" that goes with it, I am certain that the loyal colored soldier who has been "blacklisted" merely for fighting Hitler and Tojo tactics within his own ranks, will not be the recipient of genuine justice. In this claim I challenge even Drew Pearson who, by radio, has seemingly defended Axis prisoners who have openly been coddled and treated far better than some American colored troops. The idiotic favoritism toward some Axis prisoners is a national scandal. It is almost unbelievable that the enemy can receive so much respect and honor while colored troops are punished for comparable angelic offenses. If this is justice, than there is no justice. 10-21-44

EVADING THE ISSUE

By now we should have reached the reasoning that the colored soldier is not always wrong when his word is placed against that of men steeped in the ideologies of prejudice. Such ideologies are equally as dangerous as that of the fascists or the so called "reds" and it is a mystery to most of us why Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Dewey, and others are evading this fact. If colored servicemen can be beaten and lynched and broken in spirit while the men of even alien background are allowed to have the complete four freedoms of our military system, and former enemy forces are welcomed as fair-weather co-belligerant "friends," then it is reasonable to assume something is drastically wrong somewhere, and we don't mean in Denmark. And the fault is not in the stars but in the double-standard of democracy called "jim crow" which isolates one citizen from another at a time when we all should be united as one. The colored "G I" is not to blame for this system, and since he is not to blame the "charges" against the colored "G. I." deserves extra special treatment and a sympathetic judgement of all involved. 10-21-44

VETERANS SILENT?

In my cub reporter days I could never understand why the 372nd Massachusetts Battalion was not bracketed with Bay State white regimental and divisional units since they used the same armory and trained at the same camps and many of the men were buddies and could have been one big happy family. The New York 369th and Chicago Eighth could have easily been mixed with white Northern units in their respective areas too. Yet this was never done, and these units for a long time were considered "separate", and in the last war they carried foreign French divisional attachments while in this war they still appear to be separate or broken or changed completely. Is this system conducive toward unity? What are the colored veterans of this war and of the last doing about it? Is there any strong colored veteran organization forcing the issue during this political campaign? Are veterans joining the NAACP and other organizations or are they asleep or merely talking? 10-21-44

COMPANY L HEROES

If there are any Massachusetts colored people satisfied with the present jim-crow system they simply don't know any better. From Crispus Attucks through Peter Salem up to Old Company L of the white Massachusetts Sixth Regiment, this state has had very marked success with "mixed" units of fighting men. Old L Company stood for years as a trail blazer in mixed military achievement, the only colored company in a predominately white regiment. Morale and efficiency was high and L Company had a glorious record in this comparatively united group, adding battle streamers from action in Cuba, Peurto Rico and other foreign fields. Fighting with the 372nd in the last war (after Wilson maintained strict jim crow units) Company L provided the corner stone for the Boston Third Battalion which should have been later attached to "a mixed" Bay State or area mixed unit—but never was. In fact it was first called the "Second Separate" Battalion, as many may recall. Thus we have been evading the issue of military unity. How much longer are we going to do this? Sooner or later we must correct this sad undemocratic situation.

Segregation Completely Out At "Country Club Of The Navy"

(Correspondent on Tour of U. S.

Naval Bases for NNPA

U. S. NAVAL AIR STATION, Seattle, Wash.—"The Country Club of the Navy" is the name most often used by naval personnel in this section when referring to this active base. After visiting here I can easily understand why the name is applied.

The base is located in Sands Point, a suburban section of Seattle, and long before Pearl Harbor was a bustling naval-out post from which many of our important aircraft took off for peaceful missions throughout the world.

The atmosphere of the base though cloaked in War-time secrecy, resembles that of a college campus. Being a permanent base, most of the buildings are construct- ed of brick with a design of attractiveness as well as comfort. Recreational facilities here rival that of the most exclusive country clubs in America. 6-24-44

A combination canteen, service club and naval post-exchange is complete in every detail and offers for sale almost any article that can be had in civilian life. The only difference being that the cost of most things is at least one third chapter than on the outside.

There is absolutely no segrega- tion on the base and the approximately four hundred Negroes stationed here enjoy all of the base facilities without discrimination of any kind. The men all eat, sleep, play and work together according to their rank and rating, in perfect harmony and seeing this unity makes you feel that if such were the case throughout America, no power on earth could threaten our- kinds of shops, this base being a huge aviation repair base. So although there are several separate repair shops here, each shop works on some part of a plane and are all housed in one large building.

Negroes are employed in most of the shops and according to the type of work the men are doing at- is highly skillful and they are op- about the usage of their training and experience in civilian life after the war. 6-24-44

Race, Not Mutiny, Is Issue In Trial Of 50 Negro Seamen

10-21-44

YERBA BUENNA ISLAND, Calif. —After listening to three days' testimony of the 50 Negro seamen charged with mutiny for refusal to load ammunition at the Mare Island depot, August 9, Special NAACP Counsel, Thurgood Marshall declared, "These men are being tried for mutiny, solely because of their race or color."

Marshall Reports

Following an urgent telephone call from Joseph James, president of the local NAACP Branch, asking that National Office assistance be given the defendants immediately, Mr. Marshall flew to San Francisco, where he has been reviewing testimony and interviewing the men. In his report of proceedings thus far he charged: 10-21-44

"The last of the defendants was on the stand today and the defense might close its case tomorrow. The Port Chicago explosion was on July 17th and many of the accused were in Port Chicago at that time. Many of them were hurt. On August 9th they were transferred to another Island and told to fall in for work, meaning loading ammunition. They did not. Their officers, including the Admiral, talked to them. Then their officer asked them the following: 'All of you who are willing to obey all lawful orders stand fast. All who are not fall out and give your names to the officers. Some stood fast and others fell out. Those who fell out were arrested. There were 257 altogether, but it ends up that only 50 are charged with mutiny.

"The men take the position that the above statement by the officer was not considered by them to be an order and what they meant by their actions was that they did not want to load ammunition. They did not mean to disobey an order.

Example 10-21-44

"A typical example of their testimony is that of Seaman Bordenave who is just seventeen. He had enlisted when he was 16; was released when they discovered his age and re-enlisted as soon as he was 17. He had only been handling ammunition a week and was a 'hatch tender' which meant that he was the one who directed the operator of the winch as to how to lower the ammunition into the hole. No wonder they were all afraid to load ammunition. Every man testified that since the Port Chicago affair they were 'afraid to load ammunition.' Three of the accused men handled winches, one had ten months' experience, two had two months' experience. . . . all experience was with ammunition.

"Lt. James F. Coakley, former assistant prosecutor of Alameda County, California, under the present Governor Warren is the Judge Advocate. He asks each of the accused who is from above the Mason and Dixon line 'Where are you from?' He never asks any of the good southern boys the question. Today he asked one of the accused where he was from and the man said, 'Chicago.' He asked him where he took boot training, the boy replied, 'Great Lakes' whereupon Coakley said, 'Didn't they teach you to address officers as Sir? Why can't you say, Sir to me?' " 10-21-44

There is no evidence of refusal to mutiny or conspiracy.

There is no evidence of refusal to obey a direct order.

These men are being tried for mutiny solely because of their race or color."

The meaning of Mutiny, under which these men are being tried is —"collective insubordination with intent to disobey a lawful command." In order to find defendants guilty of mutiny it is necessary for prosecution to prove there was collective insubordination which consists of a persistent and concerted refusal or omission to obey orders, or to do duty. None of these men appears to have conspired collectively to disobey or perform duty with insubordinate intent.

Alabama Governor Gets Reply To Protest From Acting Secretary Of War

Weekly — New Orleans, La.
9-16-44

(By The Associated Negro Press)

Montgomery, Ala., Sept. 13.—"All soldiers, regardless of race, must be afforded equal opportunity to enjoy the recreational facilities, which are provided at army posts, camps and stations," Acting Secretary of War Patterson, Wednesday wrote Governor Chauncey M. Sparks. The governor made public that reply he received to the protest lodged with the war department over the recent Memorandum 97, which abolished segregation at army camps. 9-16-44

Patterson added that the war department is "not an appropriate medium for effecting social readjustments."

The acting secretary's reply took issue with Sparks' protest holding that Memorandum 97 "violates a state-wide practice and belief and aggravates rather than helps" race relations.

Patterson declared Sparks' telegram sent to President Roosevelt had been referred to him for reply. 9-16-44

"The thought has been," he said in his letter, "that men who are fulfilling the same obligations, suffering the same dislocation of their private lives, and wearing the identical uniform should, within the confines of the military establishment have the same privileges for rest and relaxation."

Sparks said the letter did not constitute an answer to his telegram to the President.

"I agree," said the governor, "that Negroes should be given equal facilities, but not use the facilities as white soldiers. There should be segregation. I understand the war department order also applies to civilian personnel of army posts."

Is Our Army Nazi-like?

Amsterdam News — New York, N.Y.
10-21-44

There is no good reason why there is only one Negro general in the U. S. Army. There are more than 700,000 Negro troops in the army and they are commanded by approximately 50 generals. Yet, the President has not seen fit to promote a single Negro colonel to general, though the war is three years old. That some of the Negro colonels are qualified to become general officers goes without saying, but they are obviously doomed never to attain that rank.

According to War Department releases, the two Negro combat divisions — the 92nd, which is in Italy, and the 93rd, which is in the South Pacific — have made excellent records. Since this is so, some of the Negro officers in these two divisions should have been promoted to general by now. Certainly white officers in similar divisions would have received their rightful grades after years of service.

The one big reason why Negro officers are not wanted and not promoted in the army is because of the social side of army life. Army ritual among the officer class calls for social contact in one another's homes, in officers clubs and otherwise. If Negro officers received their rightful promotions, it would sprag the smooth social routine traditionally adhered to by white officers, particularly during peace time.

But this is just about the least defensible reason why qualified Negroes are not promoted to their rightful grades in the army, especially to the general officer grade. The fact that there is only one Negro general in the army is an indictment of the army and the entire Government. Insofar as the Negro is concerned, our army is about as Nazi-like as Hitler's.

To mix Negroes with whites in northern centers

Tribune — Los Angeles, Calif.

WASHINGTON—Responding to Administration pressure, prompted by the fact that the Republicans were making political capital out of the jim crow aspect, the War Department this week dropped its plan for taking over hotels in Negro neighborhoods as redistribution centers for Negro soldiers returning to the United States from combat areas overseas.

Protested by Negro groups and leaders as discriminatory and as unequal to accommodations afforded white servicemen, the plan for "processing soldiers in redistribution centers will be altered and expanded through the utilization of existing camps", the War Department announced. 10-16-44

"Pending the establishment of the camp type redistribution centers and in order to avoid taking over additional hotel facilities in housing shortage areas, Negro returnees will be processed with white returnees through existing northern redistribution centers", the announcement went on. Soldier Tries Suicide Over Unfair Treatment In Army

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.
4-22-44

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON—(ANP)—A suicide pact was entered into two years ago by three students at Howard university as a protest to what they considered the unfair treatment of Negroes in the armed forces, and the treatment generally accorded Negroes in the United States. The act was to be perpetrated on the steps of the Capitol.

Three weeks ago one of them, Pvt. Norman W. Spaulding of Chicago, slashed his wrist four times with a razor blade in an attempt to live up to the agreement he and his classmates had solemly entered into. Today he is confined to a "restraint ward" at Walter Reed hospital.

PALS IN SERVICE

That is the dramatic sequel to the story which was told exclusively to the Associated Negro Press on Tuesday by the Rev. Dr. Robert Moton Williams, chairman of the Committee of One Hundred of the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches, and pastor of Asbury M. E. church here. 4-22-44

The other two men involved in the pact are both in the armed services. Their identities were not revealed, but it is learned that one of them is with a fighter group in the Mediterranean Theatre of Operations, and the other is a member of the Coast Guard. Only recently one of the two corresponded with Spaulding and brought up the subject of their pact.

This is substantially the story as the ANP learned it from Dr. Williams:

TOOK AIR TRAINING

Young Spaulding had left Howard in June, 1943, and returned to Chicago where he entered the Coffey School of Aeronautics to receive training as a civilian pilot. His course started in July, and in the same month he became a member of the Army Air Corps reserve. This training continued until September, 1943, when the AAF took over the entire civilian pilot training profram.

On September 14, he was sent to Fort Custer, Mich., for induction and re-classification. Nine days later he was sent down to Keesler field near Biloxi, Miss. There he received physical and mental examinations to qualify him for further training. 4-22-44

Spaulding laid around awaiting an assignment to additional courses. This did not come until in December when he was sent to the airfield at Tuskegee, Ala. Early in January an order was issued by the War Department discontinuing the WTS program on the grounds that there was a sufficient supply of instructors available.

COMMITTED ACT WHILE ON FURLOUGH

Toward the end of January, Spaulding was shipped to Greensboro, N. C., for re-classification in the Army Air Force. After mental, physical and psychological examinations, he was finally qualified as an Army aviation cadet. In March he was given a 14-day furlough and he came to Washington to visit his wife. 4-22-44

It was on the evening of the last day of his furlough, March 28, that he committed the act.

From this point on his wife, whose full name and address are being withheld, told this story to the ANP:

"We sat here most of the evening and Norman was talking about committing suicide, but I didn't think he was serious. He always talked about the problems of the race and how badly Negroes are treated. He wanted to do something about it, but somehow felt helpless.

"I went out of the room for a moment and when I returned I could see blood spurting from his arm. I was dazed and for several moments I didn't know just what to do. Finally I got myself together and tried to apply a tourniquet. 4-22-44

"Then I called Walter Reed and they came and took us there immediately."

Soldier Shot By White Lt. At Claiborne

Tribune — Philadelphia, Pa.
9-16-44

NEW ORLEANS, La.—(ANP)—Word was received here today that Pvt. Leonard P. Washington, 26, son of Mrs. Nannie Washington, well known New Orleans resident, was fatally shot last week at Camp Claiborne by a white officer after he was allegedly attacked by the private.

The prevost marshal's report states that Washington had been drinking and after he had been placed under arrest he broke away and attempted to leave the post in a government conveyance but was caught and it was then that he attacked Lt. Kermit Bates and was killed.

White Officer 'Sorry For Soldiers' Arrest

Tribune — Philadelphia, Pa.

4-8-44

NEW YORK, April (ANP) In this city after his voluntary resignation as an army first lieutenant, Robert L. Engels, white, has declared that he is "sorry" for the trouble he caused two Negro privates when he reported them and caused them to be sentenced to life imprisonment for "assault" on a white woman while the three were stationed at New Caledonia, South Pacific.

The story is as it appeared in the press said that Lt. Engels, in company with Louise Mounien, also white, had emerged from bushes one night at a trysting place called "Lovers Hill," when they were accosted by the two Negro privates, Pvt. Frank Fisher Jr., 21, and Pvt. Edward R. Loury, 22. The two men asked Engels if he minded if they, too had sexual relations with the woman, evidently a prostitute. While according grudging assent, Engels did nothing to prevent the two men. The woman willingly went back into the bushes with each of the two privates, singly.

According to the private, they paid her, and considered the incident closed. Engels, however reported the matter to commanding officials, and the two privates were arrested, shipped back to the states and placed in life confinement in an army prison in the state of Washington, near Seattle. 4-8-44

Immediate protest followed by colored citizens, who claimed that the two men were railroaded solely because of their color and because the woman was white. An appeal in the case is still pending, after protest by the NAACP and other groups.

While in New York, Engels has permitted himself to be quoted as saying that, in his opinion, the life sentence was too stiff, that he did not intended anything like that when he reporte the men. He said that their conduct toward him was not that due an officer from subordinates, but should have drawn no more than a six months sentence. He said he was willing to go before army boards and ask for clemency for the wto privates.

The NAACP has claimed that the men were third degree-ed, that evidence offered against them was flimsy, that their race was used against them. Secretary War Stimson has the NAACP petition protesting the sentencing. 4-8-44

South Africa Has No Place For Bishop Gregg

Weekly Review
Birmingham, Ala.

CAPETOWN, South Africa — (Delayed, ANP)—Although Bishop John A. Gregg served a number of years as resident bishop of the African Methodist Episcopal church in South Africa, a decade or more ago, he still could not find a single hotel which would give him lodging over night, when on a mission to visit Negro troops stationed in the middle East, he stopped in Durban, South Africa. The bishop finally stopped in the McCord hospital, which caters to blacks.

This race conscious city here witnessed a similar incident recently when acting Capt. Chow Jockie, a Chinese skipper, who has sailed all over the world brough his vessel, a British ship, into Capetown. He went to the Palmerston hotel, registered, went to his room only to be ousted because he was colored. Captain Jockie sued the owner a man named Meyer, for $800 damages and received a $200 verdict against the hotel proprietor.

Navy Band Gone From Lambert

Call — Kansas City, Mo.
6-30-44

Missouri Unit Transferred to Great Lakes

ST. LOUIS. — (ANP) — When 23 Negro members of the noted Lambert Field Navy band were transferred to Great Lakes Naval Training station recently, speculation became rife that they were the victims of anti-Negro forces within the Navy who are trying to teach them a lesson "about fighting Dixie race barriers" by breaking up the musical unit.

Time and time again, the bandsmen have encountered anti-Negro representatives in the form of officers born in Dixie. These Navy officers were by tradition in sympathy with jim crow in the navy, one source declared. Band members are reported to have grown tired of the senseless race restrictions. They were, according to reports from the naval center, barred from the swimming pool, denied service at the navy center's barber shop, and were segregated in the mess hall.

With a chaplain born in Georgia and Lt. Varner, who was born in Florida, their protests were in vain. Varner, though young, revealed that he is of the old southern school by informing them that "N . . ." would have to stay in their places. Varner was detached from the unit by the admiral of the Ninth Naval district when he personally investigated the situation. 6-30-44

Members of the musical unit have had a variety of bitter experiences by personal clashes with agents of race hatred, a spokesman of the unit said. He predicted that the whole musical aggregation may be broken up and sent on active ship duty as the result of the racial clashes and mass protests.

Debate Behavior Of American Soldiers

'Negro Troops Punished, Whites Do As They Please,' English Say

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.
6-3-44

By RANDY DIXON

LONDON—In a debate last week centered around questions concerning the behavior of American troops in England, Independent and Labor members of Parliament brought forward allegations that Negro troops were being disciplined for offenses while white soldiers were permitted to do as they like. In refutation, Home Secretary Herbert Morrison branded the reports "irrelevant" and "mischievous." He stated that, on the whole, the conduct of American troops, black and white, was "exceedingly good."

Among those putting questions were the Labor party members, Rhys, Davies and Stokes, and an Independent member, Kendall. Davies said: "U.S. military authorities have sentenced to death certain Negroes for offenses which are not punishable by death here."

ISSUE TO BE RAISED 6-3-44

Home Secretary Morrison told him: "The color of the troops is, of course, irrelevant. The House of Commons deliberately, and with its eyes wide open, and, I think, wisely gave the United States forces complete criminal jurisdiction. That being so, U.S. laws must necessarily apply." Morrison had said earlier that he could not consider introducing amended legislation to stop foreign courts here from passing the death sentence for offenses that did not warrant the death penalty under British laws. Davies said he would raise the matter again.

Kendall asked Morrison if he were aware of and what steps he proposed to deal with the situation in Leicestershire and many other towns where "it is unfit for a woman to walk unescorted due to the ineffectiveness of the U.S. military authorities in enforcing proper behavior of the U.S. forces and its failure to give proper protection to women." 6-3-44

Kendall asked further: "Will it be brought to the attention of the U.S. authorities that while we are more than anxious to extend hospitality, will the U.S. troops extend to our womenfolk the same chivalry and courtesy that they extend their own womenfolk?"

Morrison told Kendall that he hadn't had time to make special inquiries into conditions described but that "the inuendo that U.S. authorities are failing to assist in checking misbehavior is unjustified." 6-3-44

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Stokes then asked Mr. Morrison whether he was aware that this state of things applies to many towns, or aware that the offenses complained of, if committed by colored troops, would call for the death penalty, while white troops are allowed to do as they wish?

Morrison said he considered such suggestions "mischievous." He continued: "I understand that the U.S. law is applied to both colored and white troops. It is true that in every army certain broad difficulties and black patches will occur here and there, but I am bound to say, broadly speaking, that the conduct of American troops, both black and white, is exceedingly good."

The debate concluded with Kendall saying he would raise the matter again.

ARMY POLICY

Has Introduced Racial Discrimination Into All Sections of the World

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.
4-22-44

By HORACE R. CAYTON

RECENTLY I was talking to two men high in the War Department. They told me, perhaps jokingly, that the high command of the Army spends more time talking about the race problem than it does trying to win the war. If this is true, it must mean the time is spent talking about keeping the Negro segregated and trying not to hurt any Southerner's feelings—rather than working out plans for integrating the Negro into the armed forces.

Mr. Cayton

One of the reasons that makes me think this is the attitude which the Army took in the first World War. It wasn't until we had won that great struggle to save democracy that some of the facts concerning the pre-occupation of the military command with the question of "social equality" came to light.

FRENCH OFFICER EXPOSES POLICY 4-22-44

Thumbing through some old clippings recently, I came across this news item reported in the American press about a special meeting of the French Chamber of Deputies. It seemed that a Colonel Linar, who was chief of the French military mission attached to the American Army, had issued, at the request of his American colleagues, a confidential circular instructing French officers how to treat black soldiers. At this meeting of the Chamber, Monsieur Rene Boisneuf made the following observations:

"THE Americans observe certain relations which they consider necessary. No matter what we might think of these, it does not behoove us to mix in the matter. But I think it intolerable and abominable that a superior French officer should attempt to introduce into the French army prejudices which are derogatory to our manners and our civilization: reasons for discord, ethnological antagonism and hatred, exposing us to fratricidal quarrels which certain of our allies have raised to the dignity of a national dogma." 4-22-44

RACE PREJUDICE HAS GONE ABROAD

The deputy then proceeded to read the document, which had the following suggestions to make to French officers: First, French officers who exercise command over Negro troops were requested to ascertain how Negroes were treated in the United States and to communicate this information to the civil authorfities and to the French populace near the cantonments. Second, it was suggested that there be no intimacy between French officers and Negro officers, and that they could not be treated "on the same footing as the white American officers without profoundly wounding the latter." Specifically, they were not to dine at their tables or shake hands or even hold conversations with them outside the line of duty. Third, it was not proper to praise "in an exaggerated manner" black troops, and further, the public around the cantonments were warned "not to spoil the Negroes."

WE won't know until after World War II is over, the exact extent to which the high command has busied itself and employed its energy and ingenuity in influencing our allies to treat the Negro as an inferior and subordinate creature. Certainly there has been enough talk about England to assure us that America has sent more to that island than lend-lease material. For whatever can be said of the British Isles and its colonial policy, England does not suffer from the insanity of race prejudice to the extent that the United States does. 4-22-44

FOLLOWS PATTERN

The Army's pattern of segregation has been introduced in localities in this country in which it has never existed before. Keeping pace with the global nature of the war, it is my hunch that we have introduced racial discrimination against the Negro throughout the world, just as we did in France during the first World War.

THE CRIME OF SEGREGATION
(N. Y. Amsterdam News)

The statement of the Secretary of War concerning Negro soldiers, brings out nothing new. It would indeed be extraordinary if a group of young Negroes selected from the general mass and put into an army should not on the average be inferior in education, in general intelligence, in technical training and in health to a similar group of young white men. Considering the fact that these black men have had less time and less money spent on their education; have fewer contacts with civilized life and intelligent people; have been largely or deliberately excluded from the higher techniques of industry—it would be extraordinary if under such circumstances they measured up to the average of their white fellow citizen. What we mean by the Negro problem is that if you deny a group of citizens, for any reason, access to education, work, and social contacts, you must expect them to show the result in lower efficiency and intelligence. In such case what we try to do is to search for reasons in barring Negroes from opportunities and for depressing them below the national average. This reason in the past was the assumption of racial inferiority but that assumption has long since been disproved by science. 4-1-44

Consequently what Secretary Stimson should have noted was that while the average intelligence, efficiency and health of the Negro contingent is below that of the whites, nevertheless that in all cases there are some Negroes quite equal to the whites and some who excel the average of the whites. What the policy of the War Department and what Mr. Stimson is doing is to penalize the exceptional Negro simply because he is not inferior. In a group of white soldiers the personnel is carefully weeded out, officer material is educated, technical efficiency is put into the engineering services and laborers assigned to physical work. But with the same conditions, in a Negro group, endless reasons are found for not weeding out or transfering the personnel with ability and aptitudes: there are not enough well-trained Negroes to make separate technical battalions, there are not enough commands where Negro officers can be assigned; there are not enough places to be found where intelligence incased in a black skin can be used; there are no technical units where Negroes can be assigned without working beside or even in command of whites. 4-1-44

Therefore—and here comes the unforgivable crime,—the mass of Negroes regardless of their ability, intelligence or efficiency are shoveled into labor battalions. This is the crime of segregation, not only in the army but in industrial and civilized life; because Negroes, striving against almost insuperable odds, nevertheless beat their way forward in increasing number, they are slapped in the face and forced back because, forsooth, Negroes must not associate with whites even in defending their country and ideals. The number who have succeeded is not great enough to man a whole group organization. Such is the false logic and sheer injustice in any attempt to segregate a minority group from normal contact with its fellows.

SOMEWHERE IN ITALY — (By Cable)—The Red Cross is doing a good job physically over here, but notwithstanding its prestige, influence, and money, is compromising itself to old Army policies, Walter White, NAACP executive secretary said this week.

Mr. White, who is on an extensive tour visiting colored troops in war zones, arrived in Italy Sunday after two months in England and North Africa.

Gained on GI Food

He is ten pounds heavier from a daily diet of GI food, and has thoroughly adjusted himself to war dangers, having survivied twenty-one bombings in England. He visited the 99th Fighter Squadron Monday and now is on a tour of other camps. 3-18-44

He said in an overall way that our soldiers have gained respect and are winning the confidence of the people everywhere, but that lack of a concrete policy by the high command is permitting the influence of the old American pattern to seep inin many places.

Most Officers Liberal

"I have found the majority of officers I have met to be liberal men," "but a minority want to transplant Mississippi into foreign countries."

Mr. White plans to return via West Africa, Brazil and the Caribbean Clipper route.

General Lee's Enforcement Of Order Pleases

Daily World — Atlanta, Ga.

Segregation Is Abolished Over In Great Britain

WITH ALLIED HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE—(ANP)—Rigid enforcement by Lt. Gen. John Clifford Hodges Lee of Gen. Dwight Eisenhower's order banning segregation of Negro troops has only been a major factor in building high morale and better relationships between American soldiers but has established Gen. Lee as a friend of colored fighting men.

Gen. Lee, Kansas born like Gen. Eisenhower, is deputy commander in this theater of war as well as commanding general of the communications zone of the serivces of supply here. On assuming his duties, he realized that tensions between white and Negro troops was one of his problems. Fights with guns and knives between them were frequent. Currently, although 10 times as many soldiers are present as when he took charge, such battles do not average one weekly.

THOUGHT DIFFICULT

When Gen. Eisenhower went to London as supreme commander, one of his first orders was to ban segregation of Negro soldiers. This was considered difficult inasmuch as combat divisions composed mainly of white southerners passed through or were stationed near bases where colored soldiers of the service of supply were on duty.

Certain local commanders ignored the anti-discrimination order on the ground that this policy prevented troubled. The reverse actually was true, for attempts at strict segregation resulted in increased racial feeling and incidents.

Gen. Lee personally demanded complete reports of each such incident. When he found an officer guilty of violating the nonsegregation order, that officer was broken. Gen. Lee also took steps to see that all soldiers had the same rights, and would not tolerate an officer who allowed the evidence of a white MP to outweigh that of a Negro MP. He let it be known that disobedience of the nonsegregation order would be punished as severely as the wilfull disobedience of any other.

CAUSE RESENTMENT

9-27-44

His stand caused resentment in some quarters. Officers said among themselves that this was going too far and complained that it was apparently assumed by Gen. Lee in advance that in a fight between a Negro and a white soldier, the Negro was right and the white was at fault. ..9-27-44 ..When word of this reaction get to Gen. Lee, he said: .... that kind of thinking has got to stop. This is a most important issue because it cuts right down into our innermost thinking and feeling. Are we fighting this war on a clean issue or are we kidding ourselves? We've got to decide, and make our decisions stick."

Racial Designations In B'klyn Navy Yard To Be Discontinued

Age — New York, N.Y.
5-27-44

Racial designations will be removed from the badges of workers in the New York Navy Yard, Brooklyn, Navy officials informed the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, Monday.

For several years, workers at the Yard have been compelled to wear a badge containing, among other information, the letter "W" for white or "C" for colored. Numerous protests against these designations have been made to the FEPC, Negro workers in particular charging that they made for discriminatory employment practices within the Yard.

When FEPC representatives first took the matter up with local Yard officials they were advised that the designations had been ordered "for security reasons" by Washington. Admiral Monroe Kelly, Commandant of the Yard, admitted, however, that they seemed to serve no useful security purpose. And FEPC investigations in other cities showed that badges used by other Navy Yards carried no designation of race. 5-27-44

Following a series of conferences in Washington and New York, Assistant Secretary of the Navy Ralph A. Bard advised FEPC Chairman Malcolm Ross that steps will be taken immediately to change the badges of employees so desiring.

At the same time, Edward Lawson, director of the New York Regional FEPC office, announced that considerable progress was being made toward adjusting more than fifty complaints of discriminatory employment practices filed with that office within the post two months. 5-27-44

Of six complaints handled recently, Mr. Lawson said, four were found to be warranted and two were dismissed. As a result of these investigations two first-class drillers were promoted to mechanic-instructors, one second-class driller was promoted to first-class, and one second-class chipper and caulker was promoted to first-class. All were Negroes and had charged in their complaints that they had been denied promotions by their supervisors apparently because of their race.

FEPC Asks $585,000

Afro American
Baltimore, Md
3-18-44

WASHINGTON President Roosevelt on Friday sent to Congress the budget of the Committee on Fair Employment Practice, calling for appropriations totaling $585,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

This is the first time that Congress has been asked to appropriate funds for the committee, previously financed from the President's emergency fund. 3-18-44

An amendment to the Independent Offices Appropriation Bill, offered by Senator Richard Russell (Dem. Ga.) would prohibit allocation of funds to the FEPC from this fund.

Failure Means Finish

The Russell amendment would require all agencies set up by executive order and subsisiting on funds allocated from the President's emergency fund to obtain appropriations from Congress by July 1 or cease functioning, if it has been in existence for more than one year. The FEPC was established in June 25, 1941.

The amendment is an extension of the prohibition ordered by Congress last year, denying money from any fund to any agency which had been refused appropriations by the Seventy-eighth Congress. But it was the FEPC which brought up the subject during hearings on the Independent Offices Appropriation Bill and it is aimed chiefly at the FEPC.

Ry.-Probe Group Threatened

Another agency listed by the Budget Bureau as receiving allocations from the President's emergency fund is the committee to investigate racial discrimination in certain fields of railroad employment. 3-18-44

It was created by a letter of the President dated January 1, after the FEPC reached an impasse with a number of railroads and railroad labor unions in its efforts to secure the removal of discriminatory practices against colored locomotive firemen, trainmen, switchmen, dining car and shop employees.

While this committee has not been in existence for a year, it is believed that the Russell amendment, if adopted, will also cut off its funds, under a provision that "any agency or instrumentality established by executive order shall be deemed to have been in existence during the existence of any other agency or instrumentality, established by a prior executive order, if the principal functions of both of such agencies or instrumentalities are substantially the same or similar."

Passage Anticipated

Congress was due to debate and vote on the Russell amendment during consideration of the Independent Offices Appropriation Bill this week. Indications are that it will be approved. But its approval does not mean that the FEPC will not get the appropriation it is seeking. 3-18-44

At present, there is considerable sentiment on Capitol hill in favor of giving the FEPC a status under law, with its powers and purposes clearly defined.

Few Additions Planned

The FEPC budget allows for minor staff additions in the Washington office, with considerably more in the field. Currently there are 113 employes on the payrolls of which 53 are here and 60 are in the field. Estimates call for a staff of 130 people of which 55 will be assigned here and 75 in the regional offices.

The increases propsed for the national office are mainly attorneys who would have their work coordinated by assistant chairman George M. Johnson. The need in the field is for examiners and hearing examiners. No new functions are contemplated in the budget.

The budget carries a salary of $10,000 a year for the division and pay of $25 a day each for six other members when actually engaged.

It also carries the following salaries: 3-18-44

Deputy chairman, $6,500; chief, administrative management, $5.600; chief, field operations, $5.600; three hearing examiners, $16,800; assistant to the chairman, $4,600; three senior fair practice examiners, $13,800; fair practice examiner, $3,800; research assistant, $3,800; information specialist, $3,800; assistant compliance analyst, $3,200; chief legal division, $5,040 for nine months; attorney, $4,600; attoriney, $7,200 for 1 9-10 man years.

Field: Three regional representatives, $16,800; six regional representatives, $28,400; five senior fair practice examiners, $23,000; twelve fair practice examiners, $46,000; sixteen associate fair practice examiners, $51,200.

Segregation Is All Right - Fish

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — "I do not favor abolishing segregation and allowing Negroes to force themselves on white people. I do not think the Republican party had any idea of abolishing segregation in the army when they wrote the clause in their platform. I for one certainly had not."

Rep. Hamilton Fish, pruminent New York Republican member of congress, made this statement to Miss Pauline Myers, administrative assistant to the Rev. W. H. Jernagin, director, Fraternal Council of Negro Churches, in an interview here last week. Miss Myers revealed the information in a lengthy statement released last Tuesday.

WOULD END JIM CROW

The interview took place when Miss Myers visited the congressman's office seeking his cooperation in having introduced in congress an amendment to the Wadsworth bill (H. R. 465). The Wadsworth bill would create a single department of the armed services. The amendment proposed by the Fraternal Council would abolish segregation based on race therein.

Rep. Fish, declaring that any attempt to abolish segregation would "start another war" refused to have anything to do with the Fraternal Council's proposed amendment.

"I don't believe in miscognation and intermarriage and all that stuff," he declared. "Negroes ought to be proud of their race and glad to stay in it. They ought not to be wanting any mixed regiments. To permit Negroes to fight with white men in a mixed regiment is the same as inviting Negroes in an 'exclusive white club.' Negroes ought to fight for civil rights and stop pushing themselves on white people. I repeat, white people don't want you."

TALK OF COMMUNISTS

Fish, regarded as one of the leading Republicans in the country despite a tiff between him and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, GOP presidential nominee, during which Dewey repudiated any support from Fish, declared that only "a few Communists" talk "that nonsense" and that no responsible Negro organization of individual, "not even a soldier—and I have talked to many—," would "even dare to say he wanted to abolish segregation."

Reference by Miss Myers to a few instances of mixed regiments proving successful elsewhere brought the declaration from Fish that he knew of no such cases, except where there were white officers and colored enlisted men.

" . . but that is different—and that works," he said.

10-1-44

When it was pointed out that such a doctrine is no different from the Nazi theory of superior and inferior races, Fish replied that the Nazi ideas of Nordic superiority have nothing to do with Negroes.

"A bill to abolish segregation in the army," Fish said, "wouldn't get three votes in congress. It would be political suicide for any one who would attempt such and I for one would not."

Protest Army's Seizure Of Two Largest Hotels

Daily World — Atlanta, Ga.

Wire Appeal Directly To Pres. Roosevelt

10-1-44

CHICAGO — (ANP)—The army's seizure of both the Pershing hotel here and the Theresa hotel in New York for re-distribution centers for returning overseas veterans was vigorously protested by tenants of both hotels last week. "Where are we to go?" asked Pershing hotel tenants.

That question was raised by members of the Pershing hotel tenants league who must vacate the hotel premises by Oct. 1 when a protest meeting was held last week after officers of the Sixth Service command took possession. Headed by O. T. Shelton, the meeting was sponsored by the Tenants league of Chicago. Speakers assailed the loss of the hotel as "unreasonable and un-democratic."

While they demanded a new hotel, Warrant Officer John W. Roy, Sixth Service command, has been designated by the army to take over the hotel. He explained to the protesting tenants that the army intends to develop every recreational and entertainment facility at the Pershing hotel for the benefit of returning veterans.

Beside O. T. Shelton, those who addressed the tenants mass meeting, which declined in attendance from an anticipated 1,000 to 100, were Miss Bertha Tipton, executive secretary of the local council of the National Negro congress and Louis Maponyane, a representative of the Washington Park forum. Both referred to the acute housing shortage.

Meantime in New York, Harlem citizens were in arms against the army's order for tenants of the Theresa to find new homes. With Truman K. Gibson, civilian aide to the secretary of war, on one side and Walter White, executive of the NAACP, and Dr. Channing Tobia, YMCA head, on the other, the army has decided to defer seizure of the popular hotel, where a large number of prominent citizens are living. The question of jimcrow was voiced here and in New York against the army's seizure of both Negro hotels. Twenty-six leading citizens of Harlem wired an appeal directly to President Roosevelt against converting the Theresa hotel into an army re-distribution center.

CLAIMS 'RECORD' STORY WITHOUT ANY FOUNDATION

Defender — Chicago, Ill.

Writer For White Daily Says Gibson Tries 'To Squirm Out'

By RICHARD DURHAM
(Defender Staff Correspondent)

Denying that the War Department had directed camp commands throughout the South to provide adequate and non-Jim Crow bus transportation for Negro troops, Truman K. Gibson Jr., civilian aide to Secretary of War Stimson, was flatly contradicted by Windsor Booth of the Philadelphia Record who adamantly reasserted that such an order had been issued.

To determine whether Jim Crow was dead or still alive in the Army's service system, the Chicago Defender traced through a maze of conflicting reports to discover the truth concerning the somewhat elusive "order."

6-10-44

Booth Cites Order

Booth's article published in the Philadelphia Record, May 27, stated:

"The War Department has directed Army camp commands throughout the country, and particularly in the South, to provide decent, adequate and non-Jim Crow bus transportation for Negro troops between camp and town.

"The directive was transmitted by Lt. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, commanding general of the Army Service Forces, at the specific request of John J. McCloy, the Assistant Secretary of War.

"McCloy, chairman of the departmental racial relations committee, gave full credit for this important reform to a series of articles written by Orrin Evans for the Philadelphia Record.

"Truman Gibson, assistant to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, said Evans' documented stories of mistreatment of Negroes were invaluable to the War Department in its drive to raise morale.

"We knew by hearsay that discriminatory transportation hurt the morale of Negro troops, Gibson said, but until the Record's exposure, the condition was not called to the department's attention in a way that we could grasp it and correct it.

"Gibson said Gen. Somervell's strongly worded directive is notice to all troop commanders that ignorant, prejudiced bus drivers can no longer insult Negro troops, and that busses, especially those supplied by the Army, are for the comfort of all troops without regard to color.

Applies to South

"While the new anti-Jim Crow policy applies to all Army establishments, it is being called to the particular attention of camp commanders in the South, where Negro morale is lowest because of poor travel facilities, the department said."

Gibson, however, later refuted the article in a strongly worded letter to Booth stating:

"I expressly told you . . . that no directive had been issued by the War Department on the matter of transportation as a result of the articles which appeared in the Philadelphia Record. The statement that General Somervell did issue such a directive is without foundation in fact."

6-10-44

When contacted by the Defender and asked concerning Gibson's denial, Booth angrily remarked, "That little b——— is trying to squirm out of it." Stating that the article had been shown to Gibson before publication, Booth reported that he had offered to publish any public retraction Gibson cared to make. To date, no such retraction has appeared in the Record.

Quotes McCloy Letter

Reaffirming the directive, Booth asked that a letter from McCloy be quoted as follows:

"Where special instances of discrimination have been brought to our attention . . . investigations have been made and wherever possible remedial action has been taken. As you know the exigencies of war have placed a heavy burden on transportation facilities everywhere. In view of the fact that transportation systems in the South were not organized to cope with the traffic because of the location in this region of many large army installations, in the case of the colored soldiers, local segregation laws and racial attitudes have constituted an additional problem. But the army has taken the following remedial action:

"1. Regulations now permit the use of army vehicles for transportation of troops between posts and civilian communities when other facilities are inadequate.

"2. The army has made available to local transportation camps busses under rental agreement.

"3. All Post Commanders have been instructed to see to it that facilities are available to all soldiers traveling between posts and civilian communities."

6-10-44

In recent months the mistreatment of Negro troops, especially in Southern camps, has been brought to the attention of Army officials by both Negro and white liberal publications. Gibson, in a letter to Dr. Lochard, editor-in-chief of the Chicago Defender, praised the "effort begun by the Negro press three years ago," and stated that "It would be exceedingly ridiculous for me to have said at any time that all the many reports that have been submitted to the War Department, including several of my own, have been of a hearsay nature . . ."

Observers contacted here, however, regarded the "'there-is-there-isn't" a directive argument between Gibson and Booth as a "two dogs over a directive" fight and expressed concern mainly over the fate of the directive.

The series of articles published in the Record were based on a 3,400 mile tour which took Evans to 14 army camps in seven Southern states. "At least 60 per cent — probably 80 per cent," Evans stated, "of the justifiable resentment of Negro soldiers in the South (which, of course, is transmitted to their relatives and friends in the North), is due directly to the heartless, vicious discrimination of the local bus lines." In many sections he learned that bus drivers carried clubs and pistols to intimidate Negro soldiers.

Meanwhile, on the eve of the "liberation" of Europe, Negro soldiers polled here agreed that such a directive would immediately heighten the morale and fighting spirit of colored troops.

BOMBARDIERS' MORALE DROPS TO LOW EBB WITH COLORED AT 'WORST,' ARMY AIRFIELD CONDITIONS

By The Associated Negro Press

New York, June 21.—The June issue of Politics, a new monthly review, contains a sensational expose of Jim Crow conditions in the 477th Bombardment group, now stationed at Godman Field,

Ky. The facts about the explosive situation that is developing at Godman Field among the officers and enlisted men of the first Negro bombing squadron are made public for the first time in this article.

Entitled, "The Story of the 477th," the article is signed "Bombardier" and was evidently written by some one who participated in the events described. "Bombardier" tells how the officers of the 477th were refused admittance to the "officers club" at Selfridge Field, Mich., where the group was being trained until recently. When they protested, the group was at once shifted to Godman Field, Ky. 6-24-44

"The real reason for the move," observes "Bombardier" "was to shift the 477th to a southern field where the local Jim Crow laws and sentiment would be used to back up the army's Jim Crow policies. The government will go to considerable expense in order to deny its men of arms an equal chance to fraternize on an equal basis.

"The 477th is now using, at Godman Field, the same facilities that accomodated the air corps of the last war. Selfridge Field is one of the best bases in the entire United States, and Godman Field is one of the worst. The morale of the officers and men of the 477th is now at the lowest possible ebb. If the 477th Bombardment group is to be a credit to the allied cause and its race, there must be a complete showing-up of the present situation. These men are fighting a battle far superior to that of survival, as many are doing on foreign shores. Their battle is for the four freedoms.

Radio Expert Is Stevedore

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.

Sometime ago the AFRO called to the attention of the War Department the case of a former professor of history in Morgan State College, with a doctor of philosophy degree, who was drafted into the army and assigned to tending fires in the quarters of white officers. 4-29-44

The department transferred the professor to the special services branch in Washington, where his talents can be used to better advantage.

This week we received an application of a Camp Peary, Va., seaman for the job of radio operator and technician for the S.S. Murphy, provided he could secure a release from the Navy. This seaman's record includes the following:

January, 1942 to October, 1943—Principal radio technician in the Philadelphia Signal Depot; salary, $2,400 a year; his duties: to supervise work in radio maintenance division;

October, 1941 to December, 1941—Inspector of completed radio equipment at Western Electric, Kearney, N.J.; salary, $45.80 per week;

September, 1940 to October, 1941—Foreman, $1,800 a year, supervising apprentice radio technicians engaged in repairing and constructing police, marine and lightship transmitters.

He can, he says, use an automatic telegraph key and copy code at the rate of 30 words a minute.

And what is this expert radio-telegraph man doing in the Navy?

He says he is in a stevedore unit, loading cargo vessels and serving as a general laborer. 4-29-44

The Army and Navy cannot immediately put all enlisted men into the branch of service for which they are best fitted, but since October 7, 1943, they have had this lad with seven and a half years' experience in radio serving as a stevedore.

Army Bans Segregation In Germany But Enforces It In United States

Tribune — Philadelphia, Pa.

9-30-44

WHAT KIND of people do the officials who run the United States Army think Negroes are anyhow?

Do those who control the Army, those who make the rules and regulations, think that Negroes are a bunch of ignorant notwits, who possess none of those human attributes which place men above dumb-driven animals?

They must have such thoughts when they refuse to treat colored fighting men as they do all other soldiers. In fact, they make rules and regulations which embarrass, insult and humiliate every colored person and many white men who are fighting them to protect America.

The latest insult was hurled in the faces of Negroes last week when the Army decided to take over the Pershing Hotel in Chicago and the Theresa Hotel in New York as special and exclusive redistribution centers for Negro soldiers.

The Army had selected 49 hotels in the resort centers at Miami Beach, Fla., Asheville, N. C., Hot Springs, Ark., Santa Barbara, Cal., and Lake Placid, N. Y., as places where the men who had seen action could be given a psychological "lift" to prepare them to again go into battle. The idea seems to be a good one. However, the question arose, as it always does, what to do with Negroes?

It has never entered the head of the Commander-in-Chief nor any of his policy-making generals that the only just thing to do is to accord equal treatment to colored soldiers. This incident focuses attention on the whole damnable policy of segregation which is rampant in the Army.

Aside from what this jim crow policy does to the morale of every colored man in the Army, it removes from public service the two finest hotels which colored Americans can use freely.

Because of custom Negroes are barred from first class hotels all over America. The taking of the Pershing and Theresa hotels creates a housing shortage for colored Americans in Chicago and New York; and it is not necessary.

During the same week that the plans were made by the United States high command to segregate battle-worn Negro veterans, General Eisenhower issued a decree that the anti-racial laws of Germany were to be abolished.

In other words, the United States Army enforces anti-racial laws in America while seeking to destroy them abroad. This incident proves conclusively that the Army has the power to abolish segregation within its own ranks. The fact that it does not do so proves that those in control do not want to do so; that they consider Negroes as less than men.

NAACP Head Resigns To Expose Jim Crow

Amsterdam News — New York, N.Y.

10-6-44

Sees Nov. 7th As Last Chance To Help Negro Soldier Thru Voting GOP Ticket

Grant Reynolds, Administrative Assistant of the Washington Office of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has resigned his post in order to be free to protest against the mistreatment of Negroes in the Armed Forces.

Mr. Reynolds said it is his feeling that "On November 7th, America will have its last opportunity to correct the gross injustices to the Negro soldier, by voting to put in office a Republican Administration."

Mr. Reynolds, a Congregational minister, served two years as a captain of Army chaplains. As a result of his own Army service and through information and complaints received by him in the Washington office of NAACP, he has become an authority on the widespread abuses to which Negro troops are subjected.

He served as chaplain at Fort Huachuca, Arizona, the only camp in the United States at which exclusively Negro troops are stationed where, he states, "30,000 troops are maintained in a condition of degredation and cruelty. 10-5-44

"Fort Huachuca is generally referred to as being a combination of the horrors of a prison camp and a military camp in Africa where black colonials are trained. Long sentences meted out to Negro soldiers as a result of false charges, unprovoked assaults by white officers upon Negro enlisted men, segregation of Negro officers into squalid quarters, attempted suicide by Negro soldiers because of intolerable conditions, statements by the commanding general referring to his 14,000 'niggers,' jeerings by the colored troops of their division commander, and the maintenance of a white supremacy caste system over all the Negro personnel, both enlisted and commissioned, are some of the un-American practices which make Huachuca the most infamous camp in America. This condition is made more shocking because Huachuca is the bottleneck through which the only Negro combat divisions, namely: the 92nd and 93rd, have gone to the fighting fronts, namely: the 92nd to Italy, and 93rd to the South Pacific."

Mr. Reynolds is now associated with the Baltimore Afro-American for which he will write articles concerning the mistreatment of Negroes in the armed forces. 10-14-44

Stimson Congratulated On Army Order Lifting Ban On Soldiers

Daily World — Atlanta, Ga.

Protests Begin From Southland

NEW YORK—(SNS)—Ferdinand C. Smith, secretary of the National Martime Union, Monday wired congratulations to Secretary of War Henry Stimson on "the historic Army Order lifting the ban against Negro soldiers in army post exchanges, army buses, and motion picture houses.

The telegram said that action such as this will encourage the best efforts of our Negro population. "Given the opportunity," Mr. Smith said, "our Negro people—soldiers, sailors, merchant seamen, men and women on the home front can do even greater things. This new order will help give them that opportunity.

The text of the telegram folows:

"The 85,000 memebrs of the National Maritime Union are enthused and inspired by the historic army order lifting the ban against Negro soldiers in army post exchanges, army busses and motion picture houses.

"We can assure you from our own experience on NMU merchant ships where Negroes and whites have worked together, eaten together, and slept together for years that the free mingling of men of all races results not in friction but in greater coopreation and understanding.

8-29-44

"We have long known of the bravery of Negroes in the face of ruthless attack from Nazis subs and planes. Now tales of Negro troops who have covered themselves with glory in the theatres of war have already reached us. Even under adverse conditions these men have shown that they have much to contribute to victory and the durable peace that will follow. Given the opportunity, our Negro people—soldiers, sailors, merchant seamen and women on the home front—can do ever greater things. Your new order will help give them that opportunity.

"Your death blow to Jim Crowism in the Army will raise the morale of Negroes all over the country."

ALABAMA PROTEST

NEW YORK (C. F.—The War Department order to eliminate discrimination in all Army post exchanges, buses and motion picture theaters has drawn its first vehement protests from the South.

The first protest came from Gov. Chauncey Sparks of Alabama, who wired President Roosevelt to intervene against the order. His action came immediately after the directive was made public at Maxwell Field, Alabama.

8-29-44

Sparks declared that the order "breaks down the essential principles of race relationship in the South."

"As Governor of Alabama, I protest such an order, which violate a statewide practice, and believe it aggravate rather than helps," he said.

An original War Department order of July 8 banning racial discrimination received public notice only in the Negro press. On August 17 the Air Forces sent out a memorandum based on the general order, and its posting at Maxwell Field led to general public disclosure.

APPLIES TO ALL POSTS, CAMPS

Continental Features, learned in Washington that the order applied to all post and camps throughout the country. The War Department said that it was merely restating a long standing department policy, but observers view it as the first real effort to put that policy into practice.

The War Department would not release the text of the directive, signed by Major General James A. Ulio, the adjutant general, explaining that it was a "restricted classification," but disclosed that Army rules provide:

"That no post exchange may be designated for the exclusive use of any particular race.

That buses ,trucks or other transportation owned and operated by the Government or by a Governmental instrumentality will be available to all military personnel regardless of local civilian custom."

The National Associaition for the Advancement of Colored People, while acknowledging that the order would help alleviate friction because of segregation, protested that "the basic problem of segregation still remains and is untouched by this order."

Edward Dudley, assistant counsel to the NAACP, did say that the order would move "the Negro one step nearer to the status of a full-fledged fighting man."

Soldiers Win and Lose in Strike

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.

TUCSON, Ariz.—The 57 soldiers at Marana Army Air Field who ended a two-day strike September 13, were granted the pay increase which they said was due them but they now have to work 84 instead of 56 hours a week.

The soldiers, working as kitchen police, have been assigned to the cadet mess hall where they will draw $25 more a month but the hours will be longer than they worked when in the general mess hall.

9-30-44

Reasons for Strike

The strike, which occurred when civilians were assigned to the recently reopened cadet mess hall, was the climax of protests against the following conditions which have long caused resentment among the men:

Performing KP for periods up to 19 months, working 9 months for cadets without customary extra pay, obliged to execute their extra squadron duty in the mess halls or other squadron areas than their own; unable to find adequate recreational facilities in Tucson.

Thirty-three of the strikers were put in the guard house for the two days of their work stoppage, and all had been warned of the prison terms to which they were subject for mutiny.

Civic leaders in Tucson have expressed renewed interest in establishing a service men's center near amusement and transportation centers.

Mixed Units Studied By War Department

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.

47d

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Although it has repeatedly given the tight-lipped response that the "Army is no place to try social experiments," when asked about the possibility of mixed Negro and white regiments of enlisted men, the fact is that, for more than a year, the U. S. War Department has given serious study to the problem of mixed units.

5-13-44

This fact came to light unexpectedly this week when it was learned that the War Department has widely distributed a pamphlet "Command of Negro Troops," addressed to white officers commanding Negro soldiers.

PUBLICATION PREVENTED

Despite every precaution to hide the fact of the publication and distribution of the pamphlet, its contents became known last week. However, the War Department has prevented publication of its contents in the press by invoking Army censorship regulations restricting the text of the pamphlet.

It is known, however, that the Army General Staff has been disturbed by mounting criticism of its Negro policy, especially the use of white officers to command Negro troops, while denying Negro officers the right to command white troops.

5-13-44

TIMELY WARNINGS

The pamphlet cautions white officers against use of anti-Negro epithets, warns them to treat Negroes as fellow-Americans, and urges them to make best possible use of Negro manpower placed under their command.

5-13-44

The pamphlet reports on polls of Negro and white soldiers taken by the Army to determine attitudes of each group to mixed units, mixed post facilities, about bus facilities to and from Army camps, and about treatment of Negro soldiers by white MPs.

NO RACIAL PROBLEM

More than 12 per cent of the white soldiers polled showed no opposition to mixed units, mixed post facilities and felt that Negro soldiers did not get a square deal from white MPs. The proportion of Negro soldiers on the same question was several times larger.

Dealt with in the pamphlet also are sections cautioning against the spreading or distortion of rumors about Negro soldiers apt to incite mobe violence, on relations of the community to the Army camp and a complete check list of instructions to the white commanding officer of Negro troops.

MOVE FLIERS TO SOUTHERN ARMY CAMPS

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.

5-13-44

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The U.S. War Department officially announced Monday that the 477th Bombardment Group and the 553rd Fighter Squadron, with certain base units servicing these outfits, have been moved from Selfridge Field. All troops moved are colored and represent virtually the entire Negro personnel.

The medium bombardment group, its base units and the 766th Army Air Force band have been ordered to Godman field at Fort Knox, Kentucky, for training. The fighter squadron has been sent to the army air field at Walterboro, S.C.

REASON FOR TRANSFER

Army Air Force spokesmen stated that an army airways communication screening unit of about 1,500 officers and men would soon be moved into Selfridge Field. This unit is composed of white personnel.

5-13-44

Official reason given for the shift of the colored troops is that weather conditions prevent the flying cadets from getting in their quota of flying hours. Unofficial sources had charged that the shift was occasioned by constant clashes between colored fliers with anti-Negro elements at Selfridge Field.

Mobile Whites Protest Site For Seamen's Hotel

Defender — Chicago, 2-12-44

By JOHN LeFLORE

(Defender Staff Correspondent)

MOBILE, Ala.—Blocked by a Negro auxiliary committee of the USS set-up here finds that its second choice selection is also about to be lost because of white opposition to the project.

A white committee headed by W. Otis McMahon, called on the City Commission last Tuesday and demanded that the city not permit the location for a United Seamen's Service-construction of a hotel for colored merchant seamen in the vicinity of St. An-option taken by the city of Mobile on a site previously chosen as a to-be-used-by-colored-Seamen's thony and Joachim streets. The property is located in a zone which is defined as commercial. McMahon stated that they wanted "protection" against the project. He added that the hotel would be "highly detrimental to the neighborhood."

City Commissioner Ernest M. Megginson advised the delegation that he was a member of the USS committee here, and that as a member of that group, he could assure them the committee "decidedly is not considering the purchase of the property." 4-22-44

"I feel reasonably assured," the commissioner continued, "that the Seamen's committee is not going to purchase property which would conflict with white residents."

One member of the anti-Negro delegation then asked what assurances would white people have if the Seamen's committee nevertheless decides to go through with the purchase.

City Atty. Harry Seale explained that under the existing statutes, the City Commission could give no assurance that it could block construction of a Negro seamen's hotel on the site. He pointed out that the United States Supreme court has ruled that you cannot pass laws discriminating between white and colored persons, and that under this ruling the city would have no authority to ban any Negroes from building at a specified place.

"However," the city attorney opined, "where there is a covenant in the deed of a piece of land prohibiting Negroes from residing there, that provision would be upheld." 4-22-44

City Commissioner Charles A. Baumhauer assured the anti-Negro delegation that "We are going to go as far as we can to protect you."

The colored auxiliary committee is insistent that its three members recently elected to the formerly all-white Port Area committee, take a firm stand against the apparent all-out appeasement policy of that body. Members of the auxiliary committee state that further delay may mean that no hotel at all will be provided for colored merchant seamen. A hotel for white seaman, the George Self, has been in operation for almost a year.

USS stated principles against racial discrimination seem to be taking a beating in practically all southern ports where the organization has facilities for seamen.

Jim-Crow Policy in Army Improves, But Not Enough to Remove Scars

Despite Basic Injustice, Recent Progress Is Revolutionary Compared With Other Periods

(This is the second article of a series describing the gains and losses of the Negro under the New Deal.)

No factor in contemporary American life has caused such embitterment among Negroes as the Jim-Crow policy of the military services. The failure of the Roosevelt Administration to crack down hard on anti-Negro discrimination in the armed forces at the very outset of the war, before it had time to become more firmly entrenched, represents the most serious defect in an otherwise admirable record of promoting racial democracy.

The Negro people justifiably hoped that, in this people's war against the world's standard-bearers of race hatred, the traditional race discrimination in the American military services would be cast aside. Such a step, they rightly felt, would promote national unity, strengthen military morale and speed the day of ultimate victory. Their disillusionment left scars that remain deep and raw.

When Pearl Harbor brought an urgent appeal for recruits from Uncle Sam, eager young Negroes who wanted to fight for democracy were turned away from recruiting stations because the Negro quota (roughly about 10 per cent) was filled. Negroes who did get in as volunteers or draftees (they now total over 800,000 in Army and Navy service) were at first confused, then angered by the discriminatory treatment accorded them.

Southern Pattern

Northern Negroes who had enjoyed relative equality at home found themselves ghettoed in segregated quarters of Southern camps, barred from recreational centers enjoyed by white soldiers, discriminated against in the matter of promotion, Jim Crowed in bus and other transportation facilities, subjected to bitter humiliations on and off camp grounds despite the uniform they had donned so proudly.

The race-discrimination pattern of a section representing but one-fourth of the American population was allowed to permeate the entire Army—North, South and overseas. Frustration led to friction, and blood was spilled in several clashes involving Negro soldiers and whites. Letters from friends and relatives in camp, narrating humiliating experiences, help build up a resentful attitude among Negroes at home.

The wonder is that the resentment was not greater, that the average Negro's patriotism and faith in the democratic ideal has held so firm. History may yet record this example of a race's firm faith in the face of successive humiliations as one of the spiritual triumphs of World War II.

Progressive Steps

The resentment against military Jim-Crowism against young men asked to fight and perhaps die for a democratic cause wasn't reduced any by the asinine policy of blood segregation maintained by the American Red Cross despite unanimous scientific testimony that there's no difference in the blood of whites, Negroes or any other

While recognizing the basic injustice of the Jim-Crow military pattern, however, it can be said that the Negro's real progress in breaking down traditional barriers in the armed forces during World War II would have been considered revolutionary in any previous period.

President Roosevelt, as noted by Roy Wilkins, editor of The Crisis, kept his 1940 pledge that Negroes would be admitted to every branch of the armed forces, instead of being restricted almost entirely to the engineering corps, as formerly. Today, Negro soldiers are being taught skills on a par with white skills that will be useful when they return to civilian life.

Negroes by the scores have been trained as fliers and are acquitting themselves creditably on European war fronts. A Negro holds the rank of Brigadier-General. Negro army officers are many times more numerous than in World War I.

New Opportunities

Last year the War Dept. issued a directive ordering equal and indiscriminate treatment of Negro soldiers in Army recreational and transportation facilities, hitherto Jim-Crowed. Recently the Army abandoned its policy of segregating Negro soldiers in rehabilitation centers. The quota system for commissioning Negro nurses in the Army Nursing Corps has likewise been abandoned.

Two years ago, the Navy ended its policy of restricting Negroes to messmen, and opened up its other services to members of this race. It started to commission Negro officers for the first time in many years. More recently, it began accepting Negro doctors into its medical corps. The U. S. Marine Corps, formerly lily-white, lifted its barriers against Negroes. A Negro, Capt. Hugo Mulzac, now commands a mixed crew aboard the Booker T. Washington, one of the most famous ships in the U. S. Merchant Marine.

The nation-wide distribution of the OWI film, The Negro in the War, has done much to spread appreciation of the race's contributions.

In connection with the petition for a rehearing, which cannot come up until the court reconvenes in the fall, the NAACP, the Workers' Defense League and the March on Washington Movement will file supplementary briefs as friends of the court.

Rehearing Asked in American Case

Afro-American, Balto., Md. 6-10-44

NEW YORK — Attorneys for Winfred Lynn, whose Army-discrimination case the U.S. Supreme Court refused last week to review, will ask the court for a rehearing, the Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Forces announced Monday.

Lynn, who contends that his induction under a "colored quota" violated the Selective Service Acts no-discrimination provision, is now on duty in the Pacific. The court's refusal of his petition for a writ of certiorari was based on the fact that he is no longer in the custody of the respondent, Col. John W. Downer, commanding officer of Camp Upton, N.Y., where Lynn began service.

Question Not Raised Before

His attorneys contend that this is not proper grounds for refusal, due to the fact that the question was not raised in the Circuit Court of Appeals, though Lynn was no longer in Col. Downer's custody even then.

Now that the Army officially has announced its reversal of policy in the operation of its redistribution centers, eliminating the jim crow features, some of the inside story and the general significance of the move can now be told The NNPA scooped the world on the details of this new plan last week. 10-14-44

The very fact that the Army, steeped in segregation and run by a hierarchy of Southern gentlemen, was forced to change its stand shows that Negroes need not feel it a hopeless fight even when the obstacles seem insurmountable. This shows what can be done by sane, insistent and persistent effort when the cause is right.

And you can put it down that the obstacles which were faced in this matter were no mere pebbles in the road. They were mountains—mountains of prejudice, bigotry, lying, and subterfuge. 10-14-44

You can see what you're up against when you know that the President sent word directly to the Army that he wanted this redistribution-center mess cleared up, with the jimcrow features eliminated — and despite that, the brass hats and gold-braids used every conceivable method to retain segregation in the program disguised in every imaginable form.

They tried to get the President to support their jimcrow proposals by writing him a memorandum requesting that he stand behind the Army policy of segregation. But the truth is that the Army has no policy While it is steeped in a tradition of segregation, it trains its officers in mixed classes; it integrates its wounded in the same hospitals, placing whites and Negroes in beds side by side; it has begun to integrate its nurses in certain northern hospitals; it trains many of its air force specialists in mixed classes. It even has integrated redistribution centers, under the Air Force. 10-14-44

But those things happened under men who were willing to have the term "democracy" be an all-inclusive term. And there are some such men in the Army. There are others in the Army and the War Department who think only of a white face when they think of democracy.

What else can one believe when one hears that Lieut. General Brehon Somervell, chief of the Army Service Forces—who was the fly in the ointment to getting this change of policy through—said in a meeting on the subject, when asked what should be done with the returning Negro servicemen: "I'd like to throw the coons into the middle of the desert."

That's the kind of obstacle which is faced in the Negro's effort to enjoy a full citizenship status with all the rights, privileges and immunities attached thereto, even in the agency which demands that he give up his life without question. ,

But the Army was licked in this case. It can be licked in others. 10-14-44

And right now is not too soon to begin working on the elimination of segregation entirely in the Armed Forces of our country through the compulsory military training program which is likely to come after this war.

Sailors Face Death Penalty

Tribune — Philadelphia, Pa.

In California

10-28-44

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif. — A Navy court-martial board, Tuesday, returned a verdict of guilty against the 50 sailors who refused to load ammunition aboard a ship just after the Port Chicago blast which cost some 300 lives last July.

Before final decision these verdicts will be reviewed by local authorities and finally by the Judge Advocate General in Washington, acting for the Secretary of the Navy.

Whether they must pay the penalty for 'mutiny' or some lesser offense was not immediately disclosed.

The penalty for mutiny is death, but the lesser charge of "conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline" carries a maximum sentence of 15 years. The board deliberated 45 minutes after the very lengthy trial. 10-29-44

According to Thurgood Marshall, special NAACP counsel, there was no evidence of a refusal to obey a direct order.

However, in the eyes of Lt. James F. Coakley, former assistant prosecutor of Alameda County, California, who was the Judge Advocate, and his associates, the men were found guilty.

ARMY ASKED TO END NEGRO SEGREGATION

Times — New York, N.Y.

9-28-44

In an appeal to President Roosevelt twenty-six leading citizens of Harlem urged yesterday that he request the War Department to abandon its plan for segregating battle-weary Negro troops returning home for rest under the rotation furlough system.

Their telegram, which asked an appointment with the President to discuss the situation, said:

"We learn that white soldiers brought back from overseas for recreation and relief from battle strain are to be given approximately two weeks each at Government expense at luxurious hotels and resorts at Lake Placid, N. Y., Santa Barbara, Calif., Miami Beach, Fla., Hot Springs, Ark., Asheville, N. C., and perhaps other pleasure places. But Negro soldiers are to be required to go to Theresa Hotel in New York's Harlem and Pershing Hotel on Chicago's South Side."

Such a plan, the group declared, constituted a "reprehensible act which is an insult to Negroes buried in foreign soil, having died in the belief that they were fighting for democracy." 9-20-44

FORT KNOX IS INFLAMED BY JIM CROWING

Argus — St. Louis, Mo.

Cool Headed Captains Prevent Tragedy

8-25-44

LOUISVILLE, KY., Aug. 24.—(By Wire)—Flagrant violation and disregard of the recent orders of the War Department to cease discrimination and segregation of Negro troops in post facilities throughout the country almost resulted in a riot at Fort Knox, Ky., last night.

Feeling Runs High

Hundreds of enlisted men at Goodman Field, Ky., an adjunct to Fort Knox, gathered in an ugly mood when two of their number returned to the post after having been ordered out of the Fort Knox Theatre following their refusal to be shunted into a segregated section "Reserved for Negroes."

The men at Goodman, already to the breaking point because of grievances in their own camp, were prevented from marching on the theatre for a show-down by the quick and heady action of three of their Negro captains. One hundred and fifty white military police had been stationed around the theatre, fully armed, when word spread that the Negroes were incensed.

This morning Colonel N. Butler Briscoe, Commanding Officer of Fort Knox, told the NNPA that he sees no reason for changing the segregation policy at the theatre, despite the orders of Major General Ulio, Adjutant General of the United States Army. He claimed never to have seen the war department order. 8-25-44

Blame Agitators

In an interview, he put the entire blame on a few "blank blank agitators."

"This policy at Fort Knox is that a man in uniform is a soldier and all soldiers get treated the same," When they do, he stated, "They are upsetting the system."

The Colonel claimed to have known colored people all his life and that he grew up with them. He says he knows they do not want to sit scattered around the theatre. "I have noticed on the buses, the parties want to sit together. We assigned these seats in the theatre so the parties can sit together. When they come in, the ushers lead them to that section, just as if you had children—when children come into a theatre you lead them to the section for them."

Negro Leaders Protest Jimcrow Furlough System

Daily Worker — New York, N.Y.

9-20-44

Twenty-six leading Negro New Yorkers yesterday wired President Roosevelt a protest against the War Department's plan to set up separate facilities for Negro soldiers returning for relief from battle strain.

The President was asked, as Commander-in-Chief, to request the War Department to reverse its decision. He was asked also for an appointment to discuss the matter personally.

The wire said that white soldiers brought back from overseas for recreation and relief from battle strain are given two weeks rest in outstanding resort centers, while Negro soldiers are to be required to go to the Theresa Hotel in Harlem, and Pershing Hotel in Chicago's South Side. 9-20-44

The segregation of "Negro soldiers who also have faced death on foreign battlefronts" and the introduction of "segregation in northern communities where it is both illegal and contrary to public opinion, is a reprehensible act which Negro soldiers and civilians alike resent," the authors of the wire said.

They called the plan an "insult to Negroes buried in foreign soil."

Army Officers Refuse To Treat All Men Alike

Transfer Soldier Who Insisted On Equality

FORT BRAGG, N. C. — (ANP) — White army officials here are reported to be violating the provisions of the recent war department anti-bias directive against racial discrimination and segregation on army posts, post exchanges and theaters.

According to reliable information last week, one colored soldier has already been transferred from here because he dared to protest discrimination at a post exchange.

Every form of intimidation is said to be used against colored soldiers by the anti-Negro clique who are opposed to the war department's effort to abolish racial discrimination and segregation at this army post. One of the recent victims is reported to be Pvt. W. C. Twysbain, a Negro soldier who attempted to purchase items at a reception center post exchange here.

"This PX is for whites only," stammered a white civilian clerk. Twysbain replied that the incident might be reported. "We don't care who you report us to," the clerk replied haughtily.

Pvt. Twysbain is said to have made the mistake of reporting the incident to his commanding officer. He was immediately transferred, but for some other reason it is claimed.

'Lousiest in Nation'

Termed by Negro soldiers as "the capital of army discrimination," the consensus of opinion among colored troops is that this army post has "the most lousy setup in the nation." They are amused by notices of mere racial discrimination on buses at other army posts.

10-27-44

Aided by anti-Negro white civilians, Negro hating white MPs and special-privileged Negro stooges, white army officials here are successfully nullifying the edict and concept of the recent War department order issued against racial discrimination and segregation on army posts.

The service club here is a dump, poorly equipped, and has not enough personnel to operate, soldiers charge. The PX's for Negroes are the shabbiest on the post. Positions usually held by colored non-commissioned officers, such as theater managers and athletic directors, are held by whites. Negroes are relegated to laborers.

The all-white supervisory staff of the STU-reception unit here is one of the outstanding blots at this giant post. The only colored soldiers used are cooks and they are supervised by white mess sergeants. White privates often require Negro STU students to salute them and address them as commissioned officers. Negro orderlies must clean jimcrow latrines.

10-27-44

"There can be no square deal for colored soldiers here until the NAACP or other liberal agencies do something about it," said one enlisted man. "We don't trust the inspector general's office. They work hand in hand with the commanding officers of the camps. They are our enemy."

Segregation Is Rank At Ft. Benning

Tribune — Savannah, Ga.

REPORTS NEGRO SOLDIER TO PRESS SERVICE

9-14-44

by Harry McAlpin

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA) — Flagrant violations and disregard of the War Department's order banning segregation and exclusion of Negroes from army post facilities is reported to the NNPA by a soldier stationed at Fort Benning, Ga.

According to this report, the War Department's order was issued to all units, and was read and explained by all unit commanders to their troops.

Following ths, some of the soldiers attempted to exercise their rights. One soldier attempted to ride the "white" bus, but was refused transportation. Others went to the main theatre and to the various post exchanges formerly earmarked for white only. Some attempted to be served in the Patie Grill.

Everywhere except in the theatre, the reaction was the same. They were told, politely, that Negroes were not acceptable in these places.

Col. John P. Edgerly, commanding officer of the reception center at Fort Benning, then called a meeting of all instructors in the Special Training Unit. He paid tribute to the efforts the instructors had made to bring to their less fortunate brethren the benefits of the three D's. He then said Negroes were unaccustomed to sleeping behind screened doors and windows; that they were unaccustomed to toilet facilities with running water; that generally speaking, their lot while in the army was better than that of which they had in civilian life.

Then he told them that while the War Department had issued and announced a policy of equal opportunity and equal use of all facilities, the Negro soldiers at Benning were to remember they were still in Georgia, the policy of the War Department to the contrary, notwithstanding.

The colonel then said the Negro soldiers were to continue as formerly, going to their own post exchanges, theatres and riding in the same buses set aside for the exclusive use of Negroes. He let it be known that the Negro soldiers were to accept these restrictions as the "natural order of things."

The next day, after the meeting, the colonel called in all the war department memoranda which had been distributed concerning the segregation ban. And Jim-crow rides merrily on at Fort Benning.

Embree Calls America's Racial Equality Order To Whipped Germans 'Ironic'

Weekly — New Orleans, La.

9-16-44

(By The Associated Negro Press)

Chicago, Sept. 13.—In a letter Thursday to the Chicago Sun, a local daily, Dr. Edwin R. Embree, noted race relations authority and Rosenwald Fund president, termed the army's prepared instructions to break down Nazi race theories in Germany "ironic." Embree's letter was the result of a recent news story published by that paper regarding instructions to America's occupation forces in Germany.

"I read with much satisfaction our report of the instructions already prepared for use by the American forces of occupation in Germany," Dr. Embree wrote, "provisions for breaking up the Nazi organization and rules that there shall be 'no discrimination on account of race, creed, or color.' Splendid. But how ironic that we are instituting in enemy countries customs we are not willing to follow at home.

"These democratic rules will have to be enforced by an army that has segregation and discrimination in its own ranks, many of whose officers have insisted that Americans be discriminated against on account of race and color in England and other friendly countries where our troops are stationed. These democratic rules will be forced on Germany by a country which still has segregation by law in 17 of its states, and discrimination by practice in every state.

9-16-44

"It is fine that we are insisting on equality and decency in human relations in Germany," he pointed out. "But does America regard democracy as only an export commodity? Is it too precious to use at home?"

THE ARMY'S NO JIM-CROW ORDER

Chicago Defender — Nationwide — 9-16-44

On July 8, 1944 the Army issued an order for post, camp and station commanders, many of whom did not see fit to post bidding any discrimination or segregation based on color or race, in Post Exchanges, transportation facilities and Army theatres or places of amusement located in Army camps. Ideally, the order should have been issued by the War Department, or to otherwise apprise the personnel of a camp, post or station of the existence of the order, places the blame directly upon the shoulders of the commanding officer of a camp.

Jim Crow at Norfolk Naval Station

Tribune – Washington, D.C.

Approved by Secretary Knox

1-1-44

In a letter to the N.A.A.C.P., Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox in effect approves of jim crow within the limits of naval stations.

On November 19 the N.A.A.C.P. wrote Knox reporting complaints from the Norfolk, Va. Naval Air Station that buses running within the station for the convenience of Navy personnel compelled Negroes to sit in the rear and whites in the front. With respect to this complaint Knox has replied under date of December 17

"With regard to the matter of alleged segregation on buses at the Naval Air Station, Norfolk, the Navy Department is making every effort to handle matters pertaining to enlisted personnel so that there will be a minimum of embarrassment to both white and Negro. In all cases, however, the procedure which will best further the interests of the Navy is of primary importance, and the administration of personnel will always be handled with this primary objective in mind."

Secretary Knox also admitted that he had received several complaints on the insignia for chief cooks and stewards, who are either Negro or Filipino. This insignia, which heretofore has been the same as other chief petty officers in the Navy, has been changed so that men in these ratings are wearing a small "c" on their sleeves with three short straight bars underneath. The regular chief petty officers of the Navy have three chevrons and an eagle. Secretary Knox declares: "Obviously the purpose has not been to differentiate between white and Negro Chief Petty Officers as there are many Negro Chief Petty Officers in various ratings other than Chief Cooks and Chief Stewards, all of whom wear the Chief Petty Officer uniform." 1-1-44

Secretary Knox, in addition, makes the following astonishing statement: "In addition, Negroes are eligible for advancement in any of the many ratings in the Navy and all those who reach the status of Chief Petty Officer will wear the uniform of their ratings."

It is well known that Negroes have been barred from commissions in the Navy.

Handful of Whites Spread

Afro American – Baltimore, Md.

Jim Crow at Ft. Huachuca

7-29-44

(Special to the AFRO)

FORT HUACHUCA, Arizona — A handful of white officers is spreading the disease of segregation and jim crowism throughout this all-colored camp.

It is becoming an epidemic that is weakening the forces of freedom which would prevail in nearby communities.

Jim crow has been imported into "these here parts" by the army and to use the words of an old Westerner, "these folks are catching on mighty fast."

The State of Arizona has no jim crow law. It is the baby State of the nation, is still in the moulding stage — and army officials at this army post are moulding it to fit the pattern of segregation "which has dammed the Southern part of these United States."

Army Regulations Ignored

Army officials have hidden behind the mountains and ignored army regulations until this place has become the breeding place of the segregation of un-democracy.

Here are several instances of how the jim crow law is enforced on the post: 7-29-44

7 Counts of Racism

1. There is an officer-mess swimming pool which colored officers are not permitted to use.

2. White officers have their own exclusive mess on the old post — no colored allowed.

3. Officers' Lakeside Club is lily-white and colored officers have been insulted for attempting to use it. Colored use Mountainview Club.

4. There is an all-white guest house where whites and their wives and families may go — but not colored.

5. White officers, civilians and their families attend religious services at Whiteside School — colored at Post Theatre No. 1.

6. In the division there are tables set aside for white only in the unsegregated mess halls. White officers live in one barrack and colored in another. 7-29-44

7. There is an all-white girls' dorm, which is off-limits to all men and has an electrified fence around it for added protection.

Army Officers Challenged

The men here challenge ANY ranking army official to prove that these and many more jim-crow tactics are not being practiced at this post. 7-29-44

A slumbering volcano is beginning to send volleys of unrest into the already much-disturbed air.

Colored officers and men simply do not want to go into combat with white officers who feel that "we are too good to eat with, swim in the same pool with or attend the same religious services with colored persons."

That the un-American practices of this post have been spread to surrounding towns is a proved fact. In Tucson, old-timers confess that the place is getting rotten since Southerners have been coming in there from the camp.

Town Catches the "Fever"

If one couple objects to colored persons frequenting a place, the management will ban all colored patronage. The cafes will serve only those who refuse to go to a colored (and Mexican) cafe that is pointed out to them.

Bisbee and Nogales are off limits to soldiers.

While colored officers and soldiers do not consider it an honor to eat with whites, to swim in the "white" pool or to go to the "white" offiecrs' club, they believe that men who may lead them into battle should have the right spirit. 7-29-44

What the Men Are Thinking

They feel that the men who are going to select them to die should know that they are sending real men to die for democracy and not a few darker animals who have never tasted the fruits of freedom.

Colored soldiers have been stung by the bees of liberty and democracy that have been flying from our Commander-in-Chief's mouth, political platforms and from our own army regulations.

They feel that if the colored soldier is good enough to bunk with the white in the foxholes of Italy, eat out of the same mess kit and drink out of the same canteen on the shores of Normandy; if white and colored can die together, why in hell can't they live together?

Lewis, B. E. Davis, owner and manager of the hostelry, will continue in that post and will also retain his present staff.

Plans are to place a snack bar in the section that housed a night club and secure volunteer workers to provide entertainment.

Declaring that the port area committee has for some time realized the pressing need for suitable accommodations for colored seamen, Crandall said rooms will be offered to the seamen at nominal rates comparable to those chargesd at USS Fairfax Hotel on City Hall Avenue (for whites).

10-28-44

The hotel, taken over on July 18, is the first to be requisitioned by the USS for colored seamen, the port director said, and was found to be in such condition that no delay will be necessary for remodeling. The building will accommodate fifty men.

Daily World – Atlanta, Ga.

Continues Its Bias

10-28-44

FORT BRAGG, N. C.—(ANP)—White army officials here are reported to be violating the provisions of the recent war department anti-bias directive against racial discrimination and segregation on army posts, post exchanges and theaters. According to reliable information last week, one colored soldier has already been transferred from here because he dared to protest discrimination at a post exchange.

Every form of intimidation is said to be used against colored soldiers by the anti-Negro clique who are opposed to the war department's effort to abolish racial discrimination and segregation at this army post. One of the recent victims is reported to be Pvt. W. C. Twysbain, a Negro soldier who attmepted to purchase items at a reception center post exchange here. 10-28-44

"This PX is for whites only," stammered a white civilian clerk. Twysbain replied that the incident might be reported. "We don't care who you report us to," the clerk replied haughtily.

Pvt. Twysbain is said to have made the mistake of reporting the incident to his commanding officer. He was immediately transferred, but for some other reason, it is claimed.

'LOUSIEST' IN NATION

Termed by Negro soldiers as "the capital of army discrimination," the consensus of opinion among colored troops is that this army post has "the most lousy setup in the nation." They are amused by notices of mere racial discrimination on buses at other army camps.

Aided by anti-Negro white civilians, Negro hating white MPs and special - privilege Negro stooges, white army officials here are successfully nullifying the edit and concept of the recent War department order issued against racial discrimination and segregation on army posts. 10-28-44

POOR SERVICE CLUB

The service club here is a dump, poorly equipped, and has not enough personnel to operate soldiers charge. The PXs for Negroes are the shabbiest on the post. Positions usually held by colored non-commissioned officers, such as theatre managers and athletic directors, are held by whites. Negroes are relegated to laborers. 10-28-44

The all-white supervisory staff of the STU-reception unit here is one of the outstanding blots at this giant post. The only colored soldiers used are cooks and they are supervised by white mess sergeants. White privates often require Negro STU students to salute them and address them as commissioned officers. Negro orderlies must clean jimcrow latrines.

"There can be no square deal for colored soldiers here until the NAACP or other liberal agencies do something about it," said one enlisted man. "We don't trust the inspector general's office. They work hand in hand with the commanding officers of the camps. They are our enemy."

Military Jim-Crow Exposed In Story, 'I Was a Seabee'

Call—Kansas City, Mo.
6-30-44

NEW YORK. — (ANP) — The "navy" way for Negroes is told in a feature article in the current issue of "politics," a new monthly review. The article titled "I Was a Seabee," and written by Isaac McNatt, exposes military jim-crow and one may get a fair idea of what the author is driving at by his concluding sentence, "I tried to help my country to the utmost of my ability but was penalized for being a Negro during the year when I was a Seabee."

The writer, who volunteered for naval service in October, 1942, was discharged a year later, as "undesirable," with the reason given as "unfitness."

Whites Given Higher Ratings

Speaking of his boot camp (Camp Allen, near Norfolk, Va.) days, McNatt said, "We never came into contact with white recruits, expect on rare occasions. We were quartered in separate barracks, fed in separate chow halls and drilled in separate companies."

On one particular occasion a near race riot broke out when whites demanded to be allowed to march to the head of the movie line. Negro service men rebelled and when the show was over and when everyone was in bed whites came in the middle of the night and ordered the Negroes out of their bunks and forced them to drill until they nearly dropped of exhaustion.

The only promotions that Negro naval men were given were a rating of second-class petty officer "when practically all the whites had ratings higher than ours," McNatt criticized. 6-30-44

The "Seabee," a graduate of a southern Negro college, with highest honors in electricity and radio and who had enjoyed a wide civilian experience as superintendent of electrical construction at an army air base, was cited by his commanding officer as an outstanding example of a seabee specialist.

Dismissed As 'Unfit'

He was confidentially advised that he could expect a promotion but that the new rating would come into effect only after he was transferred to another battalion where he would have a better chance.

"What actually happened," he said, was that "some months after being sent overseas, I was dismissed from the navy as 'unfit.'

On ship, headed for an overseas base since there was but one chow hall, all the whites lined up and ate first, while "we ate last." The first two meals said McNatt, "several of our fellows didn't get any food at all, as it ran out before all were served." 6-30-44

"Only first-class men and chiefs forward of this line," was a pasteboard sign. This meant of course that all Negroes were restricted to the rear of the ship, even up on the main dock.

Arriving at their overseas base, when Negro navy men had done the real work of building the living quarters, they were ordered to "stand aside and let the whites eat first." Within the living quarters they were segregated the same as they had been back in the States.

Qualified Men Dismissed

In a conference with the commanding officer, when Negro service men were asked to air their complaints the navy head was asked, "How do the officers feel about racial segregation? An officer replied, "That depends on where one is from," and explained, "me, I'm from Texas, and wouldn't care to sleep with them, eat with them, have any recreation with, or anything other than getting our job done."

At the meeting, the C. O. advised that the Negro men would know within 30 or 60 days whether or not any of them would be rated first class petty officers in the Negro battalion. 6-30-44

A few days later, 19 of the most qualified men were dismissed from the service with discharges which read "undesirable" by reason of "unfitness" and "ordinary" by reason of "Inaptitude." Said McNatt, "no charges, no trial, no court-martial. Just dismissed."

As casualties of war, those who held high civil service ratings cannot go back to work for the government. Those who were school teachers cannot earn a living that way anymore, and other worthwhile positions are no longer open to them.

"We are Negroes," the writer explained, "we joined the navy and we are paying and will pay for being Negroes. I tried to help my country to the utmost of my ability but was penalized for being a Negro during the year when I was a Seabee."

The Negro Soldier

The Nation—New York, N. Y.

BY CHARLES H. HOUSTON

Member of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices

I WANT to speak particularly on the subject of the armed forces. Here, after nearly three years of war, Negroes are still insulted by the Navy's barring all Negro women, except those now passing for white, from the Waves, the Marines, and the Spars. We have officers in the Army and the Navy; but there is still not a single Negro lieutenant in the United States Marines. The Army puts Negroes in uniform, transports them South and then leaves them to be kicked, cuffed and even murdered with impunity by white civilians. In places, Negro service men do not have as many civil rights as prisoners of war. In at least one Army camp down South for a time there was one drinking fountain for white guards and German prisoners, and a segregated fountain for Negro soldiers. And Negroes know that just as soon as the shooting stops many Americans will give the same Germans, Austrians, Italians, Rumanians and others who were trying to kill them preference over Negroes who were defending them, simply because these Germans and others are white.

Many white service men are talking about what they are going to do to put the Negro in his place as soon as they get back home. Many Negroes are getting to the point of disgust and desperation where they had just as soon die fighting one place as another. Meanwhile enemy propaganda is carrying the stories of racial dissension in the United States to all corners of the earth, and the colored peoples of Asia, Africa and India are getting an eyeful of how white Americans act abroad.

I advocate immediate enlistment of Negro women as Waves, Spars and Marines; assignment and promotion of Negroes in all the armed forces strictly according to service, experience and merit; and the organization of non-segregated combat units on a volunteer basis. The administration of the G. I. Bill of Rights and all other veteran rehabilitation program must be administered impartially with absolutely no discrimination.

The American color bar unless speedily removed will be the rock on which our international Good Neighbor policy and our pious claim to moral leadership will founder. The moment the peoples of Asia, Africa and India become convinced that our true war aims are to perpetuate the old colonial system with the white man's heel on the colored man's neck, and that we are fighting Japan merely to substitute European imperialism in place of Japanese imperialism—that moment we might as well begin preparing for World War III, and World War III will not necessarily be to America's advantage. The Negro problem gives the United States the opportunity to practice what it preaches, and it is time the country awakens to the fact it is guaranteeing its own salvation by making a substantial down payment on the Four Freedoms at home. 10-21-44

White Writer Says the Afro-American "10 Per Centers" Are Wrong

Baltimore, Md. 7-8-44

By EMMET PHILLIPS FOR ANP

THE "10 PER CENTERS" ARE MISTAKEN

The argument advanced by the leaders was that colored people, constituting 10 per cent of America's population, should be admitted to America's armed services in the same proportion, in other words 10 per cent of our armed services should be composed of colored people.

America needed millions of soldiers and with scores of white boys trying to escape the draft through deferments there was no good reason why as many colored people as wanted to join or could be drafted, should not have been accepted.

In fact, if the white people had been smart, they'd have petitioned

Timely And Logical

Daily Worker — Atlanta, Ga.

The recent order by Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, lifting the ban of segregation against Negro soldiers in army post exchanges army buses and motion pictures, is a logical, common sense proposal which is long overdue.

Although the War Department found it convenient or deemed it untimely to release the text of the directive, it was pointed out that the army rules provide: "That no post exchange may be designated for the exclusive use of any particular race; that buses, trucks or other transportation owned and operated by the Government or by a Governmental instrumentality will be available to all military personnel regardless of local civilian custom",

The order, drawn on July 8, applies to all posts and camps throughout the country, without regards to previous or prevailing local civilian costoms. In the words of one spokesman for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the order would move the Negro "one step nearer the status of a full fledged fighting man." From our own viewpoint, we can see in it not only a boost to the already frayed morale of our Negro fighting men, but a definite tonic in the morale among Negro civilians, whose hearts are heavy at the constant insults and even physical indignities to which their sons and other relatives and loved-ones are subjected.

It is gratifying to observe also that the general reaction to the order has, for the most part been wholesome and without shock. And with the possible exception of a protest from the Governor of Alabama to President Roosevelt declaring the order will serve to breakdown the principles of race relationship in the South, scarcely any other audible protests have been noted to date.

Of course, in the very nature of change, time will be required to make the necessary adjustments. Occasional friction here and there is to be expected where a soldier undertakes to regulate and rectify social custom to suit his particular taste or notion. But these should be few and scattered, since in the final analysis, the government is first of all conducting a war, the results of which it is hoped, will renounce once and forever, the doctrine of superority of one race or class above that of another.

ANTI-SEGREGATION PLAN BRINGS SPARKS WARNING

Age-Herald — Birmingham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 28—(AP)—Gov. Chauncey Sparks said Monday that if there were "political implications" in the War Department's anti-segregation policy at Army posts "then we of the South will find it difficult to hold the South within its traditional Democratic allegiance in the years to come."

Referring to a telegram he dispatched Aug. 24 to President Roosevelt and members of the state's congressional delegation protesting the policy, Sparks said he had not received a reply from the president, and that he had made no reference to political implication.

The governor made public this telegram which he said he sent Monday to members of the congressional delegation:

"So far, I have had no answer from the President of the United States to my telegram of Aug. 24 last, in which I protested an order of the War Department terminating segregation of races at a military post here.

"This I regret. The question raised is of such vital importance to the state of Alabama, it deserves immediate attention.

"I made no reference in my telegram to any political implication, because I deemed such wholly unworthy of our Democratic party. It is certainly to be hoped no political implications were intended by such an order.

"If there are such implications, then we of the South will find it difficult to hold the South within its traditional Democratic allegiance in the years to come."

Earlier Monday, Rep. John Newsome (D., Ala.) had told the House in Washington that "the inference is clear that the issuance of this order at this time is political in its intent and purpose."

8-29-44

Sen. John H. Bankhead (D., Ala.) previously had written Secretary of War Stimson that the order forbidding certain forms of racial discrimination on Army posts was "based upon political consideration" and "not in the best interests of the colored race in the South." Other members of the Alabama delegation also joined in the protest.

I. Albert Moore Sponsor and Leader

Whereas all biochemical and physiological researches have proved the fundamental identity of human blood irrespective of color, and ignorance of this simple fact is furnihhing a fertile field for those who uphold and spread the unscientific Nazi doctrines of a superior race with superior blood.

And whereas by segregating the blood of Negroes and whites, the American Red Cross is giving currency to the falsehoods of those who play upon ignorance and prejudice at a time when for its life's sake our democracy cannot allow fascist doctrines to confuse our people and destroy our unity;

Therefore Be It Resolved that we request the American Red Cross to take immediate steps to end the Jim Crow Blood Banks and to inform those who may still nourish prejudices, misinformation or pseudo-science of the facts regarding human blood;

3-23-44

And Be It Further Resolved that we urge the American Red Cross immediately to plan and carry out a nation-wide educational campaign to bring to all the people the facts about human blood, and to bring to an end ignorance and prejudice on this phase of the race question.

A GOOD CAUSE

Age — New York, N.Y.

THE Lynn Committee To Abolish Segregation In The Armed Forces, formerly known as the National Citizens' Committee for Winfred Lynn, has just made an appeal to all right-thinking citizens for funds with which to fight the discriminatory discharges of 19 Negro Seabees in October, 1943.

There is hardly a reader of a Negro newspaper who is not familiar with the story of Isaac McNatt, a young Negro law student of North Carolina, who in October, 1942, volunteered for service in the Navy. A year later, however, along with eighteen other Negro Seabees, McNatt was dismissed as undesirable on the grounds of unfitness.

According to Wilfred A. Kerr and Broaddus Mitchell, "... it was racial discrimination of the most flagrant kind, and not unfitness, which cause his dismissal. These 19 young men have not only been denied their inalienable right to bear arms for their country in time of war, but their discriminatory discharges have made it impossible for them to assume ther rightful place in civilian service."

As Isaac McNatt puts it: "We are casualties of war. The country which we worked and fought to save has stigmatized us. Those of us who held high civil service ratings cannot go back to work for the government. Those of us who were school teachers cannot earn a living that way anymore. The doors of professional schools have been slammed shut in our faces, making it more difficult to further our education. We are Negroes; we joined the Navy and we are paying and will pay for being Negroes."

The Lynn Committee has undertaken to fight these discriminatory discharges so that these men can remain first class citizens in society. Funds are needed immediatly for legal expenses and to arouse american public opinion in support of the case. The Committe wants to make repetition of Issac McNatt's story impossible in a democratic America. It needs support. It should have support.

Contributions should be sent to the Lynn Committee at 360 West 125th street, New York, 27, N. Y.

THE ARMY SEIZES THE PERSHING HOTEL

Defender — Chicago, Ill.

9-16-44

Next to General Eisenhower's spectacular advance through France, the most amazing thing about the U. S. Army continues to be its cockeyed, inconsistent racial policy.

Newest of its one-step-forward, two-

Overseas veterans of tan complexion will come back from their "war for democracy" to find "for white only" signs on resort hotels for servicemen in California and Florida. They will get a taste of Dixie segregation by Acting Secretary of War Robert Pat-

Order by Jim Crow setup in post theatres, post exchanges and War Department buses. This has aroused the wrath of the South. This week in reply to the protests from Alabama's Governor Chauncey M. Sparks, the War Department on these recreational facilities follows the recent forthright ridiculous, flip-flop stand of the back to civilian life. order by Washington against Jim Crow terson wrote:

"All soldiers, regardless of race, must be afforded equal opportunity to enjoy the recreational facilities which are provided at army posts, camps and stations." 9-16-44

The Secretary then adds that the Army is "not an appropriate medium for affecting social readjustments."

How the War Department reconciles its fair-minded stand on theatres and post exchanges with its discriminatory attitude on resort hotels for returning veterans is beyond comprehension.

This inconsistency is of a piece with the contradictory actions of the War Department early in the war. On one hand the Army enforced rigid segregation in the ranks with its claims that it was following the pattern of civilian life and was not interested in "social change." On the other hand Jim Crow was completely and thoroughly disclaimed in its training of officers with men of all races living, eating and working together in many barracks.

Evidently the War Department now is determined to appease Dixie once more and show it will uphold the doctrine of "white supremacy" to the bitter end of the war. But its ostensible "separate but equal" doctrine is violated in this newest resort hotel edict.

In selecting the Pershing hotel in Chicago for housing returning veterans, the War Department has made a grievous error on two counts. 9-16-44

Located in the heart of Chicago's Black Belt with its slums, poverty, and degradation, the Pershing is certainly no place to provide "pleasant atmosphere" where the veteran can readjust himself. The Negro soldier coming home from the muck and slime of battle will go to Cottage Grove avenue where kitchenette hovels abound on all sides. But the white soldier, according to Army announcements, will come home to hotels in Miami, Lake Placid, Santa Barbara, Calif., and Hot Springs, Ark., which is quite a contrast.

In seizing the Pershing Hotel, largest hotel for Negroes in Chicago, the War Department has come into an overcrowded, jammed community which faces a critical housing shortage and deprive Negro civilians of one of the few decent hotels in the neighborhood. With hundreds of Negro families hunting frantically for a place to live, huddling together in converted stores, fearing the firetrap menace, the action of the War Department in using the Pershing hotel is not only unwise but unjust. The order means more congestion on the Southside and is a step backward in meeting housing needs in this community.

Prison Terms of Five Negro Soldiers Drastically Reduced

PM, N.Y., N.Y. Sept. 7, 1944

Prison terms of five Negro soldiers, sentenced to 15 and 13 years on mutiny charges have been drastically reduced by the Army, the prisoners' lawyer, David Levinson, Philadelphia, has been notified.

Levinson, one of the American lawyers for the defense at the Reichstag trial, has been active in the case since the men were sentenced at Dale Mabry Field, Tallahassee, Fla., last March. He has contended that the Negroes were innocent of all charges and merely creatures of persecution and circumstance.

The soldiers involved are: James E. Crawley, Brooklyn; Arthur Boyd, Summit, N. J.; William J. Flemons, Washington; Leo M. Jones, Philadelphia, and Joseph R. Kent, Evanston, Ill.

The men had been put in the guardhouse at Dale Mabry Field on minor charges after each had encountered trouble at various Army camps in the South because they protested treatment handed them and other Negro soldiers.

On March 23 the five prisoners refused to leave the guardhouse for fatigue detail, demanding to see the commanding officer. They told a guardhouse corporal that they wanted to report that they had been discriminated against in the matter of food and cigarets. They said their meals, from soup to desert, was dumped together on one plate, while white prisoners had their food served on two. They also claimed that they had been deprived of cigarets for several weeks, but that white inmates had received smokes.

For an answer, Levinson said, a non-commissioned officer threw several tear gas bombs into the jail.

At a court martial the Negroes were accused of inciting to mutiny, mutiny and not attempting to curb mutiny.

Levinson presented a petition to Maj. Gen. Larson, commanding officer of the Third Air Force. Subsequently Boyd's and Crawley's terms were reduced from 13 years to eight, and Kent's from 13 years to nine. Sept. 7, 1944

The Philadelphia attorney then petitioned Secretary of War Henry Stimson and was permitted to present the men's case to Judge Advocate Gen. Myron C. Cramer.

In a telegram today from Gen. Larson, Levinson was told Klemon's and Jones' sentences had been cut to five years, Kent's to three and Boyd's and Crawley's to two.

Levinson said the action "indicates determination of highest military authorities that discrimination must cease, and reflects the progressive attitude of our President and Commander-in-Chief."

The Negroes' counsel said his next step would be an appeal to President Roosevelt for Presidential pardons.

Lt. Henry Discharged; Protested Jim Crow

Tribune — Philadelphia, Pa.

8-26-44

By WM. B. CARTER, JR.

I met this week an American who was as disillusioned as a man could be and still endure. He had looked forward to covering himself and his nation with undying glory on one of the blazing battlefronts. Instead, 2nd. Lt. Miton Henry, of 2119 Reed street, was the picture of an unbelieving man, who is willing and quite able to give his all for his native land, but rather must sit on the sidelines and watch others carry the ball for all the gain. 8-26-44

Lt. Henry had been court-martialed at Selfridge Field, Mich., and transferred to Tuskegee to await dismissal, which came quite suddenly last Saturday, while he was here on furlough. The discharge went into effect midnight that day.

The officer, since his transfer to Tuskegee, has had three different assignments that had been either line duty, ground officer, or recreation leader. While there his duties did include any government flying activity, because of a physical impendiment, and not as a result of his impending discharge.

Henry's trouble began at Selfridge Field when he, with the other colored pilots there, objected to the Jim-Crow PX and poor living quarters to which they were confined. The men, after complaining to their commanding officer and getting no satisfaction, decided on harsher action. 8-26-44

Henry went to Mitchell Field, Hempstead, L. I., and lodged a complaint directly with the Commanding General of the First Air Force.

This resulted in no action; so the trek was continued to Washington. The Secretary of War listened to the complaints of the pilot and promised that something would be done. Nothing was done, but the background for Henry's court-martial had been laid.

Officially he was charged with insubordination and being AWOL, but it was later shown by testifying physicians that he had been advised to rest. Dr. Henry will return here this week.

Undergoing the strenuous training are men of all nationalities and races, men from all sections of the country, who live, work, train and play together in harmony.

Texan Censures New Yorker

One of the rare objections to the proximity of colored and white soldiers, which was made by a New Yorker, was condemned by a Texan, First Lt. Robert F. McCauley, white, a veteran of North Africa and Sicily, who is a company commanding officer.

He told the soldier that although no one was forcing him to sleep with the colored soldiers, "it's no disgrace; they're human, I believe," and threatened to have him digging a six by six if any further complaints were heard. 7-15-44

A significant factor in the maintenance of democracy here has been the insistence of the officers who have been as adamant in their stand against discrimination as they have been where military training has been involved.

Race Troops Forced To Stand While Whites Eat In Mess Hall

Courier. Pittsburgh, Pa.
2-19-44

ATLANTA, Ga.—(ANP)—Negro soldiers at Camp Gordon Johnston, located near Tallahassee, Fla., are forced to stand while eating their meals, while white men have seats in the mess halls, it was disclosed to the Associated Negro Press Wednesday by two men from that post, who had been undergoing treatment at the army's Lawson General hospital here.

The soldiers, whose names for obvious reasons have been withheld, asserted that except for a few Negro non-coms, no seats are provided for them, and no matter how tired and weary they may be after a day in the field, they must stand up and eat their chow.

LACK OF FACILITIES

One of the soldiers is from Washington, D. C., and the other is from Paducah, Ky. In addition to the dining room beef, the soldiers asserted that much resentment exists because of the lack of recreational facilities for Negro men. In contrast, they said, there are all sorts of inducements for whites, plus an abundance of equipment and facilities.

2-19-44

Further resentment, the men said, is engendered by the lack of accommodations for visits from their mothers and sweethearts, the absence of Negro commissioned officers on the post, and a complicated transportation system, which provides that all Negro soldiers must wait until white soldiers and civilians have secured seats before being allowed to board the buses.

Soldier's Ability Means Nothing?

Afro American
Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON

"A lieutenant, talking about all the ratings available in our outfit and the qualifications required to obtain them, emphasized, in his long southern drawl, that educational ability don't mean a thing," a Fort Benning, Ga., soldier told the AFRO last week.

He added:

7-16-44

"The means by which a colored soldier — his ability ignored — must obtain a rating are so low that no thinking and self-respecting individual would think of stooping to them. I know there is no give-in for me as far as these crazy notions go.

Officials Cover Up

"On the day that General Benjamin O. Davis was to make an inspection of the colored troops here, the officials told us that we were to go on a 'special' convoy. Very clever. They try to cover up as much as possible.

"At one formation, on the day the general was to arrive, one lieutenant told us that anyone wishing to go to headquarters to see him should "turn in your name at the orderly room and you'll be free to go and have a talk with him.'

7-16-44

"I read in the AFRO, I think, an article in which the writer asked why some of the officials didn't inspect our camps for colored troops. From this you can see very clearly when such an inspection is made just what goes on. They simply dodge the issue."

Says Negro Units Unable to Master Modern War Techniques Efficiently

Tribune-Washington, D.C.
2-26-44

Representative Hamilton Fish (Rep., N.Y.) company commander of the Fifteenth New York Volunteers, later the 369th Infantry Regiment, during the first World War, criticized the War Department, Wednesday, for its policy of using Negro soldiers as service troops in the present conflict.

Representatives expressed astonishment that practically no Negro troops have been engaged in combat after twenty-six months.

He inserted in the Congressional Record a letter to him from Secretary of War Stimson, which denied that discrimination was being practiced against Negro soldiers, but asserted that their efficiency ratings were so low that many of the Negro units have been unable to master efficiently the techniques of modern weapons.

Will Resent Indictment

"I believe," said the New Yorker, "that many American Negroes will resent this broad indictment of their people, and the discrimination against their use in combat units in defense of their country.

"It seems passing strange," he continued, "that French Senegalese or whole British divisions from India have been fighting so superbly with our Allies, and that Russians with low education have been the heroes of this war."

In his letter to Mr. Fish, Secretary Stimson admitted that Negro combat units have been converted to service units, adding:

2-26-44

"Large numbers of Negro troops are overseas or en route and will be given every opportunity to win battle honors and demonstrate their worth in actual combat."

Mr. Fish recalled that Negroes made gallant fighting records in 1917-1918.

America we are now allowing to be perpetrated.

Negro Soldiers and White
New Republic-New York N.Y. 3-22-44

SIR: May I send my congratulations to your contributor, Lucille B. Milner, for her article "Jim Crow in the Army" [The New Republic, March 13]. For the most part, the article was excellent, and it is a stirring challenge to those who would see equal justice granted to all. But there is one question I would like to ask: Why is it necessary, in championing the cause of any group, to ascribe to that group virtues which they simply do not possess? I phrase the question this way because I believe The New Republic is guilty of continually romanticizing, and thereby falsifying, many ugly situations for which it pretends to provide a decent and moral solution.

For example: Mrs. Milner contends that the "Negro soldier is deeply patriotic, vividly conscious of our aims in this war, eager to get into the fighting areas." Such bland and unrealistic statements make easy prey for the waylaring cynic—especially for the GI who knows that the generalization does not hold true for white troops, much less for Negro. If patriotism is a virtue, I'm quite certain that only a small minority are very "deeply" virtuous. If American troops are at all conscious of our confused and mostly ridiculous war aims, you will have to admit they are not really "vividly" conscious of those aims. And lastly, if Negro troops, on the whole, are eager to get into the fighting areas, I say God bless them, for they stand in sharp contra-distinction to a good majority of white soldiers.

Don't misunderstand me, I am quite in sympathy with Mrs. Milner's strictures against Jim Crowism, and I am sure that anyone with any sense of decency at all must feel moral indignation over the white man's unscrupulous attitude toward the Negro—both inside the army and out. But let me say that people are not going to be convinced of the injustice of the situation—and they can rightly be skeptical of the admonitions of the idealist—if the situation cannot be appraised more realistically than the particular appraisal which I quoted above.

Well-Trained Regiment
Sacrificed on Altar
Of Army Jim-Crowism

THE OLD 8TH
Courier
By HORACE R. CAYTON
2-19-44

THIS IS the story of the shame of a nation. This is the story of "Fascist-like" minds in high places. This is the story of the betrayal of a regiment and the knifing in the back of the hopes and aspirations of thirteen million black people. This is the story of the "sneak attack" on our institution of democracy. This is the story of the Old Eighth Illinois Regiment. This isn't a new story. You've read about it before. You know the facts. It's worth retelling.

Mr. Cayton

The Old Eighth Regiment had a proud history as a fighting outfit. In the first world war it was known as the 370th. In spite of the opposition of many prejudiced white officers who refused to fight by the side of it, it won the battle honors three times and the regimental colors were decorated with the Croix de Guerre. It fought with the French and fought well and was proud and jealous of its reputation.

CERTIFIED FOR COMBAT DUTY

After the war the tradition of the Old Eighth was kept up and for 25 years a group of young fellows, and some who were rapidly becoming not so young, continued to drill and to practice and to perfect themselves in the time when they might against have to protect their country. They had a tradition behind them; they had a reputation to live up to. This was no plantation army with soldiers dragging their sun in the dust. This was a proud force. Now they were reduced to

REDUCED MEN TO MENIAL TASKS

Now let's stop for a moment and sum up. Here is a group of well trained fellows with good backgrounds — no illiteracy here, no psychological aptitude bracket—good a history as a fighting organization. At this point they had been well trained—over-trained. In fact they had been in training so long that something had to be done. So what did our War department do? They had a reputation to two years as field artillery men, and the men had been in training for nearly two years as field artillery men of good will, and all the others of them had been in training for nearly high command, and the reaction-ary high command, which is being done in building up to officers, marking time until the high command may think up some other way to demoralize and humiliate it.

DEMORALIZE AND HUMILIATE

I COULD go on about the waste of time and equipment and human resources. When we can't get building materials for people who haven't decent homes because the army is using them and then throw away a whole regiment of soldiers with all the training, it doesn't make sense. But as long as the present reckless, almost criminal expenditure of men and materials to maintain the pattern, it's nothing to

IN August of 1943 between 400 and 500 men from both the 930th and the 931st battalions were transferred to service units—that means laboring. Negroes. They were reduced to menial tasks. They were reduced to menial tasks. They were reduced to menial tasks

The Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Forces

Needs Your Help Today to:—

—make a national issue of the Supreme Court's attempt to dodge the Lynn case by a legalistic trick. The Lynn case is the only court test yet made of the anti-discrimination clause in the 1940 Draft Act. It is a concrete first step toward democratizing the Army's racial policies. The Supreme Court will rule on it finally next fall. We need funds for a nation-wide educational campaign this summer.

—get tens of thousands of signatures to a statement opposing racial segregation in the armed forces. This is in the form of "4 Questions to Candidates" asking them to take a clear and specific stand on the issue. It will be presented in August to all presidential and Congressional candidates, and their answers will be publicized. We need funds to give these "4 Questions" wide circulation.

—publish a mimeographed news-letter presenting in digest form the facts about race relations in the armed forces from week to week. This will be circulated among editors, radio commentators, columnists, educators, journalists and other key persons. The job is not being done now. We need funds to collect and issue this material.

—fight such cases of individual injustice as that of the 19 colored Seabees who were discharged last fall without a hearing after they had complained to their commanding officer about intolerable jimcrow treatment. These men, many of them volunteers, were discharged as "unfit" and "undesirable." We need funds to make their story known, to explore possible legal angles.

Fish and Secretary Stimson

Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson deserved to come off second best in his defense of the War Department policy of converting colored field artillery and tank destroyer units into labor battalions and refusing to send a single colored infantry division into combat zones. 3-4-44

Secretary Stimson's argument that large percentages of colored inductees have fallen within the lower educational classifications is a deceptive half-truth.

Granted that a large percentage of colored troops are illiterate. All of them are not. What has Mr. Stimson done with those who could pass any army qualification test? AFRO reports have showed a colored Ph.D. caring for fires in the quarters of white officers. Four colored regiments made high marks in the last war, why were they broken up?

And, as Rep. Hamilton Fish reminds the Secretary, it is passing strange that French Senegalese, whole divisions of Indians, Russians and Japanese of lower educational qualifications than colored Americans have been heroes in this war.

And he might have added that Southern whites with lower I.Q.'s than Northern colored boys arrange to make out quite all right in Secretary Stimson's combat troops.

Mr. Fish is absolutely right. We have been in this war two years and, save for a squad of flyers, Mr. Stimson and the War Department have treated us like half-wit step-children unworthy of democracy or the freedom to fight for it.

Here's Army Third Degree

The first night that I was under arrest, Lt. Teeples said to me, "If you won't play ball with us, we will have to play ball on your head." I asked him what he meant, and he showed me a blackjack.

He later said: "If I have to shoot you and hang you to a tree to be sure we have the man who did this, I'll do that."

It was about 2:30 a.m when I was taken down to my cell and I wasn't questioned any more that night. I got a bad chill that night, and the next morning the doctor looked me over and ordered me to the hospital. However, I was not taken to the hospital that day. About 11:30 p.m., I was taken back upstairs and they questioned me again. Afro American - Baltimore, Md.

Would Use Slug on Him

Lt. Teeples said that he saw by my report that I was supposed to go to the hospital. He then said that they didn't have to send me to the hospital, but that they would put me back in the cell, and it would save them using a slug on me

I asked him what he meant. He said that at sunrise they would have to shoot me. I told them that they might as well start shooting. Lt. Teeples then said that I didn't act like I was afraid Sgt. Donahue jumped up and asked if I wanted to fight him. I said that it didn't matter, that if he wanted me to, I would.

They stopped questioning me for a while and I went to sleep. After I had slept in the chair for a while, I was wakened by Sgt. Danahue and Lt. Teeples shaking me on each side. They said they were ready to go and for me to come on.

Threaten to Shoot Again 3-4-44

They grabbed my arms and said they were going to shoot me that night. Lt. Teeples said: "Your people won't know anything about you. They will think a Jap got hold of you."

They took me back to my cell about 3:00 a.m It was cold there and I had no blankets. About 3:30, they called me back upstairs and asked me to sign a statement. When I refused, they said that since I wasn't going to the hospital they would let me have two blankets. At my trial my defense counsel would not let me testify, but I insisted on my right to do so. . . . I got to testify for myself by simply going and sitting down in the witness chair after a recess and against the advice of my counsel. . . . I don't think my counsel asked me any questions or helped me out in any way.

[illegible] WAR STIMSON'S admission that [illegible] no combat colored troops on the fighting [illegible] fronts give cause for sober reflection.

Philadelphia Tribune - Philadelphia, Pa. 3-11-44

Colored combat units are being broken up and these soldiers turned into stevedores and given service duties at docks and supply dumps.

Mr. Stimson says that such transfers were made because of the low educational qualifications of a large percentage of colored inductees, the limitations of manpower, and immediate need of service units.

The TRIBUNE agrees with Congressman Hamilton Fish of New York, that the policy appears to be a "deliberate plan to keep Negro soldiers out of actual combat."

In all the wars in which this nation has participated colored soldiers have acquitted themselves well as combat troops. Is it not then singular that colored troops in the present global struggle lack the qualifications necessary to engage in combat duties?

Perhaps the answer to the War Department's attitude may be found in the fact that the "color problem" looms across the world as never before in our history. It is barely possible that there is a studied plan to prevent colored soldiers from fighting as combat troops in order to keep the colored people in their place—the hewers of wood and the drawers of water.

Certainly there is a large percentage of illiteracy among colored troops. How could it be otherwise when the United States Government permits millions of its citizens to live in perpetual darkness because the South wishes to exploit colored people by keeping them in ignorance?

Surely, Mr. Stimson does not believe that all colored Americans should suffer punishment because some of them, through no fault of their own, are illiterate.

Service troops are needed. Manpower is needed at docks and supply dumps. But why must all colored troops, regardless of their respective abilities, be forced to act as "maids-in-waiting" for those who in many instances have less ability? 3-11-44

The United States of America is at war. Unless America wins, all Americans of every color, of every creed and of every race will suffer. Were it not for that fact, it might be permissible to allow the "brass hats" to continue their stupid policy and break their own necks.

These smear campaigns are often a deliberate plan to lower the morale of colored citizens on both the fighting and home fronts, so as to prevent colored people from securing equality of opportunity.

This despicable policy of the War Department will not cause those who are determined to achieve victory, both at home and on the battlefield, to retreat a single inch.

Color Prejudice Ruled Out At Army Center By Colonel

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.

4-8-44

INDIANTOWN GAP, Pa.—(ANP)—"Race prejudice has not been, is not, and will not be tolerated at this camp," recently declared Col. Forrest E. Ambroso, commanding officer of the transportation corps unit training center, at Indiantown Gap. The declaration was made to all of the troops in the center in a series of talks with each of the eight battalions in training. "You are American soldiers, wearing the uniform of your country, and you have a right to expect to be treated as such," emphatically declared the colonel. "Prejudice, discrimination, and segregation on the basis of color at this camp will not be tolerated, and if there are any such cases, I personally want to know about them at once."

MERIT ALONE

The colonel told the men that they would rise or fall on their individual merits alone. He pointed out to them that despite the restrictions on the number of officer candidates, they would have equal chances with anyone else, within the reduced quotas, to become officers.

The men were frankly told, however, that they themselves must assume certain responsibilities "in helping to improve your character and efficiency as soldiers and men and to maintain the excellent records already set by other colored troops who have preceded you."

MORE EFFICIENT 4-8-44

"Our mission is to train and develop ourselves into good soldiers so that we may do our full share as American citizens. This job we have to do would be materially hindered by excessive absence without leave, by sickness and by other things which cause us to lose training time," the colored asserted. "To demonstrate your quality, we must seek constantly to reduce the amount of training time lost, not alone to keep our records as good as those of other units, but to make them better and thereby to become more efficient soldiers and more useful and happier citizens."

The lectures were a part of the orientation program of the training center, which is receiving increasing attention in Army circles for its work among the colored troops of Indiantown Gap.

PAC, Negro Leaders Hail Army Anti-Bias Order

Daily Worker — New York, N.Y.

PAC and Negro leaders this week lauded the War Department action ending segregation in Army post exchanges, buses and motion picture theatres. All agreed that the order moves the Negro soldier one step nearer the work of a full-edged fighting man and is another move in President Roosevelt's drive to smash Jimcrow. 9-14-44

SIDNEY HILLMAN, PAC chairman, stated:

"Now that the War Department is taking steps to ban segregation in its post exchanges, transportation facilities and theatres, the day when we shall hear the death knell of all forms of Jimcrow in our armed forces cannot be far distant. The Army order clearly indicates that so long as President Roosevelt remains in office, the Negro people's steady forward progress will continue unabated. The President's actions speak louder than the pious promises of Republican candidates."

LESTER GRANGER, executive secretary of the National Urban League, termed the anti-Jimcrow order "a welcome recognition of the Federal Government's responsibility toward the men and women who wear the uniform of the United States Army."

WILLARD S. TOWNSEND, president of the United Transport Service Employees (CIO), predicted that the order would help morale.

"Strict enforcement of the order will mean that we are on our way to the goal of a truly democratic army, with equal rights and equal opportunities for all. The improvement in morale should be immediately apparent." ROBERT C. WEAVER, director of the Mayor's Committee on Race Relations, Chicago, and member of the National Citizens PAC Executive Board, stated: 7-14-44

"It is action in the right direction. It gives the supporters of the present administration additional hope and confidence in President Roosevelt. It has been appreciated and endorsed by Negroes everywhere. It has established a firm basis upon which an all out attack upon a segregated army may be carried forth."

GEORGE L-P WEAVER, director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Racial Discrimination, said:

"The directive is the first step toward eliminating the abominable conditions the Negro soldier is subjected to in the United States Army. In the light of President Roosevelt's record on questions affecting minorities, we feel sure that there will be no modification of the directive." 9-14-44

EDWARD DUDLEY, speaking for the Advancement of Colored People:

"The recent War Department order banning segregation in army camps with respect to post exchanges, theatres and on-the-post bus transportation is one additional step towards alleviating a great deal of friction presently existing on military reservations. This order moves the Negro soldier one step nearer that of a full-fledged fighting man."

Sparks Protest to Army Anti-JC Order Overruled

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.

9-16-44

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (ANP) — "All soldiers, regardless of race, must be afforded equal opportunity to enjoy the recreational facilities, which are provided at Army posts, camps and stations," Acting Secretary of War Robert Patterson wrote Gov. Chauncey M. Sparks recently.

The governor made public the reply he received to the protest lodged with the President over the recent Memorandum 97, which abolished segregation at Army camps and said that the letter shall not constitute an answer to his telegram to the President.

Patterson, to whom the President referred the telegram, took issue with Sparks's contentions that the order "violates a State-wide practice and belief and aggravates rather than helps" race relations.

Equality in Everything

"Men who are fulfilling the same obligations, suffering the same dislocation of their private lives, and wearing the identical uniform should, within the confines of the military establishment, have the same privileges for rest and relaxation," he wrote.

Commenting, the governor said, "I agree that colored men should be given equal facilities, but there should be segregation. I understand the War Department order also applies to civilian personnel of Army posts."

Bomber Pilots Victims Of Continued Prejudice

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.

4-29-44

By HERMAN HILL, Pacific Coast Bureau

SACRAMENTO, Calif.—Despite widespread national publicity given "official" Army Air Forces jim-crow practices among Negro bomber pilots training at nearby Mather Field, the dour situation remains unchanged. This was learned by the writer from factual information personally garnered Thursday in this city, which is a scant 10 miles from the bomber base.

As has been the case since the original segregation order reputedly given by General Ralph P. Cousins, following an inspection several months ago, Negro and white pilots are still forbidden to eat in the same dining room, and Negro officers are not allowed to make use of the facilities of the base officers club.

Heretofore, the pilots have been assigned to separate quarters, but this order has recently been partially rescinded and the men mixed.

STILL FURTHER SEGREGATION 4-29-44

As revealed in the March 11, issue of The Courier, Negro officers are still attempted to explain away their discrimination against Negroes by blaming it on the "community pattern" of St. Louis.

Charges of discrimination against eight St. Louis plants were aired before the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices at hearings which took two full days in the U. S. district courtroom No. 3 of the Federal Customs and Courthouse, 12th and Market Sts.

Eight Industries Make Excuses

By LUCILLE H. BLUFORD

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—That some Mis- sourians still think and act in terms of 50 years ago was apparent at the FEPC hearings held here Tuesday and Wednesday, August 1 and 2, when representa-

versity of Missouri. 8-11-44

All six took part in the questioning of witnesses of both sides, those presented by the committee's counsel and those of the defending companies. 8-11-44

All eight of the companies cited for violation of the non-discriminatory clauses in their government contracts, appeared before the committee to answer the charges. Some were represented by attorneys, some by company executives and some by both.

More than 50 witnesses, most of them women and most of them with relatives in the service, related their experiences in either being denied employment because they were Negroes or being denied upgrading because of their color. The hearings, the first ever held in Missouri, were conducted much in the fashion of a court trial with the committee members seated in front and below the judge's bench. Chairman Ross presided with the other committee members in interposing questions and making comments at will.

Tuesday's Hearing

The high point of Tuesday's hearing came when George B. Logan, counsel for the Bussman Manufacturing company, makers of electrical fuses for the operation of communications, naval vessels, radio, radar and all types of essential activities, read a 7-page statement on the reasons why it does not hire Negro women while at the same time employing white women.

The refusal, Logan said, was not due to any policy-making on the part of the Bussman company but the reason "goes far back in the history of this State and area.....This reason is the deep -seated and pratically universal unwillingness of the people of St. Louis and Missouri to integrate the two races..... Integrating and intermingling of the races in St. Louis is simply contrary to the established social pattern. This is particularly true of women." 8-11-44

Logan pointed out that it is the "considered judgment" of the company that it cannot successfully employ white and colored women side by side and that it has no facilities for segregation in places of work or in dressing and rest rooms.

The company also emphasized the fact that it did not need to hire Negro women because there are plenty of white women available for employment.

Logan indicated that nothing the FEPC or the army did could make it change its position. "We have made up our minds that we can't do what the committee wants," he said. The implication was that if the FEPC insisted upon its hiring of Negro women, the company would hand over the plant to the army or navy. 8-11-44

Matter of Degree

Milton Webster asked the companies how Americans could go around the world to fight intolerance when they refuse to practice democracy at home.

"Must this pattern be continued indefinitely?" he asked. "The problem of war is bigger than any of us. White and Negro men are dying in it. Can't we practice here at home the democracy they are carrying into far lands and fighting for?"

The company spokesman answered, "It's a matter of degree, timing and the community pattern."

It was apparent that representatives of the defending companies had been in conference over the FEPC charges made against them as their arguments had a common theme—the "community pattern" of segregation in St. Louis. 8-11-44

A spokesman for the Amertorp corporation, which makes torpedoes for the Navy, said that this company did not hire Negro women because its white women workers would not tolerate it. Amertorp is not guilty of discrimination, however, he contended, because it hires Negro men. Such "reasoning" was typical of the attitude of the companies. Charges against the Wagner Electric company and the Carter Carburetor company also were heard on Tuesday. Neither hire Negro women. 8-11-44

Other Charges

On Wednesday, charges against four other companies were heard: the U. S. Cartridge company, operators of the St. Louis Ordnance plant; the St. Louis Shipbuilding and Steel company, the McDonnell Aircraft corporation and the McQuay - Norris Manufacturing company, makers of bullets.

The St. Louis Ordnance plant was charged with terminating Negro employes without regard to seniority. The company maintains a dual seniority system, one for whites and the other for Negroes. Negro workers are limited to one of the company's eight buildings. The company said it felt the best way to assure Negroes their proportionate amount of employment was to set them up in a separate unit.

Negroes, being the last hired, were the hardest hit when "cutbacks" were made. The company defended its policy of a jim-crow plant by saying that the plan had been approved by Negro organizations in St. Louis. This was vigorously denied by Negro leaders. 8-11-44

Main Objection

William Sentner, vice president of the United Electric and Radio Workers (CIO) blasted the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce for a statement of policy it issued to war plants in 1942 urging the utilization of Negroes in industry in separate units and urging the setting up of separate facilities, special times for arrival and departure, and other means of keeping the races apart.

Sentner said that the union warned the St. Louis Ordnance company that the jim crow policy would not work. He said that the main objection to hiring Negroes does not spring from the laborers themselves but from the policy-making industrialists.

C. N. Pearson, superintendent of the USES, took the stand several times during the two-day hearings to testify that orders received from the defending companies specified that "white workers only" were wanted. The companies denied this, saying that such orders were mistakes or that the USES itself had prompted the racial specification. 8-11-44

Among Those Present

Roy Hogland and Theodore Brown of the Kansas City regional office of the FEPC, were on the witness stand several times. They told of conferences they had with company executives in which a policy of discrimination or segregation was firmly stated.

Lewis W. Clymer, minorities group representative with the regional WMC office in Kansas City, also testified on conferences in which discrimination policies were set forth.

Kansas Citians seen in the audience during the hearings included Miss Robbie Arnold, registrar at Lincoln high school and chairman of the Kansas City Council for a Permanent FEPC; Thomas A. Webster, executive secretary of the Kansas City Urban League; Mrs. Dorothy Davis, public relations secretary of the Urban League; Mrs. Lonnetta Groves of the Kansas City FEPC office; Eugene Ormsby of the FEPC office.

A. Phillip Randolph, national leader of the Council for a Permanent FEPC, was an interested spectator both days. 8-11-44

No Decisions Made

The President's committee made no decision on any of the cases but as has been customary in past hearings took them under advisement. A statement of findings will be issued after the evidence presented has been studied and weighed. The committee left here for the west coast to conduct hearings August 8 and 9 at Los Angeles.

With the committee members came George Johnson, deputy chairman, brother of Dr. William Johnson of Kansas City; and St. Clair Bourne, information specialist with the FEPC.

Serving as counsel for the committee during the hearings were Frank D. Reeves and Ernest G. Trimble of the committee's legal staff. The two counsel alternated cases, each handling four during the two days. 8-11-44

The hearings were fully covered by three daily newspapers, the Post-Dispatch, the Globe-Democrat and the Star-Times and by three out-of-town Negro papers, the Courier, the Afro-American and THE CALL as well as by the St. Louis Argus and St. Louis American.

Jim Crow Died . . . In A Mess Hall

White Soldier Tells How True Democracy Works On Pacific Isle

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.
4-22-44

FORT BENNING, Ga.—When white soldiers from Texas, Alabama, New Jersey shout down a tough mess sergeant who attempts to set up jim-crow quarters for Negro troops, that in itself is evidence that this war is doing some good i breaking down discrimination and segregation. The story is told by a white soldier, Pv Gerald L. Landau, now in training here as a paratrooper, after spending 16 months overseas on an island in the Pacific. His letter in part reads:

"HUGE LABOR GANG"

"I served on an island in the New Hebrides group. Our original task force included the now famous 24th Infantry . . It soon developed when we hit the island that the entire force was one huge labor gang. Negroes as well as soldiers from engineer, field artillery and medical units and Negro men from the 24th Infantry and the 828th Engineers. We played tennis together, went to the movies together, ate meals together and did everything except bunk together . . . The staff sergeant in charge of the mess hall was from North Carolina. He got the idea of setting up jim-crow tables. It was pitiful. The guys from New York and Jersey, and, Hell, yes, even the guys from Texas and Alabama, shouted this moron down. Jim crow died a sudden death in that mess hall. 4-22-44 JIM CROW COULDN'T EXIST

"In the close association of the troops on the island jim crow couldn't exist. Not everything was perfect, but it was a far cry from the deal Negro troops get in the States. The closer you get to combat, the more a man realizes that a man's a man, no matter what his color, religion or politics might be. "I believe that segregation as a way of life for any people is wrong. That is what I'm fighting against. It is doubly wrong in this country. If the U. S. Lynn Committee Circulates Petition Asking Candidates Their Stand On Segregation In Armed Forces

7-8-44

The Lynn Committee To Abolish Segregation In The Armed Forces, 360 West 125th street on Tuesday circulated a petition for signatures to a letter containing four questions for their answers, which will be to be asked all Presidential and Congressional candidates for office this year on their views concerning racial segregation in the American Armed Forces?

The Four questions to be asked of the candidates are:

1. Do you believe there should be racial segregation in the American Armed Forces?
2. Just what do you believe the "no discrimination" clause, Section 4 (a) of the 1940 Draft Act means?
3. If you are elected, will you take steps to see that segregation is abolished in the Armed Forces?
4. Finally, have you any proposals of your own, not covered above, to remedy the injustices now being done to hundreds of thousands of American boys now serving in the Armed Forces of their country?

The petitions are being sent to known opponents of segregation for signing in their Congressional Districts and are to be returned to the Committee by August 1st. The petitions will then be forwarded by the Committee to the candidates for their answers, which will be publicized.

versity of Missouri. 8-11-44

All six took part in the questioning of witnesses of both sides, those presented by the committee's counsel and those of the defending companies. 8-11-44

All eight of the companies cited for violation of the non-discriminatory clauses in their government contracts, appeared before the committee to answer the charges. Some were represented by attorneys, some by company executives and some by both.

More than 50 witnesses, most of them women and most of them with relatives in the service, related their experiences in either being denied employment because they were Negroes or being denied upgrading because of their color. The hearings, the first ever held in Missouri, were conducted much in the fashion of a court trial, with the committee members seated in front and below the judge's bench. Chairman Ross presided with the other committee members in interposing questions and making comments at will.

Tuesday's Hearing

The high point of Tuesday's hearing came when George B. Logan, counsel for the Bussman Manufacturing company, makers of electrical fuses for the operation of communications, naval vessels, radio, radar and all types of essential activities, read a 7-page statement on the reasons why it does not hire Negro women while at the same time employing white women.

The refusal, Logan said, was not due to any policy-making on the part of the Bussman company but the reason "goes far back in the history of this State and area.....This reason is the deep -seated and pratically universal unwillingness of the people of St. Louis and Missouri to integrate the two races..... Integrating and intermingling of the races in St. Louis is simply contrary to the established social pattern. This is particularly true of women." 8-11-44

Logan pointed out that it is the "considered judgment" of the company that it cannot successfully employ white and colored women side by side and that it has no facilities for segregation in places of work or in dressing and rest rooms.

The company also emphasized the fact that it did not need to hire Negro women because there are plenty of white women available for employment.

Logan indicated that nothing the FEPC or the army did could make it change its position. "We have made up our minds that we can't do what the committee wants," he said. The implication was that if the FEPC insisted upon its hiring of Negro women, the company would hand over the plant to the army or navy. 8-11-44

Milton Webster asked the companies how Americans could go around the world to fight intolerance when they refuse to practice democracy at home.

"Must this pattern be continued indefinitely?" he asked. "The problem of war is bigger than any of us. White and Negro men are dying in it. Can't we practice here at home the democracy they are carrying into far lands and fighting for?"

The company spokesman answered, "It's a matter of degree, timing and the community pattern."

It was apparent that representatives of the defending companies had been in conference over the FEPC charges made against them as their arguments had a common theme—the "community pattern" of segregation in St. Louis. 8-11-44

A spokesman for the Amertorp corporation, which makes torpedoes for the Navy, said that this company did not hire Negro women because its white women workers would not tolerate it. Amertorp is not guilty of discrimination, however, he contended, because it hires Negro men. Such "reasoning" was typical of the attitude of the companies. Charges against the Wagner Electric company and the Carter Carburetor company also were heard on Tuesday. Neither hire Negro women.

8-11-44

Other Charges

On Wednesday, charges against four other companies were heard: the U. S. Cartridge company, operators of the St. Louis Ordnance plant; the St. Louis Shipbuilding and Steel company, the McDonnell Aircraft corporation and the McQuay - Norris Manufacturing company, makers of bullets.

The St. Louis Ordnance plant was charged with terminating Negro employes without regard to seniority. The company maintains a dual seniority system, one for whites and the other for Negroes. Negro workers are limited to one of the company's eight buildings. The company said it felt the best way to assure Negroes their proportionate amount of employment was to set them up in a separate unit.

Negroes, being the last hired, were the hardest hit when "cutbacks" were made. The company defended its policy of a jim-crow plant by saying that the plan had been approved by Negro organizations in St. Louis. This was vigorously denied by Negro leaders. 8-11-44

William Sentner, vice president of the United Electric and Radio Workers (CIO) blasted the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce for a statement of policy it issued to war plants in 1942 urging the utilization of Negroes in to industry in separate units and urging the setting up of separate facilities, special times for arrival and departure, and other means of keeping the races apart.

Sentner said that the union warned the St. Louis Ordnance company that the jim crow policy would not work. He said that the main objection to hiring Negroes does not spring from the laborers themselves but from the policy-making industrialists.

C. N. Pearson, superintendent of the USES, took the stand several times during the two-day hearings to testify that orders received from the defending companies specified that "white workers only" were wanted. The companies denied this, saying that such orders were mistakes or that the USES itself had prompted the racial specification. 8-11-44

Among Those Present

Roy Hogland and Theodore Brown of the Kansas City regional office of the FEPC, were on the witness stand several times. They told of conferences they had with company executives in which a policy of discrimination or segregation was firmly stated.

Lewis W. Clymer, minorities group representative with the regional WMC office in Kansas City, also testified on conferences in which discrimination policies were set forth.

Kansas Citians seen in the audience during the hearings included Miss Robbie Arnold, registrar at Lincoln high school and chairman of the Kansas City Council for a Permanent FEPC; Thomas A. Webster, executive secretary of the Kansas City Urban League; Mrs. Dorothy Davis, public relations secretary of the Urban League; Mrs. Lonnetta Groves of the Kansas City FEPC office; Eugene Ormsby of the FEPC office.

A. Phillip Randolph, national leader of the Council for a Permanent FEPC, was an interested spectator both days.

No Decisions Made 8-11-44

The President's committee made no decision on any of the cases but as has been customary in past hearings took them under advisement. A statement of findings will be issued after the evidence presented has been studied and weighed. The committee left here for the west coast to conduct hearings August 8 and 9 at Los Angeles.

With the committee members came George Johnson, deputy chairman, brother of Dr. William Johnson of Kansas City; and St. Clair Bourne, information specialist with the FEPC.

Serving as counsel for the committee during the hearings were Frank D. Reeves and Ernest G. Trimble of the committee's legal staff. The two counsel alternated cases, each handling four during the two days. 8-11-44

The hearings were fully covered by three daily newspapers, the Post-Dispatch, the Globe-Democrat and the Star-Times and by three out-of-town Negro papers, the Courier, the Afro-American and THE CALL as well as by the St. Louis Argus and St. Louis American.

Jim Crow Died . . . In A Mess Hall

White Soldier Tells How True Democracy Works On Pacific Isle

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa. 4-22-44

FORT BENNING, Ga.—When white soldiers from Texas, Alabama, New York an New Jersey shout down a tough mess sergeant who attempts to set up jim-crow qua ters for Negro troops, that in itself is evidence that this war is do breaking down discrimination and segregation. The story is told by a Gerald L. Landau, now in training here as a paratrooper, att ending 16 months overseas on an island in the Pacific. His letter in part reads:

"HUGE LABOR GANG"

"I served on an island in the New Hebrides group. Our original task force included the now famous 24th Infantry . It soon developed when we hit the island that the entire force was one huge labor gang. Negroes as well as soldiers from engineer, field artillery and medical units and Negro men from the 24th Infantry and the 828th Engineers. We played tennis together, went to the movies together, ate meals together and did everything except bunk together . . . The staff sergeant in charge of the mess hall was from North Carolina. He got the idea of setting up jim-crow tables. It was pitiful. The guys from New York and Jersey, and, Hell, yes, even the guys from Texas and Alabama, shouted this moron down. Jim crow died a sudden death in that mess hall. 4-22-44

JIM CROW COULDN'T EXIST

"In the close association of the troops on the island jim crow couldn't exist. Not everything was perfect, but it was a far cry from the deal Negro troops get in the States. The closer you get to combat, the more a man realizes that a man's a man, no matter what his color, religion or politics might be. MISTREATMENT

Courier-Pittsburgh, Pa.

By JOSEPH D. BIBB

3-4-44

Lack of Combat Units And Jim-Crow Patterns Are Proofs of Army Bias

COLORED American soldiers are being mistreated and denied the right and duty to serve their country with the same dignity as other Americans. Secretary of War Stimson is in grievous error when he asserts that colored soldiers are being fairly treated. If the War Department would be courteous and considerate enough to receive and review a fair and honest "bill of particulars" exposing the general treatment accorded these soldiers, it is inconceivable how the issues could be whitewashed and evaded.

Mr. Bibb

Those who deem themselves free men, engaged in the so-called protection of the rights of weak people, must consider themselves as being mistreated when they are segregated in separate units of the Army as "fighting lepers." Those same men must deem themselves mistreated when they are shunted off into labor battalions and denied the privilege of first-class fighting. Those who are commanded by Southern whites, who tyrannize, tantalize, insult and abuse them, must consider themselves mistreated. Those whose fellow soldiers suffer and tolerate to be murdered, humiliated and maltreated by civilians, must hold themselves mistreated. Those who cannot find channels through which they can receive a sympathetic and intelligent hearing of their just complaints, must feel that they are not only mistreated, but also are deprived of democratic procedure.

NO DOUBT ABOUT MISTREATMENT

3-4-44

It is just as plain and obvious that the War Department, the Southern brass-hats who sit in the high places in the Army, and most of the subordinates, are mistreating the colored soldiers as is the presence of the sun in its eternal sweep through the skies. When United States Senator Eastland declares that the South is now fighting to uphold "white supremacy" and while other senators, including Senator Smith, express the same sentiments, is there any doubt but that the Southerners, who now officer colored units, are imbued with the same sentiments? Is there any doubt that these indefensible philosophies are not now being put into practice? It is an insult to the intelligent to contend to the contrary.

3-4-44

WOULD the Secretary of War still insist that colored soldiers are not being mistreated, if he knew that many of the colored officers of the 92nd Division became so indignant and resentful that they volunteered to enter the paratroop units in order to escape insult and indignity? Does the erudite and able Stimson know how many members of the 92nd have been court-martialed because their complaints were adjudged "subversive" and smacked of "insubordination"? Does the Senate Military Affairs Committee know that the court-martialing in the 92nd reaches an all-time high record in the Army annals? If these statements are true, then is the colored soldier being given a square deal in the Army?

THE ARMY HAS BEEN GROSSLY UNFAIR

If the history of the colored fighter, in America, is authentic, how can Mr. Stimson accept the ratings showing our inefficiency in the technique of modern weapons of warfare? How can this be true if the glorified exploits of the 99th Bomber Squadron are accepted? From the record, as it is revealed from time to time, we are forced to feel that Mr. Justice Harlan Stone felt as he stated, "It is clear and obvious that the Supreme Court of the United States has been grossly unfair to the colored man." The Army, from the lips of soldiers and officers, has been grossly unfair to our soldiers. Many soldiers have stated that they "preferred death on the front lines, rather than suffer the inhumanities perpetrated against them in Southern camps." Officers avow that the Army has revealed that no promotions in "field grades" are forthcoming for them. "No officers above captains" they say, is the order of the day. These conditions are revolting and suffocating, but very little is being done about them. Most of the complaints are "white-washed."

3-4-44

MEN of the colored race are going around in the Army with the white-wash brushes. General Benjamin O. Davis, a member of the colored race, is being roundly accused as being an ace white-washer. Hamilton Fish, New York Congressman and formerly colonel of the 15th Regiment of New York, has expressed his resentment, but most of the colored leaders are heard mumbling and grumbling, telling their tales of woe, but cautioning their listeners in the same breath, "Don't quote me."

SECRETARY OF WAR ATTACKS RECORD OF RACE COMBAT UNITS

His Letter to Hamilton Fish Says Negro Units Unable to Master Techniques of Modern Weapons

BULLETIN: CHICAGO—Calling upon President Roosevelt to oust Henry L. Stimson as Secretary of War, a mass meeting here Sunday sponsored by the National Negro Council and the Chicago Committee of 1,000, adopted a resolution calling the statement of Stimson as "unfounded and utterly false" and as appearing "close to the line of national disservice." Speakers claimed the ouster of Stimson would speed victory over the Axis nations.

By JOHN P. DAVIS, Courier Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—"Secretary Stimson should resign immediately."

3-4-44

Speaking was Representative William L. Dawson, lone Negro member of Congress. And he was fighting mad.

He added quickly: "He is either woefully ignorant on the matter of Negro troops or is purposely carrying out the pattern of fascist elements within the military establishment whose purpose is to discredit the Negro fighting men of this nation."

Hamilton Fish

This stinging rebuke by the Illinois Democratic Representative who himself officered Negro troops under fire in World War I, was directed at Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson because of assertions made by Stimson in a letter to Representative Hamilton Fish (Rep.-N.Y.), giving the Army General Staff's reasons why Negro troops have not been committed to combat.

3-4-44

The denunciation of Stimson by the Illinois Democrat came after Representative Fish, another congressman who commanded Negro combat troops in World War I, had read the Stimson letter on the floor of the House last Wednesday and had sharply castigated the War Secretary for his announced policy of breaking up many Negro combat units and converting them into service detachments. The Newark York Republican had written Stimson on February 1 asking for an explanation for the failure to use Negro ground troops in combat after 26 months of United States participation in World War II.

SWEEPING CHARGES AGAINST MANY UNITS

3-4-44

The Stimson reply, in all probability prepared by officers of the Operations Division of the Army General Staff and merely signed by the War Secretary, made sweeping charges of incompetency for combat against many Negro troops, and especially against field artillery and tank destroyer units which were originally parts of the Eighth Illinois infantry regiment.

Stimson admitted that large numbers of the Negro soldiers in the 930th and 931st Field Artillery Battalions had been placed in service units and that the skeletons of these outfits which remained are scheduled to be converted into combat engineer units. He ascribed the "unsatisfactory records" of the units as the reason why they were not to be converted into heavy artillery ballations.

"In converting combat units to service units," Stimson wrote Fish, "the War Department's selection of units to be converted has been based solely on the relative abilities, capabilities and status of training of personnel in the units available for conversion. It so happens that a relatively large percentage of Negroes inducted into the Army have fallen within lower educational classifications, and many of the Negro units accordingly have been unable to master efficiently the techniques of modern weapons. To have committed such units to combat at the dates of conversion would have endangered operational successes as well as submitted the personnel to unnecessarily high casualty rates."

TOO DUMB TO FIGHT

Despite disclaimers contained in the Stimson letter that the War Department has a policy of discrimination against Negro combat units, the obvious implication that many Negro troops are too dumb to fight has stirred up a hornet's nest here. There is no question that the issue of competency of Negro fighting men provoked by Stimson's letter will become of major importance in the 1944 campaign.

3-4-44

Quick to reply to Stimson, Republican Congressman Fish declared on the floor of the House: "It seems passing strange that French Senegalese or whole British divisions from India have been fighting so superbly with our allies, and that Russians with low educational qualifications have been heroes of this war, and that even the Japanese with lesser educational qualifications than American Negroes, have been found to be brave and efficient soldiers."

"Mr. Stimson's assertion is pure bunk," declared Perry W. Howard, Republican National Committeeman from Mississippi in a letter to the New York Congressman urging him to keep up his fight for the right of Negro soldiers to fight in defense of their country.

DENY CHARGES ARE CORRECT

Meanwhile Negro Democratic leaders, assembled here last week, adopted a resolution condemning "without reservation the mistreatment, discrimination and segregation of Negro men and women in the armed forces of the United States." And Congressman Dawson, continuing his statement to The Pittsburgh Courier, declared, "The diabolical activities of some brass hats in strategical positions within the military establishment of the nation is sabotaging the real American program of the President, is robbing the nation of the services of thousands of first class fighting men and causing the death of hundreds of white boys who must fill the front line places of Negro boys who are ready and eager to do their bit if given the chance."

The issue provoked by the Stimson letter has been smoldering for many months in the War Department. It was one of the reasons for the resignation of Judge William H. Hastie as civilian aide to the Secretary of War. Back of the resistance to the use of Negro combat troops lies the attitude of brass hat generals, many from the South. Chief of the Operations Division of the Army General Staff is Major General Thomas T. Handy of Spring City, Tenn., educated in Virginia. It is this division which allocates troop units and determines policies of unit conversion. It seems likely that it is this division which determined the policies expressed in Stimson's letter.

UNITS COMMENDED

3-4-44

In point of fact informed sources here, now have had personal knowledge of the record of Negro troops, vigorously deny the charge of incompetency. These sources point out that the 930th and 931st Field Artillery battalions were formerly parts of the 184th Field Artillery Regiment. All officers of the 184th passed the artillery officers' school at Fort Sill, Okla., satisfactorily, they stated. The 184th was the first regiment to pass the Second Army firing tests and was commended highly by Lt. General Ben Lear for their competency.

Here is the way one anonymous officer of the 184th put it: "We would be given a firing test and pass it. Then 50 per cent of our men would be pulled out of the outfit and we would be given another exam and pass it again. They have us tests when we hardly had

Fearing Truth, House Military Group Bans "Races of Mankind"

Tribune-Washington, D.C.

3-11-44

Fifty-five thousand copies of a pamphlet, "The Races of Mankind," designed to break down the racial superiority theory of Hitlerism, according to the authors, are collecting mold in Government warehouses because Rep. Andrew J. May, (Dem., Ky.), chairman of the House Military Committee, has coerced the War Department to keep it out of the hands of American soldiers because, primarily, it says that Northern Negroes living under better conditions and are intellectually superior to underprivileged Southern whites.

The booklet is the same which the United Service Organizations recently banned from its centers. Subsequently, its distribution was promoted by the CIO War Relief Committee.

Chairman May said the War Department abandoned plans to distribute the book in connection with its orientation courses after the committee threatened to "expose the motives behind this book." The purpose of the pamphlet, he declared, was to teach racial equality, especially the equality of white men and Negroes.

What irked Representative May and other committee members was what the Kentuckian said was a claim in the book that surveys indicated the average Negro in New York, Connecticut, and Massachusetts was the intellectual equal of the average white resident of Kentucky, Arkansas, and Mississippi.

Attacks Modern Prejudice

The pamphlet's purpose is to attack the comparatively modern disease of race prejudice by an exposition, in layman's terms, of the history of mankind. Its basic contention is that intelligence tests show no difference between the races when economic and educational advantages are equal.

So far as the committee is concerned, May said, "It won't be distributed by the Army. If it is, we will have plenty to say and it will be said right on the floor of the House. It has no place in the Army program."

While no further committee action is contemplated, May added, "we intend to keep an eye open to see that this book does not go out to our soldiers through War Department channels. If it does, somebody is going to do plenty of explaining."

Stimson Says Negro Combat Troops to Get Own Officers

Tribune-Washington, D.C.

3-11-44

In line with Secretary of War Stimson's admission that the Army has a policy of converting Negro combat troops and technicians into service troops and belief his comment will be a major issue for Negro voters in November, is the revelation that a group of Negro radio operators and technicians was recently changed over into a labor battalion.

In the face of the criticisms, Mr. Stimson stated that Negro field officers up to lieutenant colonel will be placed in command of colored combat troops now under the command of white troops.

Promotions of four officers in the Medical Corps at Ft. Huachuca were also announced this week.

Qualified officers of the 930th and 931st Field Artillery regiment formed of the old 8th Illinois, National Guard, will be assigned to the field artillery units it was said.

3-11-44

Coincidental with the announcement, Mr. Stimson was asked about the disposition of the field artillery officers in view of the intimation in the letter to Mr. Fish that some Negro units were "unable to master efficiently the techniques of modern weapons."

He denied that the War Department policy was one which held that American Negro troops cannot be made into satisfactory combat units.

The two high officers slated to be transferred to the 92nd Division in keeping with the new policy are Lt. Cols. Marcus Day and Wendell Derricks, both of Chicago. Many officers are expected to receive transfers also.

Sergeant Charges Negro Radio Experts Made Into Labor Unit

Tribune-Washington, D.C.

3-11-44

Wide-spread resentment exhibited by press, organizations, and individuals over Secretary of War Stimson's recent letter to Rep. Hamilton Fish (Rep., N.Y.), criticizing the efficiency of Negroes as combat troops, has brought about a change in the War Department policy, it was revealed last week.

The information was received by the New York office of the NAACP in a letter from a Negro sergeant. The irony of the situation was heightened by the fact that German war prisoners stationed near these Negro troops are said by the sergeant to be receiving better treatment than American Negro soldiers.

The letter says in part:

"When the division was shipped to....., we were left in Fort .....; later we learned that we were coming to this camp to form a battalion. Since our troop was composed mostly of radio operators and radio technicians, we were reasonably certain that it would be an operations battalion because a construction battalion hasn't any place for communications men.

"Upon our arrival we found that we were going to be formed into a construction battalion after being merged with the.....F.A.

"A lot of us have asked for transfers, but all we run into is red tape and that is when an enlisted man loses his case.

"There is a trend in the Army, at present, to transfer all Negro soldiers from the Army Ground Forces and put them into the Army Service Forces no matter if they are qualified for other types of work.

"In this camp we are also forced to live in an area that should be condemned. All our sanitary facilities are outside and across the street in a poorly heated building. The barracks we live in are heated by two stoves, one at each end of the barrack.

JIM CROW IS NOT DEAD IN THE NAVY

Northwest Enterprise – Seattle, wash.

The old spirit still rules in the U. S. Navy as well as the U. S. Army. This is true despite all the propaganda recently emanating from the Public Relations Division of the Navy and certain elements in the Negro Newspaper Publishers Association. After two days of being wined and dined and flattered at Great Lakes Training Station, some of our Negro editors, notably Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., of the People's Voice, have catapulted into the camp of appeasers and apologists for ole man Jimcro, and have brazenly sought to whitewash the rigid segregation policy of the Navy.

In the Great Lakes Naval Training Station rigid separation of Negro and white enlisted men is the policy. No intermingling of the races is permitted either in training or in recreation. There are times when Negro sailors are taken to witness a basketball, or hockey, or football game. They are permitted only to see their fellow white sailors on the opposite benches. They never participate in games together. 3-29-44

The whole policy of the Navy is to build a black Navy which will be the labor force of the regular Navy. These men are to be used to patrol and and in shore craft work and shore activities, which means building and guarding Naval bases, ammunition dumps, warehouses and doing guard patrol work over bases and islands captured from the Japanese in the Pacific. Negroes are discouraged from applying for special service. For whites special service means a petty officer's rating as machinists or boatswain or coxwain or athletic instructor, and numerous other specialist work, for Negroes it means only messmen and seabees, and there are enough messmen. The once much-publicized seabees program is being curtailed, for the black Navy is slated to do this work. The Negro enlisted man is being told on arrival at the Station that only one out of ten sailors ride on ships. This is to prepare him for his laboring job. The 22 commissioned Negroes, which seems to have struck such emotional people as Powell as the "emancipation" will be nothing more than oversees in in the black Navy. Jimcro in gold braid is still jimcro.

Negro Waves will soon be accepted. This is in line with the basic policy. They will be as segregated as the Wacs are. Also the quota for Negro dentists and chaplains and Negro nurses will be increased. The reason Powell gives for this is illuminating because "until the change is made it will mean that white nurses will be forced to work under Negro doctors and dentists." This cannot be permitted. In a war allegedly fought for democracy, in a camp which Powell tells us represents the "best atmosphere of democracy to be found in any of our service camps" it is unthinkable for a white nurse to serve a Negro doctor. 3-29-44

Jimcro in Uniform is the war's greatest scandal. No Army or Navy camp which practices it and glorifies it can approach the spirit of democracy. Men are segregated only because they are thought to be different and inferior. The sweet talk of the Navy's Public Relations Division is calculated to fool the people. Any Negro given a big job in this division will be just another office boy paid off to dislead the people. Jimcro in Uniform must be fought. Jimcro in Uniform must go.

Northwest Enterprise – Seattle, wash.

Sunday afternoon one of the nation's foremost advocates of racial unity, now and forever, Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdik, appealed to the heart of white America to heed the warning of this present universal hell and fury . . . to come clean and expell all the bias and prejudice used against the Colored races of the world.

Well—it is indeed gratifying to hear the learned clergy of white America cry out in high places to accept the Christian principle and "do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

Contrasting the clairvoyant echo of Dr. Fosdik—it all came back to us again and again! We thought of one of the most damnable conditions in this area. Here, where thousands of Negro troops and sailors are on duty, the USO presents a monstrous hazard, in that, although it has provided a very small, inconvenient place of entertainment, the larger USO centers within the city show a laxity for allowing Negro servicemen the full and deserved rights of men in the service of their nation. 3-15-44

If our boys are forced, and they are, to walk the streets of Seattle for lack of convenient diversion, to lounge around in cheap, dirty theatres and to solicit friends by means of vandals and rogues . . . then Seattle is definitely a liability to the necessity of coping with the problems of ever-increasing delinquency in low places about the city.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THIS CONDITION? THIS BREEDING OF BRAZEN UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITY?

For a certainty all Seattle is guilty and responsible as long as it exists. What is going to be done about it?

Leaders of both races are lost in the whirl of indifference, or they are indeed STUPID. 3-15-44

These Servicemen, here in our midst, will long remember their experiences here and in many cases some of them will be definitely affected by the stagnant water of civic lethargy, bearing down upon them.

This is inconsistent. Common sense demands, within the bounds of a city the size of Seattle, it should be met with an adequate answer—the fruits of this condition are bitter. We feel this is a common sense demand and question the civic spirit: the spirit of making and preserving a better city, under such hypocritic harping of being "'good, loyal American citizens."

If other cities throughout the United States display hospitality as does Seattle to the men who may, needs be, die to protect them . . . then we say "God Bless America." And for certain only such, Providence can keep alive the loud cry of senseless, patriotic citizens and cities.

Do you think at all, or anything about this situation?

All right Seattle . . . WHERE DO YOU STAND?

WHAT IS YOUR ANSWER TO THIS PROBLEM

Our Servicemen should go in large numbers to these larger USO centers . . . maybe then . . . the inclination of Jim Crow, but at the same time expressed their determination to become the "best damn pilots in the air force," in spite of it all.

NEGRO PILOTS, B-25 BOMBERS AT MATHER FIELD, ESTABLISH TRADITION

By HARRY McALPIN, Correspondent The Atlanta Daily World and NNPA. 3-15-44

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The Negro service men all over the American Air Forces—about pilots, in training at Mather Field, Calif., who have thrown down the gauntlet to Ol' Jim Crow, but at the same time expressed their determination to become the "best damn pilots in the air force," in spite of it all.

Every man in that first class Negro bomber pilot training unit already overtaxed?

of pilots (now in advanced training at Selfridge Field, Mich.) and in the succeeding classes which have followed, should be awarded a hero's medal of some kind—only the army does decorate its men for this type of heroism. 3-16-44

Here's the story.

When training of the Negro pilots for operation of B-25 bombers began, there was no segregation at Mather Field. Classrooms mess hall, etc, were operated as one would expect in a democracy. There was never the slightst racial friction.

Then came Maj. Gen. Ralph P. Cousins to the field on an inspection trip. Among his first orders to the camp commander was one for separation of the Negro from the whites in the mess hall.

The commander was flabbergasted. But in the Army, orders from men of higher rank become law. He called in the Negro pilots and told them the situation. 3-15-44

One of the spokesmen for the group asked if the men were under orders to eat in the mess hall. He was told they were not.

From that day to this not a single Negro pilot has eaten in the Jim Crow mess hall. They dig into their own pockets and buy their food from the post exchange, in addition to paying their regular mess assessment.

The PX is staffed exclusively by whites, mostly women. But the entire force was instrict sympathy with the Negro pilots. They came to work earlier in order to serve breakfast to the "jim-crowed" pilots and get them on the field in time.

Then came Christmas. The girls were due to have the day off. But they voted to give up their holiday in order to serve the Negro pilots if they did not want to go to town for their Christmas meal. 3-15-44

"No," said the pilots, "we have decided that today would be a good day to do without anything to eat."

Not a single pilot put a morsel in his mouth that Christmas day.

A tradition was thus established. But not a Negro p has eaten in the mess hall since the infamous order of Maj. Gen. Cousins.

The jim-crow order is still in effect.

ROOSEVELT ASKED TO END ARMY, NAVY SEGREGATION

Dispatch — Kansas Rep.

New York, N. Y.—President Roosevelt, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, was called upon this week to order the abolition of segregation by race and color in America's fighting forces to the end that victory may be achieved more speedily by our unified army, and the peace made more secure by the oneness of our civilian population.

The letter to the President, signed by Roy Wilkins, acting secretary of the NAACP, renewed the protest against the slurs on Negro combat troops by Secretary Henry L. Stimson in his letter to Congressman Hamilton Fish and reviewed the discouraging experiences of Negro combat troops in the first World War and in the present conflict.

"The consensus of opinion," said the letter, "is that Mr. Stimson has reflected upon Negro civilians and those in the armed forces, has offered gratuitious insult to the Negro men of a famous Chicago regiment, and has reflected upon the ability and patriotism of Negro citizens generally. 3-17-44

"The colored people feel this insule from a high government official all the more keenly because they are aware that over a period of years extending beyond a quarter of a century, there have been deliberate policies in effect in the War Department designed to attempt to justify the statements contained in Mr. Stimson's letter to Mr. Fish.

"As you have been advised on numerous occasions, Negro Americans are most bitter about the treatment of their men in the armed forces. This is the number one complaint wherever one goes. In a resolution adopted by Negro Democrats in a meeting in Washington February 25-26, it was declared: 'We condemn without reservation the treatment, discrimination and segregation of Negro men and women in the armed forces of the United States.'

"At a similar meeting of Negro Republican workers in Chicago, the number one recommendation adopted was 'end discrimination and segregation in the armed forces.' 3-17-44

"Numerous non-political organizations of Negroes have adopted identical resolutions within the past four years. Thus it cannot be said that Negro citizens are not unified in their resentment against the treatment accorded their men in the armed forces.

"Mr. Stimson avoided a direct answer to Mr. Fish's question as to why, after 21 months overseas, the famous 24th Infantry is engaged in stevedore work in the South Pacific. This is a veteran regular army regiment of professional soldiers with a distinguished history as a combat unit. Mr. Stimson chose not to explain why these men should be engaged in unloading ships.

"Mr. Stimson's letter left unexplained the fact that the day before his letter to Mr. Fish, the War Department had announced the abandonment of college training programs on the ground that all possible combat units were needed in the field. 3-17-44

"In his statement that many of the Negro units have been unable to master efficiently the technique of modern weapons,' Mr. Stimson apparently ignored the fact that the only Negro combat units overseas at the time of his letter consisted of a combat aviation squadron and certain anti-aircraft units. The American public, including Negroes, has been under the impression that these particular branches of the service require the ability to master completely intricate calculations and the most modern of weapons.

"Mr. Roosevelt, the shock and rage of American Negro citizens at the Stimson statements cannot be properly gauged without a review of the experiences of Negro troops in World War I. The unit to which he referred, the old 8th Illinois, made a glorious record in World War I as the 370th Infantry. Even so, they had to make this record as a part of the French Army because, according to undenied reports, their own American commanders did not want them as a part of the American Expeditionary Forces. 3-17-44

"We believe the record of the War Department to date demonstrates clearly that it did have a policy of sharply restricting the use of Negro ground troops as combat units. We believe it is clearly discernible that the War Department intended to channel most of the Negro soldiers into service battalions. We believe that the War Department has had a policy on the training and promotion of Negro officers and that this policy has been to restrict their promotions as much as possible, particularly as line officers. Our belives, we are certain, are shared by millions of Negro Americans who have not needed any organizations or newspapers to tell them the story, but who have learned from the experiences of their relatives and neighbors what a bitterly contradictory dose of 'Americanism' confronts the Negro who wishes to serve his country in the war against Hitlerism.

"We have the conviction, which is shared also by millions of Negro and white Americans, that most of the difficulty stems from the basic policy that men in our armed forces must be segregated according to color. 3-17-44

"We call, therefore, upon you as Commander-in-Chief of our armed forces on land, sea and in the air, to order the abolition of segregation by race and color in America's fighting forces to the end that victory may be achieved more speedily by our unified army, and the peace made more secure by the oneness of our civilian population."

Bankhead Joins Protest Against AAF Race Rule

Advertiser — Montgomery, Ala.

Writes Stimson It Was Based On Politics, Not Negro's Welfare

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—(AP)—A recent War Department order forbidding certain forms of racial segregation on Army posts is "based upon political considerations" and "not in the best interests of the colored race in the South," Senator Bankhead (D), Alabama, today wrote Secretary of War Stimson. 8-26-44

The War Department said yesterday that the Air Forces sent to all its commands recently a memorandum calling attention to the department's policy forbidding discrimination between white and negro personnel at Army posts.

Bankhead's letter followed a telegram of protest against the order, sent by Alabama's Gov. Chauncey Sparks, to President Roosevelt and members of the Alabama delegation today.

House members met with Bankhead to plan individual letters to Stimson, demanding that the order be rescinded.

"I desire to enter a vigorous protest against it," the senator wrote. "It will raise strife and animosity between the races, which does not now exist. It will render no good service. I feel that you do not understand the possible consequences of such an order. They can only be unhappy for both the white and colored races in the South." 8-26-44

Representatives Boykin (D), Alabama; Manasco (D), Alabama; Newsome (D), Alabama, and Andrews (D), Alabama, expressed agreement with Senator Bankhead's statement that the order had political implications.

"An anti-segregation order under military rule in the Deep South is absolutely political," declared Boykin. "This is a terrible and untimely move."

Newsome said the order reversed the Army's policy of respecting local traditions and customs in all countries.

"This law," he said, "gives the South worse treatment than the Army accords citizens of enemy-held territory. We have made the policy of respecting traditions effective in all countries—Allied, neutral or enemy."

Declaring "preservation of peace on our home front is more important than political considerations," Manasco said he would request in letters to President Roosevelt and Secretary Stimson that the order be rescinded.

Representative Andrews commented "it is strange the order should be issued just before the elections. It is a very dangerous policy for the War Department to adopt." 8-26-44

Representatives Hobbs (D), Alabama, praised Gov. Sparks's telegram to the President as "an admirable presentation of the situation and its dangers."

Senator Hill (D), Alabama, who is acting as Senate majority leader in the absence of Senator Barkley (D), Kentucky, was unable to attend the meeting but told a reporter he has already registered strong protests at the War Department against continuance of the order.

Gov. Sparks Protests War Department's No-Segregation Rule

Journal — Birmingham, Ala.

8-25-44

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—(AP)—President Roosevelt has been asked to intervene against a War Department order to eliminate racial discrimination in post exchanges and other facilities on Army posts.

Gov. Sparks, in a telegram to the president, asking that he give his "personal attention" to the matter, declared the order posted at Maxwell Field "breaks down the essential principle of race relationship in the South."

"As governor of Alabama," Sparks said, "I protest such an order, which violates a statewide practice, and believe it aggravates, rather than helps."

The governor declared the order such orders."

The governor's protest followed action here that segregation of races in the Maxwell Field exchange had been terminated by War Department orders.

Public relations officers declined to comment.

The president was asked by the governor to "give consideration to the matter" posted at Maxwell Field tempts to bring about a better relationship between the two races and the races in "improvement of both on an equal post exchange basis."

War Department Says It Has No Agreement With Newsreels

CALL Kansas City, Missouri 2-4-44

NEW YORK, N. Y. — The War Department has no agreement with newsreel companies by which all scenes showing Negro troops are turned over to All American Newsreel, a company catering exclusively to jim crow theaters, according to Major General A. D. Surles, director of the Bureau of Public Relations.

The charge was made early in January that five major newsreel companies deliberately omitted scenes showing President Roosevelt reviewing Negro troops overseas. These scenes then appeared in All American Newsreel exclusively in Negro theaters.

All five companies were queried by the N.A.A.C.P. Pathe, Paramount, Movietone News and Universal Newsreel all replied saying they had no general policy calling for the deleting of Negro scenes. Paramount and Pathe stated positively that the particular review by President Roosevelt did appear in their releases.

Because they all denied having such a policy, the N.A.A.C.P. inquired of General Surles whether there was any sort of understanding or agreement between the War Department and All American Newsreel that Negro shots would go to All American. General Surles replied:

"I have your letter of Jan. 20, discussing the use of Army motion-picture footage showing Negro troops in newsreels and inquiring whether the War Department Bureau of Public Relations has an agreement with All American Newsreel that films showing Negro troops in action will go exclusively to that company.

"No such agreement exists. The War Department makes available to all newsreel companies, including All American, all official film intended for public distribution as soon as it has been processed and cleared for military security. From the total footage, each company selects such scenes as it desires for its own releases.

"Beyond including, wherever available, footage which shows Negro troops in action, the War Department can exercise no supervision over the editorial choices of the newsreel companies."

"The whole point of this matter," said Roy Wilkins, N.A.A.C.P. assistant secretary, "is that 120,000,000 white Americans are not learning through the newsreels in their movie theaters what Negro troops are doing to win victory for the United Nations.

"Of course, it is beneficial for Negroes who go to all-colored houses to see pictures of their men, but it is just as necessary that white Americans also see pictures of our fighting men. The N. A. A. C. P. urges colored moviegoers to keep close watch on newsreels distributed generally and to speak to theater managers about including scenes of Negro troops.

"Movie theater managers are influenced greatly by demands and inquiries from customers."

Anti-Segregation Policy Protested

Contest on Atlanta Ga.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—(AP)—The War Department's anti-segregation policy at Army posts treats people of the south "with less respect and regard than we show citizens of enemy countries," the house was told today by Representative Newsome, Democrat, Alabama. 8-29-44

Army tradition, Newsome said, requires American troops to comply as far as possible with local customs in Allied, neutral and enemy countries.

Nazi Prisoners Better Treated Than Negro Soldiers In South, Army Told

Defender--Chicago, Illinois 2-12-'44

German war prisoners are treated better than American Negro soldiers in the Deep South! Defender, Chicago, Ill

That sensational charge was made last week before Assistant Secretary of War John J. McCloy by the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches. Based on a tour of 10 army camps in Dixie by the Rev. J. L. Horace, president of the Illinois Baptist Convention, the contrast in treatment of Nazi prisoners and Negro troops is contained in a sweeping report presented to the War Department by the council.

A picture of low morale, mistreatment at the hands of military personnel and civilians, of intolerable transportation conditions and inequalities in the ordinary facilities and privileges of army life was given. 2-12-44

Rev. Horace made the trip upon his own initiative and expenses were met out of his own pocket with the aid of the Baptist convention. His report was first made before a meeting of the Fraternal Council of Churches in St. Louis on January 18.

McCloy Impressed

Accompanying him when he made his shocking report to the war department were Dr. William H. Jernagin, director of the fraternal council, and Truman K. Gibson, civilian aide to the secretary of war.

So impressed was McCloy with the findings that he is said to have commented to Rev. Horace that his was "the most comprehensive report on these camps that has come to my desk."

The camps covered in the tour were Camp Robinson, Little Rock, Ark.; Camps Livingston and Claiborne, Alexandria, La.; Camps Flora and Jackson Air Base, Jackson, Miss.; Camp Shelby, Hattiesburg, Miss.; Camp Sibert, Gadsden, Ala.; Fort McClelland, Anniston, Ala.; and Fort Benning, Columbus, Ga.

Rev. Horace himself is a veteran of World War I in which he served as a lieutenant of infantry and later as intelligence officer for his battalion. 2-12-44

Communities Pull

His findings were laid out on a chart as large as a standard-sized newspaper opened wide, and carefully classified.

"The local community seems to be the policy making body for the camps," was one of his conclusions. The people of the communities "insist that these camps conform to their wishes as it relates to the treatment of Negroes."

He talks of hospitals. "They seem fair and reasonable if a soldier can get into one; but the clinics take the position that they are not sick, and mark them for duty without examination."

"The officers treat them fair to badly. They all prefer northern white officers, claiming that southern white officers spend more time impressing them that they are inferior than they do to make them soldiers. Policemen are cruel and revengeful, and seem to express the pent up hatred of the community. They take jurisdiction and arrest soldiers for the slightest disorder and the government does not seem to interfere.

Undesirables

"The civilians treat the colored soldiers as undesirables. They live under the fear that at any moment they may have an outbreak with the civil law. Many refuse to take leaves for fear of trouble in town."

Rev. Horace declared that even Negro residents of the nearby communities assumed the same resentment for the colored troops because to do otherwise, they believe, would expose them to reactions. "This complete atmosphere of hostility makes the Negro soldier a bitter and ruthless fellow," the report says.

Rev. Horace said he found that at Grenada, Miss., German war prisoners received more courtesy than American Negro soldiers. "Our men have to use certain latrines and drinking fountains while German prisoners use them anywhere." In Camp Flora, he said, Negroes are not allowed to send their clothes to the post cleaners; they must send them to town and often they get lost there.

Raps Bus Drivers

Worship is done in a theatre after the performance and most of the equipment is provided by the Catholic church. He said that even the bus drivers seem to strive to crush the spirit of Negro soldiers.

He pointed to a battalion at Camp Livingston which for two years he said had been trained as artillerymen and then broken up into a labor outfit. "Yet the government is asking us to save the grease we skim off the pot while they throw away millions on 'jim-crow' units."

"I contend that the policy that the government is using makes it almost impossible for Negroes to have very much morale. The South is still fighting the Civil War and trying to win this one so they can dictate the racial policy and peace terms."

Recommend Actions

He makes recommendations. "The two main influences we must set at work now are—prepare the soldiers to not expect too much and, prepare society to receive them with sympathy and appreciation. Now is our chance to push our interests fully and prove our power for good.

"We must refute and expose the propaganda that is leveled against us—concealing our part in the war; keeping us out of important parts of the war and vital industry; magnifying our death rate and venereal diseases, much of which comes from biased white health officers; our low income; bad housing and slum dwelling are the fault of the social pattern, and should be the basis of condemning the social order instead of piling up biased figures to fix for Negroes a lower status."

Minister Makes Tour; Says South Still Fighting Civil War; Negro Soldiers 'Bitter'

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

Defender--Chicago, Illinois 2-12-44

Washington (ANP)—A picture of low morale, mistreatment at the hands of military personnel and civilians, of intolerable transportation conditions and inequalities in the ordinary facilities and privileges of army life, was presented to Assistant Secretary of War John J. McCoy on Saturday Jan. 29, by the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches. the Associated Negro Press has been informed. 2-16-44

The results of the investigation were based upon observations made into conditions and conversations with officers and enlisted men at 10 army camps in the South by the Rev. J. L. Horace of Chicago in the period between Thanksgiving and Christmas of last year.

Accompanying Rev. Horace on his shocking report to the war department were Dr. William H. Jernagin, director of the fraternal council of Negro Churches, and Truman K. Gibson, civilian aide to the secretary of war.

Soldiers Mistreated

He was concerned about those elements which determined camp policy, and listened to the complaints of soldiers and accepted the suggestions of soldiers and officers as to what the church could do to help. Congressman Fish Asks Probe Of Charge Negro Soldiers Are Doing Only Labor Work In Combat Areas

Age-N.Y. N.Y. 2-19-44

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Congressman Hamilton Fish (Rep. N. Y.) has requested Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson for a full report on "the facts respecting the breaking up of Negro combat organizations and the transfer of their personnel to service units".

In a letter date February 1 and acknowledged February 5th, Congressman Fish, who served in World War I with the 369th Regiment, wrote: Age, N.Y.N.Y., 2-19-44

"I am informed that several Negro tank destroyer units, which underwent training for several months at Camp Hood, Tex., have been broken up and the enlisted personnel transferred to quartermaster truck companies. May I be advised whether this information is correct?

"If this were the first report of this kind which had come to my attention I would not burden you with this inquiry. But there have been others. I have also been informed that a large number of enlisted men, who were members of the Nine Hundred and Thirty-first Field Artillery at Camp Forrest, Tenn., were transferred to quartermaster service organizations under orders dated August 26, 1943, and signed by the commanding general, Army Ground Forces. Originally this organization was the Eighth Illinois National Guard Regiment. It fought in France in World War No. 1 as the Three Hundred and Seventieth Infantry. After it was brought back into the Federal service it was redesignated the One Hundered and Eighty-fourth Field Artillery and later reorganized as the Nine Hundred and Thirty-first Field Artillery.

"More recently the Negro press carried an article sent from an advance Pacific base by Fletcher P. Martin, an accredited war correspondent for the Negro Publishers' Association, in which he stated as follows:

"The crack Twenty-fourth Infantry Regiment, fully equipped and prepared for any eventuality, is performing service duties at docks and supply dumps while awaiting possible assignment to combat.  Twenty-one months have passed since this outfit embarked from California for the South Pacific * * * ."

"To say the least, the training of Negro personnel as combat units for months and the breaking up of those units and the transferring of that personnel to service units is demoralizing to Negro soldiers and to Negro people generally and a waste of taxpayers' money.

Sees Deliberate Attempt

"I am aware of the fact that military necessity must control the assignment of personnel in the Army, but if the planning of the General Staff were adequate such actions would not be necessary. In the circumstances, however, I am still wondering whether there is not a deliberate plan to keep Negro soldiers out of actual combat. As far as I am informed, the only Negro units which have actually engaged in combat in this war are the Ninety-ninth Pursuit Squadron and a few antiaircraft units. The record of Negro troops in all of the wars in which this country has engaged (and in which they have participated as fighting soldiers) does not justify their being relegated now to the ranks of labor battalions only.

"Finally, may I invite your attention to the amendment to the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, which I offered and which the Congress approved. That amendment provides:

"That in the selection and training of men under this act, and in the interpretation and execution of this act, there shall be no discrimination against any person on account of race or color.'

"That amendment contemplated that Negro inductees would receive the same training and perform the same services as all other inductees. If Negro soldiers are being trained as combat troops but denied service as such, such discrimination appears to be in violation of my amendment."

John W. Martyn, administrative assistant to Secretary of War Stimson, acknowledged the letter on February 5th and said: "The Secretary of War has asked me to advise you that he has directed a careful study of the matter and has requested that a comprehensive report on the subject be made to him. At that time, Mr. Stimson plans to communicate with you further."

Congressman Fish declared that when he has all the data he will submit it to the Congress with his own comments and observations.

WASHINGTON—(ANP) —Henry L. Stimson on February 1 and invited him also to explain whether the non-discrimination clause introduced by him has been faithfully adhered to in the matter of training and utilization of Negro inductees. 2-19-44

Citing several reported instances "the training personnel to serve as combat to bear out his inquiry, Fish sought personnel to serve as combat to bear out his inquiry. Fish sought waste of taxpayers' the truth about reports that "several Negro tank destroyer units, which underwent training for several months at Camp Hood, Texas, have been broken up and the enlisted personnel transferred to quartermaster truck companies." He wondered in the same way about the disposition of 931st Field Artillery at Camp Forrest, Tenn., reportedly reorganized into quartermasters.

"As far as I am informed, the only Negro units which have actually engaged in combat in this war are the 99th Pursuit squadron and a few anti-aircraft units. The record of Negro troops in all of the wars in which this country has engaged (and in which they have participated as fighting soldiers) does not justify their being relegated now to the ranks of labor battalions only."

Declaring that "there is a deliberate plan to keep Negro soldiers out of actual combat." Fish declared that when he has all the data he will submit it to the Congress with his own comments and observations.

The "mutiny" charge resulted from that episode.

David Levinson, of Philadelphia, is the attorney.

Leading up to the "action of minor insubordination," the petition says, was a long series of grievances, including the men's complaint that they had been called unprintable names by white non-commissioned officers and that their food, when served them in units for months" and then dumped broken up those indiscriminately into a dish, meat, transferring the personnel vegetables, bread and dessert to-ice units" is demoralizing gether. June 1, 1944 soldiers and "a waste of money," Rep. Hamilton Fish, New York Republican, called upon the war department to state clearly the months at Camp Hood, Texas, have been broken up and the enlisted personnel transferred to quartermaster truck companies." He wondered in the same way about the disposition of 931st Field Artillery at Camp Forrest, Tenn., reportedly reorganized into quartermasters.

"As far as I am informed, the only Negro units which have actually engaged in combat in this war are the 99th Pursuit squadron and a few anti-aircraft units. Rap Jailing of Negro Soldiers for 'Mutiny'

A BLOW TO NEGRO MORALE

Defender—Chicago, Ill.

We owe a debt of gratitude to Representative Hamilton Fish (R., N.Y.) for smoking out the War department on the utilization of Negro troops in various theatres of operation, and for bringing to the glare of daylight an issue that had been hushed and kept far too long in the dark recesses of the mammoth Pentagon building in Washington. 3-11-44

The cry has been raised many times before against a deliberate conversion of trained Negro combat troops into service units. Such a plea, though based on corroborative evidence, fell on deaf ears at the War department. The agitation by an enlightened section of the Negro Press for the reactivation of those units has been countered with the threat of sedition.

The recent statement by the Secretary of War that "many of the Negro units have been unable to master efficiently the techniques of modern weapons," is a smoke-screen intended to hide an obvious discriminatory attitude of the policy-making brass-hats in the War department. Moreover it has inflicted wounds which will not soon heal; and it will not be easy to repair the damage done by this terrific blow to the morale of the Negro people.

Even if the evidence upon which this assertion is founded were unimpeachable, it would be a damaging testimony of the ineptitude of the High Command and an admission of criminal negligence in the training of black men for front line combat duties. If Chinese and Russian peasants can be taught the effective use of modern weapons, there is then little to support the contention that Negro soldiers, regardless of their educational limitations, are "unable to master efficiently the techniques of modern fire arms." 3-11-44

The cold truth is that the War department never intended to press Negro troops into combat action. This can be gleaned from the fact that many Northern boys with requisite academic preparation have been sent to service units. There is the case of Robert R. Ming, honor graduate from the University of Chicago and professor of law at Howard university, who is at the present time basking in a southern camp as a buck private in a quartermaster unit.

And other instances abound in which competent and bright Negro boys have been sent overseas to build roads and unload supplies rather than to fight in combat units armed with lethal weapons to destroy the enemy of democracy.

If Secretary Stimson's unqualified indictment of the incompetence of Negro troops be justifiable, a logical alternative would be to return the incompetent boys to civilian life where their services might be more effectively utilized. But, Mr. Stimson, who has outlived his usefulness long ago, is too senile to contemplate so rational a step.

Shipbuilding Jim Crow Corrected By FEPC

Daily world—Atlanta, Ga.
7-23-44

NEW YORK—(A N P)—Discriminatory employment practices of more than 50 shipping companies have been corrected through intervention of the New York Regional office of the FEPC according to Edward Lawson, regional director.

Mr. Lawson stated that as a result of 10 months of special attention to complaints of discrimination involving the maritime industry and unions, the majority of operators and labor organizations are now hiring qualified seamen without regard to their race, creed, color, or national origin. A public hearing against major holdouts to the government's non-discrimination policy is contemplated for the early fall. 7-23-44

During the past year the FEPC regional office has received more than 100 complaints involving the maritime industry. Of 43 cases where discrimination was clearly established by investigation, 38 have been adjusted, with the operating companies agreeing to hire seamen whom they had previously rejected. Ninety-seven per cent of the cases handled alleged discrimination against Negroes, while the remainder involved Chinese, Japanese-American, Honduran and Jamaican workers.

Mr. Lawson gave major credit for the FEPC's successful effort to Samuel Risk, regional staff examiner, who has handled the majority of maritime cases for the agency. 7-23-44

Of the major complaints remaining unsettled, nearly all involve maritime labor unions, several of which have traditionally insisted upon excluding American Negroes. However, some of the most important recent gains of Negroes in the industry have been through the efforts of other unions in the field, several of which have made refusal by their members to ship with other seamen because of their race, creed, or color the basis for disciplinary action.

ANP Reporter In First Of Series On Biased Base

7-25-44

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Because of persistent reports that the 553d pursuit squadron had been "railroaded" from Selfridge field, Mich., to Walterboro airbase, S. C., for protesting segregation at the northern training field, the Associated Negro Press sent a reporter to Walterboro to obtain the facts in the case for the readers of this newspaper. What this correspondent, Ernest Johnson, chief of the ANP Washington bureau, found is contaned in three artcles, the first of which follows.)

By ERNEST JOHNSON

WALTERBORO AIRBASE, S. C.—(ANP)—Because morale of men at this airbase was reported low— 7-25-44

Because a hero of the 99th Pursuit squadron, back from overseas had been dismissed from the service through court-martial, and at least two other men have been court martialed—

And because rumors of general unrest and discrimination had been reported, the Associated Negro Press undertook an on-the-spot investigation of the situation.

The outfit involved is what formerly was the 553rd Pursuit squadron, which has been stationed at Selfridge field, Mich., until May 7 when it was suddenly transferred to this South Carolina post, in the middle of Dixie and all it means.

The picture is not a happy one. There is indeed much room for improvement on the part of the army air forces if training and the establishment—yes, the establishment—of high morale are to be achieved among a group of men who in a relatively short time will be flying high over Germany for the cause of America.

By the same token, these men and related ground personnel have the responsibility of constantly exhibiting their diligence in accordance with army regulations, knowing as they do that despite the demonstrated capability of the 99th Pursuit squadron, there is still a segment of the army which even now would prefer not to see Negroes develop in the air branch of this country's armed services. 7-25-44

The 553rd; flying P-47 Thunderbolts, hadn't cracked up yet, as Major Joseph B. Price, assistant director of flying operations and training noted. In fact, there hadn't been a fatality among the men since a short time before leaving Selfridge field, a favorable record.

SPROUTS AT SELFRIDGE

The seed of discord took root at Selfridge. Six officers from the 99th had returned from overseas to work with the nucleus of the 553rd, which was activated last November at Selfridge Field and Oscoda, Mich. They were 1st Lts. Walter Lawson, Graham Smith, Louis R. Purnell, Spann Watson, Charles W. Dryden, and Lee Rayford. The outfit was ultimately to be officered with all Negro personnel. 7-25-44

In due course the men were united at Selfridge and for a time had a succession of commanding officers. The last of them, Lt. Col. Sam P. Triffy, came south with them. Under one of these commanders, Lt. Col. Charles Cayle, the men observed a tendency to place Negro officers as assistants to white supervisory personnel in the table of organization. Lts. Rayford and Purnell decided they preferred fighting and so went overseas with the 332nd Fighter group. Trainees of the 553rd stuck tongues in cheeks.

While at Selfridge the issue of the officer's club arose and a plan to rovide separate facilities for the races was thwarted after the Negro fliers had voted unanimously to refuse the separate club. The undercurrent of resentment developed among the colored officers and evidenced itself in sundry ways. 7-25-44

On May 5 the 553rd entrained for Walterboro airbase. They were not told then or since then why they had been moved south. The accepted opinion among them, however, is that the move was made for the explicit purpose of subjecting them truly to the rigors of segregation as only the south can practice it, and thereby kill their spirit.

LOW SPIRIT TODAY

That spirit today is low, and the transfer is a contributing factor. None of the ranking officers with whom I talked, from Col. Iver Massey, deputy commanding officer of the first air force, down know or was prepared to say why the transfer was made. An obvious explanation might well have been the conjecture made by William H. Hastie, formerly civilian aide to the secretary of war, a short time ago, namely that the main stream of flight training is in the south, and that it is proper that Negro trainees should receive their training where all other to-be flying officers are schooled. But not even this reason was advanced by the commanding officers. "I don't know," was generally their reply to the question.

Incidentally, when the transfer was made, none of the colored boys was permitted to fly his craft down although the whites did. Reason given was that eating facilities might not have been available to them at intermediate stops enroute. "That was a slap in the face," was the comment of one of the fellows with whom I talked, "especially to the boys who had been overseas." 7-25-44

TORN UP ORGANIZATION

The fact remains that the 553rd, officers and enlisted men, arrived at Walterboro on Monday, May 7, found themselves no longer a complete organization but rather than the fliers were now a replacement training unit, and the ground crew a part of the base personnel, and real segregation on an army post was staring them straight in the face.

Public relations officers at Walterboro explained that the post had previously been a sub-base of a base near Charleston but more recently had been given full base status. Further, it was explained

Altogether, separate facilities for the almost everything but hospital aviation care were provided. At first no attempt was made by public relations officers to make distinction between the character of the Negro

Prior to the arrival of the 553rd a colored personnel at former ap-squadron (separate) had come in. 7-25-44

Walterboro was estimated at approximately 1,600 men of which the number was not large. That Walterboro had, since the arrival of the 553rd, become a location for advanced training of pilots (instructors). Total personnel who would shortly thereafter leave replacements for men of the 99th and 332nd. The only pilots at about one-third are Negroes.

personnel, preferring to refer to all of them at RTU (replacement training unit), and the reason offered as justification for seperate facilities was that "the RTU has a schedule to make."

PERSONNEL KEPT OUT

It finally developed, however, that as a means of getting around racial designations for the use of certain facilities, two classes of individuals were recognized and defined: RTU for the colored; base personnel for the white. Hence, when the sign was put up, upon orders of Col. Prince, over the entrance to a service center where sodas are dispensed, it said for "base personnel.. It means "Negroes keep out." They have been refused service and so have kept out.

These definitions ignored the fact that both the aviation squadron (separate) and the gound crew which accompanied the 553rd, all Negroes, had become part of the base personnel. Col. Prince admitted later in my talk with him that these deductions were accurate. When he was asked about their actual inclusion, he said simply that "they should have been taken into the housekeeping," but reminded that "South Carolina has always been a state which believes in the separation of the races." 7-23-44

He was merely conforming.

They Don't Grant Medals For This Kind Of Loyalty

Amsterdam News—New York, N.Y.

(Correspondent The Atlanta Daily World and NNPA)

WASHINGTON—The story has gone all over the American Air Forces—about the Negro bomber pilots, in training at Mather Field, Cal., who have thrown down the gauntlet to Ol' man Jim Crow, but at the same time expressed their determination to become the "best damn pilots in the air force", in spite of it all.

Every man in that first class of pilots (now in advanced training at Selfridge Field, Mich.) and in the succeeding classes which have followed, should be awarded a hero's medal of some kind—only the Army does not decorate its men for this type of heroism.

Here's The Story

When training of the Negro pilots for operation of B-25 bombers gegan, there was no segregation at Mather Field. Classrooms, mess hall, etc., were operated as one would expect in a democracy. There was never the slightest racial friction.

Then came Maj. Gen. Ralph P. Cousins to the field on an inspection trip. Among his first orders to the camp commander was one for the separation of the Negroes from the whites in the mess hall. 3-11-44

The commander was flabbergasted. But in the Army, orders from men of higher rank become law. He called in the Negro pilots and told them the situation.

One of the spokesmen for the group asked if the men were under orders to eat in the mess hall. He was told they were not.

From that day to this, not a single Negro pilot has eaten in the Jim Crow mess hall. They dig into their own pockets and buy their food from the post exchange, in addition to paying their regular mess assessment.

Help Lick Jim Crow

The PX is staffed exclusively by whites, mostly women. But the entire force was in strict sympathy with the Negro pilots. They came to work earlier in order to serve breakfast to the "jim-crowed" pilots and get them on the field in time.

Then came Christmas. The girls were due to have the day off. But they voted to give up their holiday in order to serve the Negro pilots if they did not want to go in to town for their Christmas meal. 3-11-44

"No", said the pilots. "We have decided that today would be a good day to go without anything to eat."

Not a single pilot put a morsel in his mouth that Christmas day.

A tradition was thus established. The first class has finished its preliminary training at Mather Field. Two other classes have followed. But not a Negro pilot has eaten in the mess hall since the infamous order of Maj. Gen. Cousins.

The jim-crow order is still in effect.

Pvt. Ernest Hankerson Tells How He Went Without Food, Spent 8 Days in Nut House

By CLAY CLAIBORNE

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J.—This is the story of Pvt. Ernest Hankerson, 28, of New York City, veteran of overseas action, and his fight against jim crow in the army's McClosky General Hospital at Temple, Texas. 7-22-44

Pvt. Hankerson told the AFRO that the General Patton incident had nothing on the treatment accorded him when he and Pvt. Earl Harris, now released from the army and also of NYC, starved themselves for six days, rather than submit to a jim crow mess hall in the McCloskey Hospital.

Pvt. Ernest Hankerson, veteran of ten months in the South Pacific theatre, asserted that he was returned to the United States after a truck accident in which he injured his arm and back. He was a member of the National Guards from 1939 until his outfit was inducted into active service and was later attached to the 369th Coast Artillery.

When he first went to McCloskey in January, he was confined with a group of soldier-patients the colored and whites were mixed

"N-----s Over There"

But upon arrival in the hospital's mess hall, a receptionist ordered them to separate in this manner, "whites over here and n---rs over there."

Another soldier, Pvt. Earl Harris, and Hankerson dropped their ration trays and returned to their ward, which incidentally was exclusively for colored. 7-22-44

"Later, Harris and myself were ordered to report to Major Kemble," Hankerson related and "he interviewed us separately and inquired of our reason for not eating. I told him that I had served overseas fighting for the same thing that the others had fought for, and expected no division with regards to race, creed or color within the army."

The Major, asserted: that in Temple, Texas it was not traditional for colored and whites to use the same things, and he added that there was not anything that he could do about it, but refused my request to speak to the Colonel about the incident.

"After his refusal, Pvt. Earl Harris, and I spent 6 days in the ward without going to the mess hall; on the seventh day Major Kemble, came to the ward during the first mess period and asked us to go down to the mess hall, for he feared that our action might incite a riot.

Feared Disorder

"He declared that this was not an order but a request for cooperation, inasmuch as he wanted to prevent any outbreak of disorder. I replied that as long as it was not an order, I would not go down ot the mess hall.

"However, during the lunch period, the Major returned and ordered us to the mess hall, and we were to report our presence to the nurse on duty. I reported to the nurse, and told her that I was carrying out orders, but still refused to eat." 7-22-44

Hankerson related how Major Kemble again summoned him and condemned the way he spoke to the nurse.

"He insisted that I was crazy and requested two psychiatrists to examine me. After a rigid 3½ hour examination, they declared me sane."

Despite the examination, Hankerson recalls that Major Kemble, ordered him confined to the Isolation Ward, a ward referred to by soldier-patients, as the "Nut Ward," where he remained for 8 days, during which time the nurse to whom he spoke in the mess hall came to visit him and asked for forgiveness. 7-22-44

A second nurse came to the ward with a Chaplain, who secured his release from the Isolation Ward, and after his release here, he was placed with the white soldier-patients, because "I was understood to be bad influence for the colored patients."

There he remained until May of 1943, when he was assigned to the 1848 QM Det. at Camp Hood. It was discovered there that he had not completely recuperated at the McCloskey General Hospital and he was sent here to Atlantic City, to the England General Hospital.

"When I first got there, I didn't know any words in the Russian language at all. If I had, I could have saved myself a couple of days' suffering from dysentery.

"I noticed a barrel of water and started dipping into it for a drink. A Russian girl passed by and yelled at me not to drink it unless it was filtered—in Russian.

"Naturally, I didn't understand what she was saying, and went ahead and had my drink. That was how I got dysentery."

Russian Hospitality Makes Up for Jim Crow Which Sailors Suffered in South Africa

7-22-44 By RICHARD DIER

NEW YORK—(Passed by Censor)—When William Reeves, merchant seaman, returned from South Africa last year, he vowed that he was through sailing ships for the duration. He had been handed the typical jim-crow treatment by a hotel in Durban, and he was disgusted enough to call it quits.

(Durban is a seaport in Natal, a British province in South Africa.—Ed.)

In an exclusive AFRO interview, he revealed that he and three other colored seamen went to the Grand Hotel, where the manager politely told them that they couldn't register for rooms for the night.

"When we protested, he explained that there were segregation laws in Durban and that he had to abide by them. Right then, I swore I'd never risk my neck again in this war. I felt that I didn't deserve such treatment for the work I'd done.

"When I got back to New York, I talked it over with my friends and they convinced me that I was wrong, that the struggle for freedom and equality for which all of us are fighting, can't be won in a day.

"They said that I'd have to enture more hard knocks, but that must not give up the fight.

"Other men were running down and talked for hours at a time. They tried their best to make me feel at home. 7-22-44

"They have very little clothing and not too much food, just enough. But they're full of life and their courage is excellent.

"The ammunition saved our ship. The planes were right over-head and bombed us with every-thing they had.

Springfield Leaders Allege Mistreatment of Negroes at Westover Field

By BEN YABLONKY
Staff Correspondent

PM Exclusive

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Feb. 11.—A group of Springfield citizens—Negro and white—have joined forces in a fight to end Jim Crowism at nearby Westover Field.

Charges of mistreatment of Negro soldiers at the Army base came from the soldiers themselves who took their troubles to local townspeople and found the civic leaders ready to act.

Many of the complaints centered around the practice of segregating Negroes in barracks, in the mess halls, in chapel, and in the post's movie house. Negro soldiers, it was charged, were assigned largely to menial tasks, kept working long hours and those who protested were stripped of their stripes.

Still in Guard House

Racial tension at the field reached its highest pitch last Tuesday, I was told, when 15 Negroes confined to a hospital barracks were ordered to go on patrol duty. Three of them complied. But when the others protested that they were sick and could not do the work, they were sent to the guard house and four of them were locked up immediately. The other eight were put into prison garb, marched out onto the field by soldiers armed with sub-machine guns, pistols and clubs, and ordered to pick up paper and waste matter on the grounds. All 12 are still in the guard house. 2-11-44

This story came from the sick men themselves. They told local townspeople that they are part of a group of 44 men who have been sent to Westover for medical treatment or discharge, some of them suffering from hernia, rheumatism, and lumbago. And they say the rest of the sick men also are being ordered from their barracks for heavy patrol duty.

When the local citizens heard of the latest incident, they immediately went into action. Yesterday a delegation of seven Springfield Negro and white leaders, including Mayor J. Albin Anderson, called on Col. U. G. Jones, commanding officer at the field. I went along with the group.

Want Segregation Ended

In the delegation besides Mayor Anderson were two Negro ministers, Rev. H. L. Moore, of Bethel Methodist Church and Rev. Herbert Wilkins of St. John's Congregational Church; Russell Hatton, post commander of the Harrison Wright Chapter of the American Legion, Springfield's Negro chapter; C. Herbert Salter, organizer, United Electric Radio and Machine workers of America, CIO; John Haraty, chairman of the Western Massachusetts CIO Council Committee against discrimination; and Mrs. Katharyne Jones, chairman of the Springfield Committee for the Abolition of the Poll Tax and spokesman for the group.

Demanding an immediate end to any type of racial segregation and a policy "of treating sick men as sick men whether their skin is white or black," the group recited other complaints made by Negro soldiers. They told Col. Jones: 2-11-44

¶ That Negro soldiers were denied medical attention, receiving instead all sorts of excuses that doctors were not available, that there was not sufficient hospital beds.

¶ That one soldier, who had been grounded at the Tuskegee air base as an aviation student and sent to Westover, was now in a mental ward at the field hospital as a result of mistreatment.

¶ That recently one group of Negro soldiers was order to fire the post's boilers for 12 hours instead of the customary eight, on the threat of being denied any passes.

¶ That Negroes, instead of being used for guard duty as was the practice up to Jan. 1, were now being reduced to scavenger work, making beds, serving as orderlies and doing many other menial jobs.

The delegation charged that Maj. E. H. Worth who, since the first of the year, has been in charge of Negro personnel, was primarily to blame for some of the latest rules against the Negroes. 2-11-44

The conference with Col. Jones lasted for more than two hours, during which he called in each of the delegates to state their complaints while a stenographer took notes. He also asked each delegate to reveal the names of the soldiers who had given them the stories. They refused.

Denies Discrimination

At the close of the meeting Col. Jones called the entire group together and announced in a formal statement that he had "found no grounds for the complaints," adding, however, that "I will make a further investigation and take appropriate action." Earlier, when I was called into the Colonel's private office for the individual conference and had identified myself as a reporter, he said "the charges are news to me."

Col. Jones also denied any discrimination policies. On the charge that sick men had been ordered to work, he brought in Col. L. W. Ballantyne, the post's chief medical officer, who said that the men in the guardhouse had been examined and were not sick.

The delegates later called Jones' statements an effort to whitewash the camp's gross Jim Crow policies. They said they would carry the complaints to Maj. Gen. Ulio, the Army's Adjutant General in Washington, demanding a full investigation. 2-11-44

Springfield citizens are not attacking Army intolerance and hate at the camp while condoning it in their city. Springfield was the first city in the country to iniitiate a broad program of education for tolerance in its public schools known as the Springfield plan, a program which now has become widely accepted by educators throughout the country.

Low Education Is Blamed By War Secretary

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON— (ANP) —Lower educational standards among Negro inductees; and their inability to "master efficiently the techniques of modern weapons," is attributed by War Sec., Stimson as reasons why the war department has brokken up Negro combat units into labor battalions after months of training combatants.

Stimson also answered the question of sending Negro troops overseas by stating it as the "general policy" to maintain the same ratio between Negro and white troops overseas as exist in the army as a whole." He made no differentiation between the types of overseas troops now abroad, but pointed to the impracticability of a uniform ratio in all branches of service.

ANSWER TO FISH

The secretary's detailed statement was contained in his reply to Rep Hamilton Fish, Republican of New York, who on October 1, had inquired of him the department's policies regarding those matters of unit changes and overseas duty. The Stimson reply was placed in the record last Wednesday when the congressman addressed the house.

Not only did Stimson assure Rep. Fish of his correctness in saying that the 930th and 931st Field Artillery battalions, formerly part of Chicago's 184th infantry, had been broken up into labor units, but he added that 'the unsatisfactory record' of these men was responsible for the changes. Stimson said, however, that the need for more service units than had been originally contemplated has compelled the conversion of many white outfits as well.

ABILITY CONSIDERED 3-1-44

"In converting combat units to service units, the war department's selection of units to be converted has been solely on the relative abilities, capabilities, and status of training of the personnel in the units available for conversion," he wrote Fish. "It so happens that a relatively large percentage of the Negroes inducted in the army have fallen within the lower educational classifications and many of the Negro uits accordingly have been unable to master efficiently the techniques of modern weapons."

These conversions, he said, have been made among men overseas as well as at home, Negro and white, and that "this will be necessary in the future as circumstances dictate." He denied that any policy to race," or that the department is "deliberately attempting to avoid sending overseas or to keep out of combat, troops of the Negro or any other race."

Fish immediately challenged certain of the Stimson statements, reminding that during World War 1 Negro combat soldiers were in the front lines within the first year after the declaration of hostilities and served continuously as fighters. 3-1-44

He charged the Secretary with evading a specific question as to whether or not the fully-equipped 24th infantry regiment has been performing service and dock duties while awaiting possible assignment to combat, although the unit has been in the South Pacific for 21 months.

U. S. Department Makes Survey Of Mistreatment Charges

Chicago Pastor Makes Report To For Church Body

Assistant Sec'y Is Blamed By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON (ANP)—A picture of low morale, mistreatment at the hands of military personnel and civilians of inplorable transportation conditions and inequalities in the ordinary facilities and privileges of army life, was presented to Asst. Sec. of War John J. McCloy on Saturday, Jan. 29, by the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches, the Associated Negro Press has been informed.

The results of the investgation were based upon observations made into conditions and conversations with officers and enlisted men at 10 army camps in the south by the Rev. J. L. Horace of Chicago in the period between Thanksgiving and Christmas of last year. Rev. Horace made the trip upon his own initiative and expenses were met out of his own pocket and with the aid of the Baptist General State convention of Illinois. His report was first made before a meeting of the Fraternal Council of Churches in St. Louis on Jan. 18. 2-9-44

Accompanying him when he made his shocking report to the war department were Dr. William H. Jernagin, director of the fraternal council, and Truman K. Gibson, civilian aide to the secretary of war.

"COMPREHENSIVE REPORT"

So impressed was McCloy with the findings that he is said to have commented to Rev. Horace that his was "the most comprehensive report on these camps that has come to my desk."

The camps covered in the tour were Camp Robinson, Little Rock, Ark.; Camps Livingston and Claibourne, Alexandria, La.; Camps Flora and Jackson Air base, Jackson, Miss.; Camp Shelby, Hattiesburg, Miss.; Camp Sibert, Gadsden, Ala.; Fort McClelland, Anniston, Ala.; and Fort Benning, Columbus, Ga.

Rev. Horace himself is a veteran of World War 1 in which he served as a lieutenant of infantry and later as intelligence officer for his battalion.

The survey made by him sought to ascertain the practices as related to food, recreational facilities, worship facilities, transportation, leaves and furloughs, types of segregation and practices, treatment by officers and civilians in nearby towns, and hospital treatment. He was concerned about those elements which determined camp policy, and listened to the complaints of soldiers and officers as to what the church could do to help. His findings were laid out on a chart as large as a standard-sized newspaper opened wide, and carefully classified. 2-9-44

LOCAL COMMUNITY IS POWER

"The local community seems to be the policy-making body for the camps," was one of his conclusions. The people of the communities "insist that these camps conform to their wishes as it relates to the treatment of Negroes."

He talks of hospitals. "They seem fair and reasonable if (a soldier) can get into one; but the clinics take the position that they are not sick, and mark them for duty without examination."

"The officers treat them far too badly. They all prefer northern white officers, claiming that southern white officers spend more time impressing them that they are inferior than they do to make them soldiers. Policemen are cruel and revengeful, and seem to express the pent up hatred of the community. They take jurisdiction and arrest soldiers for the slightest disorder and the government does not seem to interfere.

"The civilians treat the colored soldiers as undesirables. They live under the fear that at any moment they may have an outbreak with the civil law. Many refuse to take leaves for fear of trouble in town."

"BITTER, RUTHLESS FELLOW"

Rev. Horace declared that even Negro residents of the nearby communities assumed the same resentment for the colored troops because to do otherwise, they believe, would expose them to reactions. "This complete atmosphere of hostility makes the Negro soldier a bitter and ruthless fellow," the report says. 2-9-44

Rev. Horace said he found that at Grenada, Miss., German war prisoners received more courtesy than American Negro soldiers. "Our men have to use certain latrines and drinking fountains while German prisoners use them anywhere." In Camp Flora, he said, Negroes are not allowed to send their clothes to the post cleaners; they must send them to town and often they get lost there.

Worship is done in a theater after the performance and most of the equipment is provided by the Catholic Church. He said that even the bus drivers seem to strive to crush the spirit of Negro soldiers.

He pointed to a battalion at Camp Livingston which for two years he said had been trained as artillerymen and then broken up into a labor outfit. "Yet the government is asking us to save the grease we skim off the pot while they throw away millions on 'jim-crow' units."

HITS GOVERNMENT POLICY

"I contend that the policy that the government is using makes it almost impossible for Negroes to have very much morale. The south is still fighting the Civil war and trying to win this one so they can dictate the racial policy and peace terms." 2-9-44

He makes recommendations. "The two main influences we must set at work now are—prepare the soldiers to not expect too much and, prepare society to receive them with sympathy and appreciation. Now is our chance to push our interests fully and prove our power for good.

"We must refute and expose the propaganda that is leveled against us—concealing our part in the war; keeping us out of important parts of the war and vital industry; magnifying our death rate and venereal diseases, much of which comes from biased white health officers; our low income; bad housing and slum dwelling are the fault of the social pattern, and should be the basis of condemning the social order instead of piling up biased figures to fix for Negroes a lower status."

Race Phobia Goes While Men Train

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga. 1-13-44

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUNDS, Md.— (ANP) — While basic training is designed to primarily condition the soldier for battle, it also serves as a very effective remedy for the mental ailment of race phobia when soldiers of both races are being trained together, and under similar circumstances, a former newspaperman said.

"White boys and black boys crawled together under barb wire entanglements, while only 36 inches above their heads a curtain of machine gun bullets whistled a wierd song of impending death to those who dared to get in their path," he remarked, as he described a part of the basic training course at the world famed ordnance center.

FORGET PREJUDICE 1-13-44

"White boys from Texas, Georgia and other southern states eagerly assist black boys and they run to the assistance of their publicized white arch enemies who find themsleves in distress," he asserted." They forget about color and race."

An exmaple of how the question of race and color automatically becomes secondary was furnished by the action of a white boy from Mississippi who frantically warned a group of colored boys to keep their heads down when a stream of machinegun bullets began to fly.

"Say fellers, your 'mugs' are too high," he screamed. "Get down."

Negro Soldier Mystifies Army With Name Juggling

Post - Birmingham, Ala. 1-26-44

By United Press.

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 26.—The Army today held Charlie Holliday, John Franklin, Benjamin A. Oliver, Benjamin Oliver and Johnny Lett, all in the same uniform.

The multi-named Negro soldier was arrested by Atlanta police after two draft boards and as many Army posts had complained that he was changing uniforms, names and dog tags with too much frequency, and that his conscience had forced him into too many draft registrations.

Police records showed that he was drafted as Charlie Holliday, swapped dog tags with John Franklin at Camp Stewart, Ga., so that he could attend a baker's school at Fort Benning, Ga., and later decided to leave the Army without permission and returned to Atlanta. To keep on the right side of the law, he registered at his old board as Benjamin A. Williams and, to make sure, re-registered at another board as Benjamin A. Oliver and, to make sure, re-registered at another board as Benjamin Oliver.

Then, the records showed, he found a civilian job and took it—and a Social Security card—under the name of Johnny Lett. At that point the police caught up with him and turned him over to the Army to face desertion charges. 1-26-44

WAC Center

FT. DES MOINES, Feb. —(ANP) Negro WACs are being discriminated against here, according to current reports.

An officers' pool has been formed on the post here. Those officers both white and Negro were formerly stationed at Daytona Beach and various other spots. All are now living in a building known as "Oc row," awaiting assignment.

The white officers are permitted to live in any section of the building while the Negro officers are confined to a small squad room which is segregated from the rest of the building, with 13 colored in a single room that was designed for a capacity of nine, according to the charges. 2-4-44

A Negro non-commissioned officer, a member of the teaching staff of the Opportunity school, was recently refused a reference book from Service Club No. 1. The assistant librarian of the club did not permit the girl to withdraw the book despite the fact that she needed it to prepare her teaching program for the following day, it is reported.

Should Inform The People

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga. 1-23-44

Brigadier General Benjamin O. Davis considers as "exaggerated" and "greatly magnified" most of the reported instances of mistreatment to colored soldiers. Probably he is correct; he should know the facts.

If the mass of colored people are under mis-apprehension about what is happening to their sons under arms why doesn't the War Department or the Inspector General's office (with which General Davis is connected) make some effort to inform them correctly? Little or no effort is made by any of the many news-letting offices in Washington to report the colored soldiers and their doings as they actually are. To do so would probably invoke a Congressional investigation. Nobody wants to get kicked out for being fair and decent to the colored Americans.

Stimson Admits Colonials Handle Weapons Of Combat

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga.

Still Contends Our Boys Are Too Dumb To Use Instruments

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — Testimony of War Sec'y Stimson before the house foreign affairs committee on extension of the lend-lease act recently further leaves open to question the matter of whether or not Negro soldiers are qualifeid to handle American equipment in face of statements of his that American materials are being used successfully by Indian and colonial troops of other nations.

The secretary three weeks ago attributed "low educational" standards of Negroes as the reason why they are not performing in combat. 3-25-44

"Indian troops as well as units of empire forces," he testified, "are being supplied with U. S. equipment that cannot be supplied from empire sources. By this means more forces are being made available for combat as an alternative to the use of American troops."

Of necessity, he said, a very large share of the burden of opposing Japan has fallen upon China. "Through the medium of lend-lease we have been able to assist China in her courageous and tenacious opposition to the invader. The supplies consist of military stores of all types and of vital materials necessary to keep China's own munition arsenals in operation. As increasing pressure is brought to bear against Japan, these Chinese troops will be available for use where otherwise American forces might have to be employed."

Colonial troops in all these areas and countries whose opportunities for education have certainly not exceeded that for Negroes in America, and in most instances have been less, are utilizing the instruments of modern warfare effectively.

Racial Bars Irritating, Avers Cpl. Anderson

By COPL. TREZZVANT W. ANDERSON
Associated Negro Press Foreign Correspondent

SOMEWHERE IN ENGLAND — (ANP) — This reporter came to the army direct from the managerial desk of one of the largest Negro newspaper in America, fresh from active service as a newspaperman for more than 15 years, and if my insight is still of any value to my sense of perception, I fear that I have a "negative report" to make in this story. Most of our boys are not interested in this war.

A month ago the Associated Negro Press requested me to give him my views as to the reactions of the boys as regards the army, the war, social relationships, etc. I waited a while, for I had just entered a new outfit which had been intact for more than a year and a half, and I thought that I had better see what attitude was taken by a group of soldiers who know each other and their own habits. I have seen.

SEES LOOSENESS

I came to my present organization, and I was enthusiastic at first, but I seem to see a sort of looseness here, which doesn't indicate the greatest pride in what the men are doing. And so, after observing, all sorts of Negroes, in all sorts of outfits in this army, I have reached the conclusion that the majority of Negro soldiers show a general lack of interest in the war.

I make that statement without any apology, for it is true, no matter how it may be interpreted. It would require a psychological thesis to completely analyse the various reasons "why", but, on the whole, it is as I have said. Mind you, I did not say 'all Negro soldiers, "only said "the majority."

To me it seems that the men regard the whole thing as a lark, and are more concerned with what they can get out of doing, than what they can actually contribute to make the fight a success, with the utmost dispatch. In other words, it isn't a serious matter.

WISH IT OVER

There are Negro outfits which really do take this whole thing to heart, and in which every man is filled with a maximum of pride in his organization, his leaderers and his fellow-soldiers, and their productivity, but, generally, when you hear the boys in their huts after work hours, they give the whole thing hell, and have only one wish: that it was over. You never hear too much about what we'll do to help get it over. They seem to feel that they aren't going to get but so much out of it anyhow, so why burst any blood vessels over the darned thing? They will do what they are ordered to do, and that's about all. 3-25-44

But they all have an admiration for outfits like the 99th Pursuiters, the 450th AA's, and those coast artillery outfits of black boys, and they brag about those outfits, enviously. That brings a conclusion that they are chafing because they themselves are not getting an opportunity to do what those outfits are doing, and that's their gripe.

Perhaps if these colored boys were turned loose, and given a chance to exercise their own intiative, ingenuity, and capacity for production, without hindrance, and away from any racial atmospheres, where "a man's a man for a' that," it would be a different story. Plenty of Negro soldiers are very much concerned, but the majority, you figure it out for yourself.

Seek Abolition Of Segregation In Armed Forces

World - Birmingham, Ala

Lynn Committee Meets Growing Concern In Nation

NEW YORK—(SNS)— The National Citizens Committee for Winfred Lynn has become the Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Forces. Announcement of this change was made by unanimous decision of the committee.

In the committee's quarters at 360 W. 125th Street, this city, Wilfred Kerr, co-chairman, explained that the recent decision was an attempt to meet the growing concern throughout the country on the matter of racial segregation and discrimination in training the nation's military forces. "There is no greater contradiction in our American life today than that represented in a bi-racial American Army, two armies in fact, one white the other black, waging a war for freedom and democracy abroad while it perpetuates at home those things against which it professes to fight," said Mr. Kerr.

WELCOMES SUPPORT

"The Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Forces welcomes the support of all Americans who believe that segregation is un-American, un-democratic, un-civilized and un-just, and contrary to the best interests of our country," continued Mr. Kerr.

"Out of the welter of struggle and discontent on the part of both the Negro and white people with the racial program of the War and Navy departments, of the Red Cross and other auxiliary services there come almost weekly new cases which deserve attention. These we can now undertake," he concluded. 5-2-44

Originally the Lynn Commtitee was organized to push the case of Winfred Lynn, Negro gardener of Jamaica, Long Island, who in 1942 brought suit in federal court against the "Negro quota" system by which he, as well as all other Negroes, was being drafted into the U. S. army.

LYNN NOW IN GUINEA

Lynn, now a corporal serving in New Guinea, maintained that the very idea of a "racial quota" was in itself a plan of racial discrimination, and that, as such, it was illegal and unconstitutional. His is the only legal attack made to date against discrimination in selective service.

The legal basis of Lynn's case is in Section 4-a of the 1940 Selective Service and Training Act, which provides that "In the selection and training of men under this Act.....there shall be no discrimination....on account of race or color."

In February of this year the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals here handed down a two to one split decision against Lynn. The fact that one of the three justices dissented in his favor means that a firm legal basis has been laid for an appeal direct to the Supreme Court. 5-2-44

The Lynn Committee is at present engaged with attorneys of the American Civil Liberties Union in the preparation of the case for argument before the Supreme Court sometime this Summer. It has the cooperation of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Workers Defense League and the March on Washington movement. Each of these groups is preparing a supporting amicus curiae brief.

Negro Soldiers

Yank - New York, N.Y.

Dear YANK: While reading an April issue of YANK I came across the article [in Strictly GI] that said Secretary of War Stimson denied the charge he was attempting to avoid sending Negro combat troops overseas. . . . The reason he gave for his policy of not sending Negro combat troops overseas is based on relative abilities, training and education. It is no secret that the Negro's educational classification is not parallel with the white's; however, with all the modern warfare, I am sure that the Negro can hold his own.

I often wonder about the educational classification of the Negro French soldiers and Indian soldiers who are fighting so bravely in combat units in Europe and other theaters of war. I also wonder just what the Japs' educational classification is; my guess is, not so high. Despite this fact, and even while fighting a losing battle, they are no push-over. I am sure that the Negro combat troops, who are waiting for overseas duty, shall, when their time comes for action, carry right on to victory.

India 6-3-44 —Pvt. ARTIE FOWLER

Dear YANK:

. . . I fail to agree with the Secretary of War. In today's wars, as in past wars, the success of men as soldiers depends to a large extent upon the convictions, incentives and enthusiasms with which they are impelled in military tasks; or, as we broadly sum up today, success depends largely upon their state of morale as troops. It must be stated that the average Negro soldier's morale is at a consistently lower level than is the average white soldier's. The reasons are obvious. Simply stated, a man finds little desire to help put out a fire threatening to consume a building when he knows that after the fire is checked, he will be excluded from that very same structure he helped save. 6-2-44

. . . View Russia's success in stopping and hurling back the Hitlerite war machine, acknowledged as the world's best in technical efficiency. The average literate intelligence of Russian peasantry has been comparatively as low as, and in many cases lower than, a great number of Negroes'. Russia for years was Europe's most backward country. Yet the Soviet government has used the same peasantry to build a military force equal to, and better than, anything the Germans can throw against it. . . .

Democracy?

Dear YANK: I am writing to you in regard to the incident told in a letter to you by Cpl. Trimmingham (Negro) describing the way he was forced to eat in the kitchen of a station restaurant while a group of German prisoners were fed with the rest of the white civilians in the restaurant. [YANK headed the letter "Democracy?"—Ed.] Gentlemen, I am a Southern rebel, but this incident makes me none the more proud of my Southern heritage! Frankly, I think that this incident is a disgrace to a democratic nation such as ours is supposed to be. Are we fighting for such a thing as this? Certainly not. If this incident is democracy, I don't want any part of it! 6-9-44 I wonder what the "Aryan supermen" think when they get a first-hand glimpse of our racial discrimination. Are we not waging a war, in part, for this fundamental of democracy? In closing, let me say that a lot of us, especially in the South, should cast the beam out of our own eyes before we try to do so in others, across the seas.

Dear YANK: 6-9-44

You are to be complimented on having the courage to print Cpl. Trimmingham's letter in an April issue of YANK. It simply proves that your policy is maturing editorially. He [Cpl. Trimmingham] probes an old wound when he exposes the problem of our colored soldiers throughout the South. It seems incredible that German prisoners of war should be afforded the amenities while our own men—in uniform and changing stations—are denied similar attention because of color and the vicious attitude of certain portions of our country. What sort of a deal is this? It is, I think, high time that this festering sore was cut out

WHITE OFFICER EXPRESSES WISH TO FIGHT INJUSTICES

Courier-Pittsburg, Pa.

1-15-44

By FLETCHER P. MARTIN, For Combined Negro Press

AT SEA, SOMEWHERE, IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC—(Via Air Mail)—This is the second of several articles written while at sea en route to an advance base. I wrote them in a steaming ward room formerly occupied by war casualties. It is so hot that the eight of us here constantly take cold showers to help combat the heat. Five minutes later the sweat washes our bodies again. For days this has kept up, and the lone electric fan serves only to stir the hot air.

When we boarded the ship, after climbing a swaying rope ladder, a naval officer handed each officer-passenger a list of "dos and don'ts" while aboard ship.

There were 19 such laws covering many phases of Naval discipline at sea, all for the welfare of a "big family" whose lives are intrusted to those whose duty it is to get us safely there. But there were no instructions advising us in wardroom "H" how to withstand the insufferable heat. 1-15-44

OFFICERS ABROAD

Three of the officers in this inferno are en route to join a Negro infantry outfit up North. And at their own request. Since this correspondent is headed for the same, we have discovered a medium which binds us in a spirit of togetherness.

"Wonder what kind of work they are doing?" one said. "I don't know," I said. But I had an idea because Admiral Halsey had said in an interview that few, if any, Negro combat units had seen action in the South Pacific. I further knew that the same thing was true in the Southwest Pacific where our troops were used mainly to develop and secure bases.

"You know," the officer said, "I like working with Negro troops."

"You do?" I said. I hoped he wasn't saying that simply because I happen to be the listener.

LAUDS ROBESON

"Yes," he said. "I was brought up in Jersey. Went to Rutgers university.

"Paul Robeson's school, you know."

"Yes," I said, "Robeson's a great American." 1-15-44

"One of the greatest who ever lived," he replied. "I soldiered with Negro troops in Texas. Guess that's why I'm out here now."

He talked of some of the things he had seen.

"You know," he continued, "I hate that, and if I can ever strike it, like Abraham Lincoln said, 'I'm going to strike it hard.' I think a lot of things are going to change after this war."

"I hope so," I said. "I hope a lot of things change after the war."

"Not changing the subject," he said, "but in two days I'm going to be a father. And this is a hell of a place to be sweating it out. I hope my wife makes it all right."

"Pipe down," the officer on the top half of the double bunk said. "You aren't the only guy who's going to have a baby. I am sweating one out, too."

"Quit griping, guy," said the medical officer in the bunk next to mine. "My wife just had a baby."

WORRIED FATHER

"She did Doc," Jersey said. "What was it, Doc?"

"How in hell do I know," Doc said. "She just had it three days ago."

"Then you don't know whether she had it or not," Jersey said. "You're bad off as we are."

"Pipe down," a neutral officer put in. "There goes the call for mess."

We had chicken and iced tea. One marine sitting next to me asked the Filipino waiter for another piece of chicken and some more dressing.

"Sorry sir, no seconds," the Filipino waiter said. The marine said something under his breath. I felt the same way. When he first came around, I took one leg. He didn't come around anymore.

After supper we listened to a New Zealand military band. It sounded good, especially with the omp-pah pah. They played "In the Mood," with the bass horn taking the lead in one place. Glen Miller would have died. The announcement came to clear the decks. The watch was being secured.

VISITS HOT BOX 1-15-44

Warrant Officer F. H. Ward, an elongated Negro youth from Kansas City, came over from his own to visit our hot box.

"How you doing?" he said.

"Sit down on the bed," I said. "You'll soon be getting off."

"Two days from now," he said. "And I'll be glad to get back. Six weeks in a rest camp. I don't feel the fever anymore."

"Had it pretty bad?" I said.

"Yeah," he said. "Expect to be going to Munda soon, then Bougainville."

"How long have you been over?" I asked.

"Twenty months," he said. "I've been in the Army 10 years, and expect to be in it 20 more. After this war it's going to be tough, and I'm not going to bang my head against a wall trying to find a job. The Army's my career."

HANDS LIKE HAMS

Ward is strong and tall, raw boned, with hands like hams. Handsome fellow.

"You married?" I said.

"No," he said. "Never got around to it."

"See fellows," I said to the expectant fathers. "No worry."

"Go to hell," Jersey said.

"Why aren't you married? Everybody has time to marry," I said.

"I joined the Army when I was 18," he said. "The Army was enough for me. One war at a time."

He laughed. We laughed.

"Say Martin," the officer over top said. "Not changing the subject, I've been thinking. You have seen lots more out here than many of us, when do you think this thing is going to end?"

"LONG TIME YET"

"I don't know," I said. "I have seen a few things, and what I have seen causes me to believe it will be a long time yet."

"You know," he said, "when I read of people back home, and strikes, I get mad as hell. Take the coal strikes and labor unions. Take John L. Lewis. I live in Pennsylvania, near the coal fields, and I don't think there has been but one union that really did the job. The old Knights of Labor."

"There you go talking about your wife again," Jersey said.

We laughed as the signal sounded for lights out.

Actor Raps War Department's Ban on Colored Entertainers

Afro-American-Baltimore, Md.

1-15-44

Willie Bryant Calls Practice of Commissioning Whites Only in Special Services Undemocratic

NEW YORK—Willie Bryant, who headed the first colored USO-Camp Show unit to entertain overseas service men, sincerely sees the need of a colored personality commissioned in the Special Services unit.

Airing his views, Mr. Bryant told the AFRO-AMERICAN Newspapers that his pet dislike is the fact that the War Department has commissioned so many of the white personalities of the theatre, without granting similar consideration to colored.

He declared that he had made application for such a commission about two years ago, went to Washington, took and passed a physical examination and was then informed that no vacancies existed.

Service Men Demand More

On his recent tour of the Caribbean area, under auspices of the USO Camp Shows, he discovered that there was no end to the demand by service men—colored and white—for colored entertainers.

The unit, although designed to perform for only colored troops, appeared more before white units and the enthusiasm was tremendous.

"I, of course, was delighted to go overseas and entertain the men," he said, "but my real motive for taking the trip was to prove to the officials that such a need existed and, what was more, bolster my belief that greater enjoyment is received from colored performers.

Unit Greatly Appreciated

"Everywhere our unit played colored and white appreciated the appearance. Most whites were interested in Miss Lena Horne, the majority of them wanting to know if she was a Latin-American. We proudly told them that she was colored." 1-15-44

Although he headed the unit, Mr. Bryant wants the world to know that Kenneth Spencer, Betty Logan, Julia Bryant and Ram Ramirez, other stars in the show business, were of equal importance and disported themselves in the most commendable manner.

"The men want colored performers to entertain them, he continued, "and the War Department can do a great job by selecting the proper persons from the group to arrange similar tours for the men overseas.

"The demand will no doubt increase as the war continues and, of course, the business of lifting morale will become more important."

Kenneth Spencer, baritone, currently appearing at Cafe Society Uptown, explained his reactions by saying: 1-15-44

"Our appearances before these men, almost all of whom were white, brought back to them an awareness of colored people back home whose problems they may have thought were left behind.

"It is not a conscious feeling that they get, but just an unobtrusive reminder that all people under their own flag may not be sharing in that democracy for which they are giving their lives."

Mistreatment Of Negro Soldiers At Westover Field, Mass., Charged As 15 Sick Soldiers Are Jailed

Age, N.Y., N.Y., 2-19-44

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.— Discrimination and mistreatment of Negro soldiers at Westover Field was charged here Tuesday, following disclosure that fifteen Negro soldiers, confined to Barrack 319 at the field because they were sick, were ordered to report for duty at the guardhouse where they were ordered to police the post.

Major E. H. Worth, recently placed in command of the Negro regiment at the field, was said to have instructed a first sergeant with the group to give them a direct order to work and to lock them up if they refused. Three of the fifteen men went to work and 12 refused, explaining that they were sick and unable to do the work outside in light fatigue clothes. The dozen soldiers who refused to work were taken inside the guard house and booked as prisoners, had their uniforms changed to prison wear, and were marched out on to the field under guard armed with submachine guns, pistols and clubs.

Four of the group of sick prisoners were unable to move, and were taken back to the guard house. The other eight, under the eyes of four armed guards, were forced to pick up papers and waste matter around the grounds. The treatment accorded the soldiers, whose only crime was that they were sick, was reported to have been worse than that usually accorded prisoners at the post.

The fifteen soldiers were quartered in Barrack 319 because they were physically unable to perform heavy duty and are said to have had medical certificates calling for them to be given only light duty assignments. 2-19-44

There are some 2,000 white soldiers on the post and only last month the two Negro detahments, the 35th Aviation Squadron and the 1189th Guard Squadron were combined and placed under command of Major Worth.

The discrimination against Negro soldiers is such, they charged, that they may not use the service club

Warrant Officer F. H. Ward, an elongated Negro youth from Kansas City, came over from his oven to visit our hot box.

"How you doing?" he said.

"Sit down on the bed," I said. "You'll soon be getting off."

"Two days from now," he said. "And I'll be glad to get back. Six weeks in a rest camp. I don't feel the fever anymore."

"Had it pretty bad?" I said.

"Yeah," he said. "Expect to be going to Munda soon, then Bougainville."

"How long have you been over?" I asked.

"Twenty months," he said. "I've been in the Army 10 years, and expect to be in it 20 more. After this war it's going to be tough, and I'm not going to bang my head against a wall trying to find a job. The Army's my career."

HANDS LIKE HAMS

Ward is strong and tall, raw boned, with hands like hams. Handsome fellow.

"You married?" I said.

"No," he said. "Never got around to it."

"See fellows," I said to the expectant fathers. "No worry."

"Go to hell," Jersey said.

"Why aren't you married? Everybody has time to marry," I said.

"I joined the Army when I was 18," he said. "The Army was enough for me. One war at a time."

He laughed. We laughed.

"Say Martin," the officer over top said. "Not changing the subject, I've been thinking. You have seen lots more out here than many of us, when do you think this thing is going to end?"

Actor Raps War Department's Ban on Colored Entertainers

Willie Bryant Calls Practice of Commissioning Whites Only in Special Services Undemocratic

NEW YORK—Willie Bryant, who headed the first colored USO-Camp Show unit to entertain overseas service men, sincerely sees the need of a colored personality commissioned in the Special Services unit.

Airing his views, Mr. Bryant told the AFRO-AMERICAN Newspapers that his pet dislike is the fact that the War Department has commissioned so many of the white personalities of the theatre, without granting similar consideration to colored.

He declared that he had made application for such a commission about two years ago, went to Washington, took and passed a physical examination and was then informed that no vacancies existed.

Service Men Demand More

On his recent tour of the Caribbean area, under auspices of the USO Camp Shows, he discovered that there was no end to the demand by service men—colored and white—for colored entertainers.

The unit, although designed to perform for only colored troops, appeared more before white units and the enthusiasm was tremendous.

"I, of course, was delighted to go overseas and entertain the men," he said, "but my real motive for taking the trip was to prove to the officials that such a need existed and, what was more, bolster my belief that greater enjoyment is received from colored performers.

Unit Greatly Appreciated

"Everywhere our unit played colored and white appreciated the appearance. Most whites were interested in Miss Lena Horne, the majority of them wanting to know if she was a Latin-American. We proudly told them that she was colored." 1-15-44

Although he headed the unit, Mr. Bryant wants the world to know that Kenneth Spencer, Betty Logan, Julia Bryant and Ram Ramirez, other stars in the show business, were of equal importance and disported themselves in the most commendable manner.

"The men want colored performers to entertain them, he continued, "and the War Department can do a great job by selecting the proper persons from the group to arrange similar tours for the men overseas.

"The demand will no doubt increase as the war continues and, of course, the business of lifting morale will become more important."

Kenneth Spencer, baritone, currently appearing at Cafe Society Uptown, explained his reactions by saying: 1-15-44

"Our appearances before these men, almost all of whom were white, brought back to them an awareness of colored people back home whose problems they may have thought were left behind.

"It is not a conscious feeling that they get, but just an unobtrusive reminder that all people under their own flag may not be sharing in that democracy for which they are giving their lives."

Age, N.Y., N.Y., 2-19-'44

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.— Discrimination and mistreatment of Negro soldiers at Westover Field was charged here Tuesday, following disclosure that fifteen Negro soldiers, confined to Barrack 319 at the field because they were sick, were ordered to report for duty at the guardhouse where they were ordered to police the post.

Major E. H. Worth, recently placed in command of the Negro regiment at the field, was said to have instructed a first sergeant with the group to give them a direct order to work and to lock them up if they refused. Three of the fifteen men went to work and 12 refused, explaining that they were sick and unable to do the work outside in light fatigue clothes. The dozen soldiers who refused to work were taken inside the guard house and booked as prisoners, had their uniforms changed to prison wear, and were marched out on to the field under guard armed with submachine guns, pistols and clubs.

Four of the group of sick prisoners were unable to move, and were taken back to the guard house The other eight, under the eyes of four armed guards, were forced to pick up papers and waste matter around the grounds. The treatment accorded the soldiers, whose only crime was that they were sick, was reported to have been worse than that usually accorded prisoners at the post.

The fifteen soldiers were quartered in Barrack 319 because they were physically unable to perform the heavy duty and are said to have had medical certificates calling for them to be given only light duty assignments. 2-19-44

There are some 2,000 white soldiers on the post and only last month the two Negro detachments, the 35th Aviation Squadron and the 1189th Guard Squadron were combined and placed under command of Major Worth.

The discrimination against Negro soldiers is such ,they charged, that they may not use the service club

A Negro in the Army

New Republic - New York N.Y. 6-26-44

[The following letter was written by a Negro soldier in the United States Army who was brought up in the North and is now stationed in the Deep South. His identity is concealed to prevent reprisals against him, but the editors of The New Republic can vouch for his intelligence and honesty.]

DEAR FRIENDS: I arrived safely, and had intended to drop you a few lines before now. I am well at present and hope you are the same and enjoying life. There is not much enjoyment in a place like this. I don't seem to understand the situation here. We were drafted to try and win the war, yet the people here are seemingly still fighting some previous war. And the bad part about it is they are wasting a lot of their good time watching and fighting the Negro here. It is a one-sided fight, because to my estimation the Negro seems to be their best friend. It seems as if these people would rather accept the German prisoners before they would a Negro.

Here is one instance. In our company we have eight weeks of basic training in the field and the rest of the seventeen weeks we go to school in a white battalion. Last week one of the instructors called a soldier "a nigger," and the boys from my company resented it. To be good soldiers and try to go about the thing in a diplomatic way, they went to one of the officers. He came down and asked the instructor, who was a white corporal, and he said right there, "Yes, I said it." Then he picked them out one at a time and said, "You are one, and you and you," and so on. New Republic - New York N.Y.

Just this morning I was talking to a soldier who had been in the (punishment) stockade and he had talked to some of the Japanese American soldiers that they had in there, sent here from other camps. They had been in the army for some time and some of them had ratings. They would go to town and the white men would start fights with them. If they defended themselves they would lose their ratings. So they refused to be soldiers. They said that they couldn't see the use of fighting when they are kicked around like dogs.

If we are kicked around now, during the war, what will happen after the war? We are all ready and willing to do our part to win the war, but at least we should get some kind of consideration. 6-26-44

Even on the bus they have only one seat for us, the one in the extreme rear. Even if all the others are empty, or if there is just one white man sitting in the back, we can't sit there. I would like to know just what it is that is wrong. Why are we hated so much? I sit around and try to figure it out. I have the time because there is no place to go and nothing to do. All the fellows feel the same way I do.

They even refuse to sell me anything in the main post exchange, the one in the lunchroom.

While I was in school, my class was touring the different buildings. We had a twenty-five-minute break in front of the PX, so we all lined up to buy some doughnuts. When I got to the window the girl said:

"I can't sell you anything."

So I said, "Why?"

She said, "You can give that white soldier your money."

I said, "No, why should I?"

I asked the lieutenant who was in charge, why. I said, "I am a soldier, that man is a soldier, and we are both supposed to be fighting for the same cause. Why should I give him my money to walk two steps to buy something for me?"

He said, "Well, I know it is wrong, and you know it, and they know it is wrong. But no one will do anything about it."

You know, unless my guess is wrong, something drastic is going to happen. I believe there is a Supreme Being and I believe He is just. I don't believe that He intends for any of His people to be kicked around by any of the others. So you see, I will be a glad soldier to get back home to my family and back among civilized people. 6-26-44

I try so hard to be a good soldier. But how can I, with my blood boiling all the time?

I hope you haven't been too bored with this note. I could rite a book about the South.

U. S. A Trains PM - New York N.Y. Mixed Unit For British

6-21-44

No Color Line For Volunteers From the Caribbean

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 21.—The first British infantry unit to train on U. S. soil since before the Revolutionary War is a volunteer regiment of whites and Negroes recruited in the British Caribbean possessions. The training location was not disclosed, but it is somewhere in Virginia.

Existence of this new combat unit, called the First Caribbean Regiment, became known when Lt. Gen. G. N. Macready, commander of the British Army staff in Washington, conducted its first ceremonial review. The regiment will go overseas within a few weeks.

Representatives of nearly every British territory in the Caribbean is represented in the new volunteer unit. Trinidad with about 22 per cent of the volunteers has the largest representation. Next in order are Jamaica, Barbadoes, British Guiana, Bermuda, the Windward Islands, Leeward Islands, British Honduras and the Bahamas. The British Information Service in Washington did not disclose the percentage of white and Negro soldiers in the Caribbean regiment but it is believed close to 50-50. Some of the officers ranking as high as major are Negroes.

For Full Service

The regiment, which has its own supporting weapons, including Bren guns, mortars and anti-tank guns, is expected to take its place as a full-fledged line unit alongside other regular British infantry. It will be the first combatant unit from the British West Indies to serve in this war.

A regimental "flash" in blue, yellow and green was designed for all ranks and the Bermuda contingent was granted permission to wear the name of that island as a distinguishing mark. The regiment was actually established Apr. 1.

Bermudans First

The Bermuda group, under Major W. W. Fuller, was the first to arrive in the U. S. A. and immediately began preparation for the remainder of the regiment, which, having collected in Trinidad and Jamaica, arrived soon afterward. The training areas were provided by the U. S. Army, which has worked closely with the British during the training period. The experiment of training white and Negro volunteers has been closely observed by U. S. Army officers who, so far, have held out against any similar "mixed" regiment experiment in our own army.

This is not the first time that Britain has recruited so-called mixed regiments from the Caribbean. The famous West India regiment, whose battle honors extend over 150 years, has fought in every war Britain has engaged in during the past century and a half.

What Can The Negro Expect?

News-Chronicle

The Army weekly, Yank, has reprinted a letter from a Negro soldier who, with eight other colored service men, was en route from one Southern camp to another. At one spot in their itinerary they had to spend several hours in a railway junction point. When they entered the station restaurant it was necessary for them to eat their meal in the lunchroom's kitchen. While they were so engaged, a group of about two dozen German prisoners of war, accompanied by their guards, was served a meal at the tables in the cafe. The prisoners ate, talked, smoked and laughed. The Negro soldier wearing the uniform of Uncle Sam asks, "Why are they treated better than we are?" 6-12-44

The question is a poser.

The need for understanding has never been greater. The delicate relationships between the races is disturbing the best minds among both white and colored citizens. Thousands of Negro soldiers are serving in this war that only recently has been defined by the president as a war for liberation. Negro families have suffered as great agony of temporary or permanent separation as have white families. Negro soldiers have worked as hard, have often sacrificed as much as other soldiers of the country. Negro families have bought war bonds and subscribed to war charities. As such contributors, Negro citizens have undoubtedly asked themselves how the final victory will affect them.

Let us see. What should the returned Negro soldier expect?

Among other things he has a right to be liberated from the kind of economic tyranny that has often limited him almost exclusively to the menial work of the world at low wages. He may expect to be liberated from a type of education that he knows to be inferior to that of his white neighbors. He should be liberated from the humiliation of being shouted at and openly scorned by some operators of public conveyances and some officials of the law. He ought to find liberation from the kind of vituperative abuse heaped upon him by certain sheets in the recent Alabama primary campaign. And he also should be liberated from the wiles of selfish agitators of his own race who are making the inevitable adjustment a doubly difficult one.

Much of the world lives these days by revolutionary standards. But the method of evolution is better. Out of the democratic ethic for which, God knows, we are fighting hard, should and must evolve a greater devotion to the rights and dignity of human life. The Four Freedoms were intended to apply to all our citizens. The lives of both colored and white citizens should be better after the war is ended; they can be better without destruction of proper rights and standards of conduct and without violence to sound customs and traditions.

Cadets in First Colored Class at Hondo Field Ready for Wings After N.Y. Flight

By FRANCIS YANCEY

NEW YORK — Target for today, Berlin — or it may be Tokyo — which ever the case, when the all-colored 477th Medium Bombardment group now being activated at Selfridge Field, Mich., takes off to pound one of these they will be sure to hit the target right on the nose.

This was proved here at La-Guardia Field when twenty-one navigation cadets, composing the first colored navigation class in the U.S. Army Air Forces, navigated six C-60 Lockheed Lodestar Army Transport planes 2,000 miles to New York City from Hondo Field, Texas.

Other Groups Training

These cadets are but one unit of many that are training in air force training schools all over the country, all pointing to Selfridge Field as their goal.

The cream of our youth is being trained as pilots, gunners, mechanics and crewmen to man the B-25 Mitchell Bombers that will be their aerial steeds on future jaunts over Axis positions.

Former Cadet Pilots

Being airborne is nothing new to these cadets. All of them have logged from 50 to 200 hours air time as cadet pilots at Tuskegee

Strict Jim-Crow Set-Up

When the first cadre arrived at Hondo Field it was assigned to Navigation school Squadron 10. This is the first such official, almost time since the Hondo Base has been operating that there has been this second "washed out" for various failures. All were given the chance at winning their wings when sent to navigation school. According to a high official, almost all of them will win their wings as navigators and go on to bombar- a Squadron 10.

All other squadrons share and switch classes and instructors, but Squadron 10, although of even number, has been the odd squadron in all school activities.

Theirs has been a jim-crow set-up from the start — eating, sleeping, drilling and attending classes to themselves. All officers attached to Squadron 10 were assigned by the school commander, but it was scuttlebutt that it was a volunteer set-up.

Praise Instructors

The cadets were unanimous in declaring that they have been treated as well as could be expected in any two-way set-up.

"The instructors were tops and spent long hours of their own free time to prep us for our exams," the cadets said. "We never at any time saw any friction between white and colored cadets. We think if it were left up to them, the classes would be mixed."

A white pilot, one of the crew that brought the flight in, when asked how he felt about flying a plane navigated by a colored man, made this statement, but asked that his name not be used:

"Color Doesn't Count"

"Certainly I'd trust myself and my plane in the hands of a colored navigator. It isn't the color of a man's skin or the texture of his hair that gets us over the target and back to our home field. It's how much he knows about navigation and how he applies it that does the trick."

All the cadets have successfully passed through all of the phases of combat navigation: pilotage (familiar landmarks), dead reckoning (instrument flying), radio (beam flying), and celestial (plotting a course by reference to the celestial bodies). 2-26-44

Make Good on Mission

Before embarking on the flight each cadet was briefed the same as on an actual combat mission, given a course and a certain position to hit, and when his turn came it was up to each to bring the plane through.

Bad weather, fog, rain and heavy clouds gave them every condition in the book to fight, but everyone came through 100 per cent.

Final Test

Flight navigation instructors in charge of the problems were said to have been very pleased with the way the cadets handled the problems. The return trip, a 2,000-mile non-stop flight, will be the final test.

To hit a spot a few miles square at that distance will try the mettle of all the cadets and prove their right to wear the wings of a navigator in the U.S. Army Air Force.

This was their first combat training mission. The next flight of this length may be their first over Axis-held territory, and if they arrive over the target on the ball as at LaGuardia Field, we'll have another group that will have earned their right to sit on the right hand of our famous fighting

NEGRO TELLS HOW NAVY LIEUTENANT KICKED HIM

New York N.Y. Amsterdam—News 2-26-44

Navy Yard Worker Says He Was Suspended After the "Kicking"

Following is the latest case against the Brooklyn Navy Yard reported to the Citizen's Anti-Discrimination Committee on the Brooklyn Navy Yord electric welder, claims he mistreatment and subsequent suspension that Leo Mercer, Negro Navy Yard electric welder, claims he was subjected to. Mercer is a Negro, 34 years old, married with four children and a citizen. He is further puzzled regarding his treatment considering that he has never been late, out sick or absent in his whole period of work with the Brooklyn Navy Yard, which will be a year in April.

Mercer's story which was told to Lorenzo Davis, chairman of the Citizen's Committee and Industrial Secretary of the Brooklyn Urban League, Saturday night goes like this:—

Sitting On Ship

On October 23, 1943, Mercer was sitting on the hull of ship on which he was assigned to work, shading his eyes which had become irritated and inflamed from working several hours without the usual "blower" on his welding torch. He had complained about his eyes to fellow workers.

A Lieutenant Commander Rawlins, walks upon the scene, and unseen by Mercer, kicks his leg causing Mercer to jump to his feet, and hear the Lieutenant Commander spout "Hey, Nigger, what in the hell are you doing here?" Mercer, althought naturally resenting this treatment, kept his head and attempted to explain. The Commander kept his hand on his revolver continuously. According to Mercer, four witnesses saw and heard these occurences. Rawlins obviously didn't believe the explanation, and left saying he would talk to Mercer's supervisor concerning his record, and if it was satisfactory he (Rawlins) "might not" press any charge.

"Sleeping" Charge

A few days later Mercer's supervisor told him that charges of "sleeping on the job" were being made against him, but that he (supervisor) would speak up for Mercer. 2-26-44

On October 30, Mercer received a letter from the Personnel Officer formally charging him with "sleeping during assigned hours of duty," and advising him to answer satisfactorily in 24 hours or take the consequences. Mercer answered immediately by letter explaining his case, citing his work record, denying the "sleeping" charge, and stating the availability of witnesses.

About two weeks later, Mercer received a notice of suspension of five days without pay and a reduction of six points on his efficiency rating "for sleeping during assigned hours of duty." The letter was undersigned by Commandant Kelly, Mercer stated.

The notice of suspension ignored mention of witnesses suggested by Mercer or his excellent work history. Mercer in frustration, protested to the Personnel Officer against unfair treatment accorded him and received the answer that "no further action is justified for lack of substantiating proof of your innocence."

Mercer, still not licked, attempted to get a personal hearing with Command Kelly and/or the Personnel Officer, but both were "too busy." Another formal letter sent to Mercer by Commandant Kelly stated no further action was justified in his case. In ebbing patience, Mercer wrote to Senator Wagner and Secretary of Navy Frank Knox, both of whom answered routinely referring the complainant to the book of rules for Navy Yard workers with grievances.

On December 26th, Mercer again wrote the Commandant asking a fair hearing in his care; after three weeks the letter was still unanswered. As a last resort, Mercer claims, he filed his complete case with the Regional Office of the Fair Employment Practice Committee on about Jan. 15, 1944.

Finally on January 28th, the Commandant replied to Mercer stating "If you failed to produce in your reply definite and substantiated proof that charges were unjustified, your answer was considered unsatisfactory and disciplinary action was taken accordingly. Since you have furnished no substantiated prof of your innocence, no further action in your case is justified."

Mercer has finally gotten three sworn affidavits attesting his innocence into Office of the Commandant. To date after five months, his case is still unadjusted.

To Mercer's knowledge, or that of the Anti - Discrimination Committee, no disciplinary action has yet been taken against Lieut. Comm. Rawlins for his uncalled for, prejudicial treatment of Mercer.

Bennet Promises To Fight Jim Crow In Armed Forces

New York N.Y. Amsterdam-News 2-26-44

Former Congressman William S. Bennet, Republican candidate for Congress from the 21st District last week took time out from his campaigning to secure an appointment with Assistant Secretary John J. McCloy of the War Department to discuss the matter of discrimination in the Army against Negro soldiers.

Mr. Bennet, who is seeking the seat in Congress made vacant by the resignation of Rep. Joseph A. Gavagan, said he had known there was some injustices in the Army forces, but that he was both amazed and horrified when he learned of the extent of the discrimination against enlisted men and officers in civilian communities and in camps.

On his way to Washington, Mr. Bennet learned of certain specific charges having to do with disabled Negro soldiers at Camp Westover, Mass., being forced to do work which they were physically unable to do.

After his interview with Secretary McCloy, Mr. Bennet said he had found the official both frank and helpful. He said Mr. McCloy told him the War Department is fully aware that there is discrimination against Negroes in uniform, both in the rank and among commissioned officers, and that no other matter in connection with the Army services distressed them more.

Mr. Bennet further quoted Mr. McCloy with saying: "The matter has been taken up with high military men and with Secretary of War Stimson and that the entire department was pledged to take every step necessary to stop this harmful discrimination."

Having served seven years in Congress, Mr. Bennet knows his way around in Washington. He promises to use all his influence, not only to help correct conditions in the Army, but to help put through Congress all other legislation, designed to improve condition of Negroes and other minority or oppressed groups.

The election in which Mr. Bennet seeks to return to Congress takes place Tuesday, Feb. 29. James H. Torrena is his Democratic opponent.

Wendell L. Willkie, Republican nominee for President in 1940, and a candidate for the 1944 nomination sent the following telegram to Mr. Bennet Monday:

"The voters of the 21st Congressional District in Manhattan are being called upon in a few days to elect an interim Congressman. William S. Bennet, the Republican candidate, is familiar with the halls of Congress having served there before, and he has the experience and understanding which comes from long public service. He is fully aware of the problems of the men and women who live in his district and those of us who know him and his record know that he will represent those interests with fidelity. I am delighted to have this opportunity to endorse Mr. Bennet's candidacy and to urge the voters of the 21st Congressional District to support him wholeheartedly on Election Day." 2-26-44

The Republican Congressional Campaign Committee of the 21st Congressional District is as follows: Herbert Malkin, chairman; Mrs. Dorothy Buckman, vice-chairman; Mrs. Lucinda F. Carey, vice-chairman; Francis X. Hanley, vice-chairman; Rev. J. Wesley Megaw, D. D., vice-chairman; William H. Milholland, vice-chairman; Hon. John A. Bolles, chairman, finance committee; Eardlie John, secretary, and Robert O. Held, treasurer.

The executive committee includes, Herbert Malkin, chairman; Harold C. Burton, David B. Costuma, Sidney E. Davis, Mrs. Emma Edwards, John J. Fitzsimmons, Harold Forstenzer, Mrs. Elizabeth Guy, Harold S. Lazar, Mrs. Anita D. Leon, Samuel E. Lepler, Chester A. Nethercott, Miss Helen M. Noonan, Miss Lillie I. Poey, Mrs. Henrietta G. Sciacca, Miss Lucille Womack and Mrs. Colotta M. Woolley.

FORMER CONGRESSMAN William S. Bennet, Republican candidate for the seat made vacant by the resignation of Rep. Joseph A. Gavagan, in the 21st Congressional District. The election will be held next Tuesday, February 29.

Negroes Have Little To Fight For, Says Bilbo

Defender-Chicago, Ill. 2-12-44

WASHINGTON—(ANP) — In so many words, Sen. Theodore "The-be-an" Bilbo of Mississippi told a delegation which called upon him on Wednesday that he doesn't think that Negroes have a lot to fight for since "Negroes are always going to say they do"—that it can handle this matter." He said nothing that would indicate he believed in improving the status of Negroes.

Camp Maxy One Up on Texas In Jim Crowing Negro GI's

Daily Worker - New York, N.Y.
4-6-44

By Eugene Gordon

"When it comes to bus transportation," said the Negro GI on furlough in New York, "Camp Maxy, in Texas, does the State of Texas one better. Texas laws allow Negroes and whites to ride in the same buses, as long as Negroes sit in the rear. But Camp Maxy won't let Negro soldiers even get on a bus marked for whites.

"Buses line up in front of the Negro service club, but even if only two or three white soldiers are on them no Negro can get on. He must wait until an empty one comes. Sometimes he waits hours for a bus to go on pass."

The nearest town, Paris, is nine miles.

He lived all his 20-odd years in the North, until he went into the Army. He had been accustomed to association with white boys. Thought nothing of it. He knew, when he went South, that the white soldiers were not responsible for jim-crow signs in post theaters and outside post exchanges and service clubs. He knew that all camp commanders made their own policies on Negro-white relations. He knew that that policy was based on the customs of the community.

WHITE TROOPS

"White boys from the North sometimes resent being treated as if they were better than we are. They show it in all sorts of friendly ways. But some white soldiers also get the idea they are really our superiors. They act it. And that means trouble all around."

Thus a white soldier refused to salute a Negro officer. He was reprimanded by the officer but forgiven by the white officer of the day.

The white GI laughed in the Negro officer's face.

Colonel West Hamilton, Negro inspector in the Eighth Service Command, had to sleep in enlisted men's barracks when he arrived at Camp Maxy late one night. No officers' quarters for Negroes. They must eat with their men—which is, in general, contrary to Army policy.

Negro and white troops, allowed, unmolested, to come into contact at Camp Maxy, strike up healthy relations. A white outfit, going overseas, gave Negro soldiers hundreds of presents—radios, books and the like—because, having lived next to the Negroes' area, they had grown fond of one another.

"I am now in a Northern camp. Everything is as good here as it was bad in the other place. Except for the basic policy of segregated Negro and white outfits," he added, "we are treated just like the white soldiers."

He said, further: 4-6-44

"I believe the present people's war will result in democratic advances for the American Negro. In spite of all the obstacles and maltreatment, the Negro soldier will give full support to defeat the Axis, and he will learn that nothing is achieved without struggle. Furthermore, the white soldier who fights alongside of the Negro, and the white worker on the home front, are themselves helping to destroy prejudice."

Prejudice Out, Colonel Tells Camp Personnel

Daily World

All Men Wearing Uniform Equal, Commander Rules

Atlanta Ga.

INDIANTOWN GAP, Pa.—(ANP)—"Race prejudice has not been is not, and will not be tolerated at this camp," recently declared Col. Forrest E. Ambrose, commanding officer of the transportation corps unit training center at Indiantown Gap, Pa. The declaration was made to all of the troops in the center in a series of talks with each of the eight battalions in training.

"You are American soldiers, wearing the uniform of your country, and you have a right to expect to be teated as such," emphatically declared the colonel. 'Prejudice, discrimination, and segregation on the basis of color at this camp will not be tolerated, and if there are any such cases I personally want to know about them at once."

CHANCES EQUAL 3-31-44

The colonel told the men that they would rise or fall on thier individual merits alone. He pointed out to them that despite the restrictions on the number of officer candidates, they would have equal chances with anyone else, within the reduced quotas, to become officers. 3-31-44

The men were frankly told, however that they themselves must assume certain responsibilities "in helping to improve your character and efficiency as soldiers and men and to maintain the excellent records already set by other colored troop who have preceded you."

"Our mission is to train and develop ourselves into good soldiers so that we may do our full share as American citizens. This job we have to do would be materially hindered by excessive absence without leave, by sickness and by other things which cause us to lose training time," the colonel asserted. "To demonstrate your quality, we must seek constantly to reduce the amount of training time lost, not alone to keep our records as good as those of other units, but to make them better and thereby to become more efficient soldiers and more useful and happier citizens." 3-31-44

COURSE EXTENDED

The lectures were a part of the orientation program of the training center, which is receiving increasing attention in army circles for its work among the colored troops of Indiantown Gap.

Said to be one of the first of its kind, the regular army orientation course at this center has been extended and adapted to answer the specific questions of their own leaders in helping to solve their own problems, the orientation section has been largely staffed with colored personnel, including two young Negro officers, Lt. Dunbar S. McLaurin and Lt. Everett Morrow.

In commenting on the results, the colonel stated, "The magnificent response to this program from the thousands of men is highly gratifying and is the best proof of its value and rightness." This would seem to mark a new era in army training, for through its personnel the orientation section has been able to secure many changes which have improved the morale and training efficiency of the troops. Many eyes have been focused on the program with the view of its adoption or extension in the army. 3-31-44

The training center is completely garrisoned with colored troops who are in training for duty with port companies in the transportation corps.

All Work Together in Teaching and Guard Duties at N.Y. Camp; 369th Credited With Building Up Democratic Feeling; Only Drawback Is No Colored Officers

By TONY MARINO

OSWEGO, N.Y. — Thanksgiving Day jumped like mad here at Fort Ontario. Every company had a big party with turkey and all the trimmings.

Sergeant Johnson, of Company E, an excellent violinist, arranged a fine program; and Company F even found enough talent to form a swing band, that didn't do badly after all.

This is about the best camp for colored soldiers that I know of. The first day we arrived here from Fort Niagara, N.Y., we found colored and white soldiers working together all over the post, in a democratic way that many leaders, even of our own group, argue cannot exist during wartime.

Armed Guard

It was nothing to see an armed MP escorting a white prisoner. On several occasions, over three-fourths of the guards, who drilled the prisoners were colored.

The job done here is primarily one of teaching the fundamentals of formal education. The readin', 'ritin' and 'rithmetic are geared up to the tune of war, but its effects will be longer lasting and more potent to the men that the war could ever be.

The men who teach these subjects are colored and white, all college bred and good soldiers. T/5 Asbery Reynolds, a graduate of the Buffalo State Teachers' College, was the first of the colored instructors to take other classes. He did such a good job in teaching this class of Spaniards, Chinese, and white, that integration became even greater.

Five Colored Companies

NCO (non-commissioned officers') school is mixed; the service club resembles an assemblage of many nation; the USO is liberal and the townspeople of Oswego are fair.

There are five colored companies, totaling some 1000 to 1,500 soldiers. Morale is high, and in my estimation we are unfortunate only in that we have no colored officers and no colored population in the neighboring town. 1-1-44

But we didn't build up this democratic spirit ourselves. We are thankful to the men of the 369th for most of the good feeling that exists. Their name will long be remembered by the people of Oswego. The members of the 1210th have to soldier like mad to equal their reputation half-way.

Two day rooms were recently presented to Companies E and F of the 1210th service unit. Principals in the dedication ceremonies were First Sgt. Leeland Jones of Company E, and First Sgt. Clarence Brown of Company F. All of the bigwigs of Oswego attended the program.

Colored Combat Troops

These same quarters maintain that colored troops have low morale, are unable to learn complicated mechanisms and meneuvers and have a generally low intelligence rating.

However, the only examples of officer-class hysteria that have reached American papers are instances of white officers.

Private-slapping General Patton is a case in point as was the shooting of one colored soldier and the stabbing of another, all by white officers. Military men call this hysteria and inability to meet a military situation even in a safe zone.

Possible Results of Probe

If ample Congressional action is begun the results will be far reaching. First of all, it will be front-page news in all the daily papers.

Most Americans do not know that colored combat units simply do not exist as large, identifiable groups of fighters. The relation of the use of colored combat outfits to the draft of fathers and essential workers will be a reason for comment.

It can also be expected that many Congressmen who have no interest in racial affairs will voice opinions. Casualties among whites have been proportionately higher than colored casualties because colored troops are used to build bridges and not to fight Nazis.

Fish Distressed

Hamilton Fish (R., N.Y.) told the AFRO that he was deeply distressed at the non-use of colored troops.

Fish, when in political hot water because of his alleged relations with George Sylvester Vierick, convicted Nazi agent, offered to command a detachment of colored troops. The army refused his offer although he had been a company commander in the 369th in 1917-1918. 1-1-44

"They knew I'd only be interested in the command of colored combat troops and that as soon as my outfit was ready to fight I'd want to take it overseas," Fish said.

Private Probe Made

He has recently made two speeches against the non-use of colored combat troops. It can be expected that he will make another.

Fish has been making private investigations concerning the problem. He is a "MacArthur-for-President" man and will utilize his findings in any way that is politically convenient.

He told the AFRO that:

"As far as I can find out only a few colored troops are being used as soldiers," Congressman Fish stated. "I know of no infantry regiment, artillery or tank units that have been serving in a war area.

"There are many engineer regiments building roads and airfields. But judging from information which comes to me, most colored soldiers are in non-combat regiments.

"If these facts be correct, then it is an entirely different picture from the last war. Within one year after war was declared in 1917 the 369th Regiment was in the trenches.

"It was shortly followed by other regiments which served with valor and distinction. Within a year and a half an entire colored division was in France. The war is now two years old.

"We are informed that it is a war to preserve the Four Freedoms throughout the world. Surely, then, colored troops are entitled to participate in the war on an equal basis with the whites."

Fish was the author of the Selective Service amendment which attempted to prohibit discrimination against colored troops.

Cites 369th's Record

He feels that every colored person in the country resents the non-use of race combat personnel. He answers critics of the proved abilities of colored troops with incontrovertible facts. 1-1-44

"The record made by the 369th in France, where they suffered large casualties, and were decorated by the French Government, is incontestable evidence of the value of colored soldiers," he declared. "The record established by those valiant men justifies the use of colored combat troops in this war."

Representative Fish said that he had not made a recent check on the use of colored troops. But he sarcastically added, "I am sure that the War Department will not refuse that information to the colored press which represents millions of loyal Americans.

"We have repeatedly told the press the names of the white divisions of infantry and marines who are seeing service," he added.

"I can't see how it could be giving away military secrets to announce the names of colored units, if they exist. The people should know what colored combat regiments or divisions are fighting in the front lines for our country."

Casualties Low

Fish also remarked about the relatively small number of battle casualties among colored troops. This is obviously do to the fact that they are not being used in headline-making combat positions.

"I doubt that one-tenth of the announced casualties are colored," he said. "We are fighting for democratic principles — let's not let them down."

I.Q.'s Not Important

As a former commander of a company in the famed 369th Regiment in World War I, Fish is not interested in the I.Q.'s of troops.

Some War Department observers feel that colored troops have a low intellectual level.

"The best machine-gunner in my company could not read or write," Congressman Fish pointed out. "Millions of soldiers in the armies of our allies, as well as our enemies, are illiterate. Yet they make first-rate soldiers.

"Among troops in the British Eighth Army is a detachment of Indians. There is no reason to believe that they are educated men. A considerable percentage of the Japanese are illiterate. The army is reported to have turned down an estimated half-million colored men because they were illiterate." 1-1-44

Sound Body Needed

Hamilton Fish believes that it is much more important to have a sound body and good eyesight than a college education if you are simply going to be a soldier.

Top-notch spokesmen for the Republican party who want to get the idea across, but who do not want to be identified, said:

"The Republican party should hold the administration accountable for the non-use of colored troops in combat units. They should give some pledge to the people that equal treatment will be given to all men wearing the uniform of the United States Army."

Although Republican leaders were eager to get this statement of a plank into the AFRO, no one I talked to wanted to use his name in connection with it. It was simply a carefully-worded announcement of what the race should expect from them.

IT HAD TO BE A NEGRO

Weekly Review
Bham, Ala.
2-5-44

A soldier who is camped in Mississippi wrote his wife who lives in Birmingham to come to see him on the thing which would get her there quickest. She found that the bus was the answer.

She and a Negro man got a seat on the bus. About 2 A. M., at night down near the Mississippine the driver stopped the bus, went back to the rear of the bus and unceremoniously told the Negro passenger: "I ought to throw you off the bus. Why didn't you give me your ticket!" The Negro replied, "I did give you my ticket." He was disputed by the bus driver. The passenger begged the driver pardon and at at the same time contended that he had given him the ticket.

The sixteen white persons by this time were all aware of the driver's increasingly beligerent attitude. The lone Negro woman was terrified at the possibility of being thrown off the bus because she suspected that the white passengers would side with the driver. 2-5-44

About this time a white soldier yelled, "Here is your ticket." The bus driver asked why he hadn't given him the ticket when he got on. The soldier replied it was the driver's business to get the ticket. Reports have it that the driver would not take the ticket from the soldier who later threw it on the floor where it remained. where it remained.

The soldier didn't let it die down but kept fussing about the colored man because he happened to be colored and in the bus driver's mind had to be the one guilty of not having a ticket. The soldier added "I'll be glad when this war is over so I can get out of the South."

Wholesale ill treatment of Negroes by some transportation systems should drive the Negro to separate bus lines for Negroes and others, which of course means that they must organize to protect such ventures in courts.

Color Seen As A Bar To Army Promotions At Fort Benning

Journal & Guide - Norfolk, Va.
1-15-44

FT. BENNING, Ga.— (ANP) — The seeming intention of the Army to hold Negro promotions down to the minimum has rarely been shown in clearer perspective than one sees it here at Fort Benning. This is not the only post where the commander has called his Negro officers in and told them that if they were to stay on that post, they would have to be content with first lieutenancies. The story has just come to light. It is about a group which calls itself "The Legion of Glorified Corporals."

A year ago December 17 there was started a regiment at Fort Benning which was ironically called the proving ground for Negro officers.

THE SITUATION

"In December, 1942, an enthusiastic group of young Negro quartermaster officers met at the temporary headquarters of the provisional truck regiment. Their conversation consisted mostly of speculating, speculating whether they would be commanding car companies, truck companies, or van companies.

A group of white second lieutenants fresh out of officer candidate school came and the rumor was started that these were the company commanders. The company commanders were appointed—all white except one. This fortunate one was called a company coordinator, not commander. All the adjutants (5) were white, all supply officers were colored (5).

The colored officers began to wonder just what this regiment was supposed to prove.

Then started the period of surprises. First, all white officers from the rank of second lieutenant to lieutenant colonel were promoted. Colored officers were told they didn't have enough background; yet they had all had experience as enlisted men and officers in truck regiments, whereas none of the whites had.

TRANSFERS REFUSED

After this the "guinea pigs" of the proving ground practically all applied for transfers. No transfers were allowed but a limited few were promoted to first lieutenants. 1-15-44

Then in March came the blow that left all concerned groggy. The commanding officer called all colored officers to a meeting and politely informed them that no Negroes on this post would be tolerated above the rank of lieutenant.

Shortly afterwards the ranking Negro officer of the post, a Major Cooper, was transferred to A. and T. College at Greensboro, N. C. Two months later all battalion supply officers and adjutants were changed. There were now white supply officers and colored adjutants. The job of supply officer

Only three out of 38 Negroes remained in positions requiring a promotions of these three, two were first lieutenants when some of the present white captains were still in OCS.

NOT ALL BAD

Fortunately, not everything at Ft. Benning is bad. A new post commander has shown himself to be fair. He has challenged the

First Racial Discrimination Case Filed Under Bolton Cadet Nurse Corps Measure

Admission To Class Denied Girl In Iowa

Daily World-Atlanta, Ga.
3-18-44

WASHINGTON—(ANP)— In the first case of discrimination growing out of the Bolton nurse training bill enacted last spring, the general counsel of the Federal Security agency, at the request of the U. S. Public Health service, ruled that discrimination is indicated only when funds are denied an institution on account of race, creed or color, and not because of the refusal of a white institution to accept a Negro application for training

The instance was disclosed by Leslie Perry legislative representative of the NAACP, last week, and deals with the experience of Mrs. Virginia Parsons of Kookuk, Iowa. Mrs. Parsons, it appears, applied to the St. Joseph's hospital of that city for training last fall. The hospital is a private institution.

"Apparently Mrs. Parsons met all requirements except that of color," according to the NAACP "Hospital authorities submitted the question of her admission to hospital to the student body which voted not to accept her."

It was the late Sen. Warren Barbour of New Jersey who presented the amendment to the Bolton bill barring discrimination "in the administration of the benefits and appropriations made under the respective provisions of the act on account of race, creed or color." However, when the Kookuk branch of the association took the matter up with public health, the ruling was requested.

The decision of Jack B. Tate general counsel for FSA, was that "the requirement of the act..will be complied with if in the administration of the act no plan is disapproved or payment denied to any institution on account of race, creed or color of the students, teachers or other personnel."

Whereas the Nurses' Education association lists 32 state accredited schools which admit only Negroes none of these schools are in Iowa, the nearest being Missouri, the Kookuk branch informed.

The association is now considering what action it shall take in line with the problem presented, Perry said.

They Want Jim Crow Thrown Out of the Army

Petitions said that Officer Candidate Schools, from which Jim Crow is excluded, work well and that this equitable policy should be extended to offer equality in training, promotion and assignment to active combat duty without discrimination for race, creed or color.

NEGRO ENSIGNS

Life, N.Y., N.Y. June 5, 1944

Sirs:

Shame on Mr. Jones (Letters to the Editors, May 15) for his thoughtlessness in condemning Negro ensigns. His ideas are of the kind which start race riots and prevent closer collaboration between the races.

I am a Southerner, but more than that, I am an American—and white.

W. W. RITTER JR. USNR
Chapel Hill, N. C.

Sirs:

We read with great distaste the letter in LIFE which expressed antagonism toward Negroes in the Navy. Our nation is engaged in a life-and-death struggle to insure equal opportunity for all men. If any man, regardless of his race, color or creed, can hasten our victory by his efforts he should be given that opportunity.

Hit Mistreatment of Sick Negro Soldiers

The Worker-New York, N.Y.
2-13-44

(Special to The Worker)

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.—Treatment of a group of sick Negro soldiers at Westover Field near here in the 1189th Guard Squadron has aroused bitter indignation among Negro and white troops as well as civilians.

Some 40 Negro troops had up until Feb. 8 been relieved of ardorous duty and properly con-guard duty.

ined to sick barracks because of The sick soldiers hesitantly in- hernia, rheumatism, arthritis and formed their immediate commander other painful ailments. On that they were unable to perform such date, Major E. H. Worth, who duties because it entailed outside recently took over command, called re-duty in cold weather, garbed in light of the sick Negro soldiers to his fatigue clothes. The commander in- office and told them to report for formed the Major of the soldiers' complaint, whereupon he sent 12 of the 15 to the guardhouse as prisoners, while three others reported for guard duty. 2-13-44

Adding to the mounting bitterness is a ruling segregating Negro soldiers from whites at the post theatre and field movies. Indicating the feeling of the Negro soldiers on this matter one remarked "There's not much difference to the sign 'Jews and Verboten' in Berlin restaurants and with our segregation at the Westover theatre."

UNDER GUARD

Four of the 12 who were sent to prison in the guardhouse, simply too ill to work, while eight more made an attempt to guard duty. However, those who did try to carry out orders found themselves surrounded with other guards armed with sub-machine guns and clubs.

Meanwhile other Negro soldiers at such as graduate parachute riggers, mechanics, armorers, radio men and so on, have been put to menial tasks making beds, firing boilers, KP orderlies and other tasks. Major Worth recently issued an order that Negroes firing boilers work 12 hour shifts instead of the customary eight hours. The troops also accuse Major Worth of "busting" Negro non-coms for minor infractions.

Army Bulletin Warns Racism Perils Victory

Daily Worker - New York, N.Y.

4-26-44

By Eugene Gordon

The War Department, probably stung by criticism of past undemocratic attitudes toward Negro soldiers, seems to be on the point of mending.

This fact is noted in an article by the Rev. Ben Richardson, assistant pastor of the Abyssinian Baptist Church, in this week's issue of the People's Voice. Mr. Richardson reviews a new War Department pamphlet entitled "The Command of Negro Troops."

The pamphlet is intended to create "a fuller degree of understanding between Negro soldiers and the white men who now, or may in the future, command them."

"Commanders are told point blank that Negro soldiers frequently have lower averages on the Army General Classification Tests than do white men processed the same time," writes Mr. Richardson, "but this is the result, it says, of Negroes' having been denied opportunities in technical trades or jobs as civilians."

Commanders are told also that the comparatively low averages that occasionally appear "must not be taken as a sign that the Negro soldier cannot laern, but that he has not been given a chance previously and must be given one now."

Population trends, due to the shift of the Negro from the South, are noted, the pamphlet showing that, whereas one of every five Negro soldiers came from the North during the first world war, three of every five now come from the North.

This fact is, in turn, reflected in the findings of the general classification tests, in which the Negro soldier from the North is shown to posses a higher intelligence quotient than the Negro from the South. This criticism on the backward educational methods of the South, is not stated in so many words.

This scientific honesty throughout the pamphlet is probably the reason why its sponsor, the Secretary of War and its endorsers, Gen. George C. Marshall, chief of staff, and Maj. Gen. J. A. Ulio, adjutant general, introduced it so quietly. They presumably feared lest is suffer the fate of "The Races of Mankind." The job, too, is a fine compliment to the Roosevelt administration, reason enough for poll taxers and their allies to fall upon it.

WHAT TO DO

The pamphlet says that men of advanced skills must be given every chance to find their places in the proper services; that literacy classes must go on constantly; that officers must not allow their inefficiency to result in blame of the men, this inefficiency being defined in terms of failure to get fullest cooperation of the soldiers. 4-26-44

Racial theories are condemned as "idiotic" and as dangerous to victory. Officers are told to seek the men's cooperation by treating them simply as Americans, not as Negro Americans. Offensive epithets are banned absolutely.

The Negro press, which Westbrook Pegler charges with responsibility for the Negro's hardships, is praised for "its honest protest" against persons and conditions which create the hardships.

The pamphlet, in short, according to Mr. Richardson, is a first-rate job for morale

BOOK EXTOLLING MIND OF NEGRO BARRED TO ARMY

Tribune
Chicago, Ill.
3-6-44

Washington, D. C., March 5 (AP).—Chairman May [D., Ky.] said today a threat by the house military committee to "expose the motive behind this book" had blocked army distribution of a pamphlet which he said described northern Negroes as the intellectual equals of southern white men.

The committee action, May said, came after it was learned that 55,000 copies of the book, "The Races of Mankind," had been purchased by the war department for distribution in connection with army orientation courses, following refusal of the United Service organizations to allow the pamphlets to be circulated in U. S. O. centers.

Designed for Tolerance.

The Kentuckian said sponsors of the book claimed it was prepared to promote tolerance by teaching the fundamental unity of races and contending that economic differences are largely responsible for racial differences. It was published, he said, by a New York City publishing company and prepared by Ruth Benedick.

May's ire was fanned by a claim he said the book made that a survey showed that the average Negro in New York, Massachusetts, and Connecticut ranked on an intellectual level with the average white man in Kentucky, Arkansas, and Mississippi.

CIO Unit Aids Book.

After the U. S. O. had banned the book, May asserted the CIO war relief committee promoted its distribution and the army obtained 55,000 copies. Army spokesmen, he said, told the committee distribution had been held up because some of the material was subject to misinterpretation.

"It won't be distributed by the army," he said flatly. "If it is, we will have plenty to say and it will be said right on the floor of the house. It has no place in the army program." 3-6-44

While no further committee action is contemplated, May added, "we intend to keep an eye open to see that this book does not go out to our soldiers thru war department channels. If it does, somebody is going to have to do plenty of explaining."

Issuance Halted

Racial Book Used by Army Hit in House

Post
Washington, D.C.
4-28-44

"The Races of Mankind," a publication of which 55,000 copies were purchased by the Army for distribution among students of its orientation course, was assailed by a House Military subcommittee yesterday as containing statements ranging "all the way from half-truths through innuendos to downright inaccuracies."

Army distribution of the publication for study courses was halted, the committee said, after complaints were made that the pamphlet sought to make an intellectual comparison between Southern white men and northern Negroes.

Not Proper Time

The subcommittee, headed by Representative Durham (D., N. C.), said it was "convinced that war-time is no time to engage in the publication and distribution of pamphlets presenting controversial issues or promoting propaganda for or against any subdivision of the American people."

The book was written by Prof. Ruth Benedict and Dr. Gene Weltfish, department of anthropology, Columbia University. Its promoter was identified as the Public Affairs Committee, Inc. of New York. Publications of the Public Affairs Committee, Inc., the report continued, "are recommended by the affiliated schools for workers (Communist) and sold by Communist book stores.

Brotherhood Theory 4-28-44

The committee said the book's basic theme was that the races of mankind "are all brothers; but even brothers in the same family are not necessarily equal mentally, physically, socially, politically, or morally."

The most controversial statement in the book, the committee said, purported to be the result of an intelligence test given soldiers of the last war, with "soutrern whites from States having small educational appropriations" being compared with "northern Negroes from States with much greater budgets, to the detriment of the former."

NEGROES KEPT FROM FIGHTING; FISH ASKS WHY

Tribune
Chicago, Ill.

Stimson Says They 'Can't Master Weapons.'

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Feb. 23.—Rep. Fish [R., N. Y.] today told the house of his astonishment that virtually no Negro troops have been engaged in combat after 26 months of war.

An officer of a colored infantry regiment in the last war, Fish criticized the war department policy of using these soldiers as service troops, recalling that they made gallant fighting records in 1917-18.

He inserted in the Congressional Record a letter from Secretary of War Stimson which denied discrimination is being practiced against Negro soldiers, but asserted their efficiency ratings were so low that many of the Negro units have been unable to master efficiently the techniques of modern weapons."

Forecasts Resentment

"I believe many American Negroes will resent bitterly this broad indictment of their people and the discrimination against them in combat units in defense of their country," Fish declared. "It seems passing strange that French Senegalese or whole British divisions from India have been fighting so superbly with our allies, and that Russians with low educational qualifications have been the heroes of this war."

The New Yorker referred particularly to the "breaking up of such a well known and gallant Negro regiment as the former 8th Illinois National Guard unit."

Turned Into Engineers.

"I cannot speak for the colored people of Chicago," he said, "but I should think they will be shocked to learn that this regiment, of which they rightly have been so proud because of its service in the last war, is now being turned into an engineer regiment after more than two years of training in preparation for front line service as a field artillery unit." 2-24-44

Stimson, in his letter to Fish, admitted that Negro combat units had been converted to service units, but added:

"Large numbers of Negro troops are overseas or en route and will be given every opportunity to win battle honors and demonstrate their worth in actual combat."

Bias Seen In Resignation Of Mississippi Draft Board

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga. 2-25-44

MERIDIAN, Miss. — (Special) — The ugly head of racial prejudice was seen in the resignation of Lauderdale County Draft Board here last Saturday, in the statement issued by Mrs. Lula Abraham, Clerk of Laudardale County Draft Board, No. 1, who resigned her office after being exonerated of charges of ineptness by W. Ludham and Robert Gillespie, members of the board, who also resigned following Mrs. Abraham.

Upon her resignation Mrs. Abraham, who is of Latin-European extration, issued the following statement: "For this I have been literally crucified on the cross of intolerance because of my nationality and in spite of the fact that I have been born an American citizen in this beloved southland. Truth, right, and justice will prevail against every form of racial persecution by small pressure groups."

Mr. Gillespie stated that Mrs. Abraham was guilty and he knew of nothing she had done to justify him in disagreeing with her removal. Mr. Ludham stated on had no knowledge of any act on her part to justify her removal.

The resignations closed a controversy of two months, beginning when American Legion, The Veterans of Foreign Wars, Spanish War Veterans, and the Carpenters Union, made complaint that Mrs. Abraham had been exempted from service by Washington Selective Service Authorities, who returned a verdict to Washington Selective Service Authorities, who returned a verdict exonerating the clerk of Service Authorities, who returned a verdict exonerating the clerk of general charges, and suggesting that the local board members make the final decision.

Indiantown Gap Commander "Ashamed of Mess My People Make of Racial Situation"

By RICHARD E. HARRIS

INDIANTOWN GAP, Pa.—Col. Forrest E. Ambrose of the Army Service Forces Training Center, the one post commandant openly to declare himself against discrimination, then put his words into action, took such a stand because he is "frankly, ashamed of the mess my people have made of the racial situation." 7-22-44

The path that led this writer to seek an interview with the colonel were statements of the highest praise for the man from soldiers of both races, from buck privates to commissioned officers.

Men like Pvt. William Zuber of Birmingham, Ala., previously stationed at four camps, and Second Lieut. James M. Morton, asserted "victim" of sixteen camps, proudly insist that the "Gap" is tops.

Building Post-War Amity

Explaining further the motive behind his precedent-setting stand, the colonel said he was determined to make good the big opportunity of instilling in the hearts and minds of his "boys" the necessity of learning to work and live together harmoniously in the post-war world. 7-22-44

"As long as I am here," the veteran of thirty-two years with the Army said, "there will be no discrimination here. I teach my boys the value of good teamwork at every opportunity that presents itself."

The championship baseball team, the war bond show, which brought in $2,000,600 from its six-day tour and the orientation staff, are outstanding examples of this teamwork between races.

Colonel Ambrose is personally sponsoring a letter contest among section leaders concerning their ideas and interpretation of teamwork. 7-22-44

No Dramatics, He Says

"There's nothing dramatic about this," he replied, answering as to why he took the problems personally. "The problems simply present themselves. Then there are instances of soldiers' parents continually sending letters of appreciation for what I have tried to do for their sons. This means a lot to me."

"Democracy is to mean everyone, if it is to mean anything. It's got to be 100 per cent. Even though America has set examples all over the world, we still have great flaws in our system of democracy, and these flaws must be eliminated," he contended.

The father of an Army lieutenant and an ensign, Colonel Ambrose came here from Washington twenty-one months ago. He dislikes office work.

Abe Lincoln His "Ideal"

Born of Virginia parents in Springfield, Ill. the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln, his "ideal," the Colonel was schooled in Kansas, but traveled later with his parents, who were engaged in home mission work for the Presbyterian Church. 7-22-44

His travels took him to China, and other parts of the Orient and Manila, where his sons were born. At these places, he said, he gained a greater perspective of what America meant to the world.

It is to help justify the little nations' beliefs in America that the beloved commandant of this post is working unceasingly.

"If America is to maintain that high position of respect which she holds among peoples of other nations, then she must strengthen her position here at home," he emphasized.

Sir: In this war for liberation, Negro as well as white Americans are working, fighting and dying side by side. In addition, Negroes like white Americans, are making specific sacrifices and contributions on the home front such as giving generously to the American Red Cross and to National War Fund which disburses money to USO. When funds are collected by these organizations, none is earmarked: "For white soldiers only" or "For Negro soldiers." Ostensibly, funds are collected for democratic purposes. All monies are supposed to be spent for "all our boys" without discrimination. When American Red Cross appeals for funds, it says: "Remember, the ARC is always at his side." ARC does not say: "at the side of white soldiers..." His side means, at the side of ALL soldiers, Negro or white: at the side of all American soldiers.

Yet what do we find? At Schick General Hospital, Clinton, Iowa, ARC holds social affairs, gives parties supposedly for ALL the patients. Actually, these parties and affairs are for whites only. Of course ARC does not openly drive Negroes away from these affairs. But in practice it does just that. New York, N.Y.

Jim Crow In Action

All hostesses at these affairs are white, ARC refuses to permit Negro hostesses. The reason? Negro hostesses might MIX with white soldiers! Consequently, when these social affairs are held, Negro patients find themselves isolated and alone. 7-22-44

"Oh, no," says ARC... "we don't ask the Negroes to leave...we don't discriminate..." Eventually, the Negroes leave the auditorium. They aren't part of things. They're left out in the cold.

"Give...Remember, ARC is always at his side..."

Is ARC at the side of these Negro patients who find themselves isolated and alone, frozen out of social affairs?

Is it for this that democratic whites contribute to ARC?

Call it what ARC will. This is discrimination against Negroes. It is un-American and must be stopped.

Similar Situation

At the local USO, Clinton, Iowa, we have a similar situation. Negro soldiers, accompanied by Negro girls, are not allowed to dance at the USO. The reason? Negro girls are not registered with USO. When the girls ask to register, they are told this is "against rules," and both Negro men and women are asked to leave and not cause "trouble."

Is it for this that the National War Fund helps sustain USO? Is it for this that Negroes contribute to the National War Fund and to USO? 7-22-44

It is not the Negro who is causing trouble here. It is the anti-Negro policy and practice of USO.

Funds for USO were contributed by Negro and white Americans on good faith; with the understanding that such funds would be spent for the recreation of ALL our boys regardless of color. USO must keep faith with all Americans, Negro and white—USO must keep faith with democracy.

Is This Liberalism?

Clinton, Iowa, prides itself in its long history of liberalism and anti-slavery. Iowa is democratic. Its people overwhelmingly support the war. But some businessmen in Clinton do not understand the meaning of democracy.

Negro patients can't sit down to eat a sandwich or drink a glass of beer in most of Clinton's clubs and bars.

"Oh, no!" they say to Negro soldiers, "we don't discriminate. We invite your trade."

But in Clinton, Iowa, Negro soldiers recuperating from wounds and injuries sustained in all war theatres must drink standing up or "on the curb." They can eat a sandwich served "on the sidewalk," or they can "have it wrapped and put in a sack," take it home and eat it there. 7-22-44

Negro soldiers are dying so that "free enterprise" can survive in Clinton, Iowa. Free enterprise in Clinton, Iowa, must be made democratic.

All Races Fight, Work To Defeat Common Enemy

8-4-44

By WILL V. NEELY
(ANP Foreign Correspondent)

WITH U. S. TROOPS IN THE PACIFIC, — (ANP) — The war now in progress in the Pacific can, when it is recorded in history, be considered the war of the races.

It is a war where several races are being pitted against the influx of the Japanese. To appreciate the true meaning of what is going on in the Pacific, one needs only to glance at the record.

China, with her millions powerful, yet struggling against a nation of aggressors, realizes that the Japanese grew in power even under her very shadow while she passed thru the years in confusion.

CHINA HOLDS KEY

China holds the key to the new free world. Across her sprawling lands, men are fighting and dying to regain the torch of freedom so vital to her peoples. 8-4-44

To the aid of China came the big nations, realizing that to lose China was to risk the future of the Asiatic-Pacific world.

Yet, China in her deathhold against aggression was not alone. There was huge Australia with a total population about the same as New York City.

'At the start of the war, Australia rushed her fighting men to the middle coast and to Africa to stem the tide of Rommel and his German hordes. From England to Egypt, the Australian soldier did his part to represent his homeland and the homeland of millions who were to come into the war later.

This left Australia pitfully weak in fighting men but not weak in fighting spirit.

FORCES SANK

The Japs knew of Australia's weakness. They thought invasion of her soil would be an easy task. First, they would take New Guinea and then----

American planes sighted and sank the invasion forces before they had a chance to carry out the threat. 8-4-44

After the arrival of Gen. Mac Arthur, Australia took a new lease on life. American soldiers began to arrive and for the first time in history, Negro troops set feet on Australian soil. With the defense of Australia came the task of moving back the Japanese in New Guinea

New Guinea became the fighting ground for the Australians, and American white and Negro troops. Supplies were rushed to the Jap infested jungle. Australian infantry moved forward while American infantry completed the encirclement.

Negro engineers and quartermaster troops made roads thru murky jungle paths. The net tightened. The whites and Negroes were pitted against the Japanese.

FIGHT TOGETHER

Negro troops arrived in India and Burma and China. Mixed races fighting an working together for one common cause—Democracy!

And so the net still tightens. It is a huge football game with the navy making the passes and being followed up by the Marines and the army, or perhaps the army or marines making the passes and being supported by the Navy.

It is a mixture of races, this war in the Pacific. 8-4-44

When the book of time is closed and the world is at peace again—the peoples of all races can thank God that when freedom is at stake, the color line is as flexible as the horizon.

"Every officer of color hates segregation a thousand fold, more than he did when he left home. Under its cruel and unyielding yoke, lawyers serve in service regiments, social workers, teachers and business men are in quartermaster corps and college graduates never get to officer candidate school." Frustration is the order of the day, he disclosed.

BI RACIAL INEQUALITIES

He hit the evils of racial segregation by pointing out the inequalities of bi-racialism. "Nowhere is there equality of opportunity," he said. "White civilians out-rank colored; recreational facilities are grossly inadequate for the one, while for the other, every opportunity is open." Even on a so-called Negro post, this condition exists, he declared.

"Think of serving in an army where doctrines exist prohibiting a Negro from operating on a white man," the colored officer continued, "or where a white woman is not allowed to perform in a show exclusively for Negro troops." He explained that the former regulation or rule is sometimes violated by special order from the commanding officer but the latter rule remains inviolate.

"I think the future security of this nation as a democracy calls for severe efforts on the part of every thinking person to fight for the complete integration of Negroes everywhere into every line of endeavor," he said. "There should be no more separate institutions with consequent separate and often inadequate facilities and personnel." 7-25-44

He said that he had observed how many southern views had changed on the race question since they have had a chance to mix, and mingle with intelligent Negroes The officer referred to the fair treatment members of the 92nd and 93d division had received at the station hospital, which is staffed entirely by Negro medics and nurses, adding that colored doctors and nurses have set a record in the army's medical corps.

Army Stresses Jim Crow Ban

PM—New York, N.Y. 8-25-44

The War Dept. has taken steps to end discrimination between whites and Negroes at Army posts throughout the U. S. A.

A stop-discrimination directive, dated July 8, went out to all post commanders but its existence did not become known publicly until yesterday when the Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser learned that Jim Crow post exchanges had been abolished at nearby Maxwell Field.

At Washington, a War Dept. spokesman confirmed reports that the orders came from Washington, explaining that the directive was a general letter to all Army establishments calling attention to the Department's standing policy against discrimination.

The spokesman explained that the Department's policy was that there must be no discrimination at Army posts, especially at post exchanges, bus depots, in theateres and on buses.

The War Dept. would not release the text of the directive, signed by Maj. Gen. James A. Ulio, the adjutant general, explaining that it was in "a restricted classification," but disclosed that Army rules provide: 8-25-44

¶ That no post exchange may be designated for the exclusive use of any particular race.

¶ That buses, trucks or other transportation owned and operated either by the Government or by a Governmental instrumentality will be available to all military personnel regardless of race and regardless of local civilian custom.

¶ That no Army theater or performance therein may be denied any group or individual because of race.

At Maxwell Field, publication relations officers refused to discuss changes there, standing on the position that the directive was "restricted" and could not be released or discussed.

The Advertiser, quoting civilian workers, reported that instructions were read to civilian and military personnel by organization officers at the big air base adding that some civilians had quit their jobs protesting indignantly against the change.

No Bias In New Guinea Hospitals

World—Memphis, Tenn. 8-22-44

By CONRAD CLARK

SOMEWHERE IN NEW GUINEA — (A N P)—Discrimination has received a terriole kick in the pants over here in New Guinea, as far as hospitalization for the Negro soldiers are concerned.

This afternoon I went to one of the station hospitals to visit two fellow New Yorkers, who are members of an all-Negro Anti-aircraft Artillery battalion over here.

The two soldiers were, T/4 Norwood Seigel and T/5 Eddie Conover, both residents of Harlem. According to the medical records Seigel had a slight attack of bronchial pneumonia, and Conover was suffering from a mild attack of backache.

While in the ward visiting T/5 Conover, a nurse came in to treat the patients in her section. There were less than four Negroes in the ward, as compared to a dozen white GIs. 8-22-44

The nurse went down the line, treating each patient the same as the other, and when this correspondent asked how was the general attitude of the white medical personnel towards their Negro patients, she replied, "the duty of a nurse is to administer to the sick, and the hospital knows no patient by color, simply that he is an American soldier, fighting for his country, and who needs medical attention."

Army regulations prohibit the using of an individual name, but during the course of many visits to the different hospitals, the writer has found the same spirit of democracy, all times

Ban Segregation At Maxwell Field, Ala.

Newspaper Reports

8-25-44

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS)—The Montgomery, Advertiser said Thursday the "segregation of races at the Maxwell Field Post Exchange was terminated Wednesday on instructions from the War Department."

The newspaper said a directive read to all military and civilian personnel was "restricted information."

Public Relations officers at the post Thursday declined comment on the story.

The Advertiser said its information, "from a trustworthy but non-military source" indicated the "directive reaching Maxwell Field was only one of others going to every military post in continental United States." 8-25-44

The directive, the newspaper said, "requires the removal of all segregation devices on the post so far as military personnel is concerned."

Maxwell Field, on the outskirts of Montgomery, is one of the Army Air Forces' oldest installations. It includes the headquarters of the Eastern Flying Command and a four-engined school.

Civilian employes at the field have limited access to post exchange facilities. They make purchases for "on premises" consumption, but pay the state tax on such items as cigarettes and tobacco.

The Fight on Jim-Crow Gains

Daily Worker—New York, N.Y.

THE recent War Department order prohibiting segregation in army post exchanges, transit facilities and movie theaters is the latest in a series of recent historic victories against Jimcrow. 8-26-44

It follows the Army order ending all discrimination against Negro nurses and the President's action in upholding the Fair Employment Practices Committee in the Philadelphia transit situation.

These advances, and many made earlier, are inseparable from the nature of the war we are fighting. They are essential to national unity, to national morale and to maximum participation of the people in the war. They reflect the contribution made by Negro Americans toward victory, such as that of the 8,000 Negro seamen who have been shipping war materials across.

These victories are made possible by the policies of the national administration, headed by President Roosevelt, and by the ever-increasing movement of the people, Negro and white, for the elimination of all discrimination.

The War Department action hits at the last refuge of the white supremacists' race segregation, and already their spokesmen are howling for the President to cancel the order. 8-26-44

Much still remains to be done in the battle against Jimcrow. With the chief carriers of the race supremacy virus—the Nazis—now facing total destruction, this is the time to rally all democratic forces to put an end to the infection in America.

It is especially vital to guarantee that the direction in which the nation has been going under President Roosevelt's leadership is not reversed. Negro and white patriots, irrespective of party, who oppose race discrimination should throw their full weight into the campaign to reelect FDR.

Army Bans Jim Crow From Its PXs, Buses, Film Showings

Daily Worker—New York, N.Y. 8-25-44

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.—Negro and white soldiers are to be equals in Army post exchanges, and Army buses and motion picture houses, according to a War Department order issued yesterday ending race segregation.

First knowledge of the order came in an article in The Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser that "segregation of races at the Maxwell Field post exchange was terminated yesterday on instructions from the War Department." 8-25-44

The history-making order said: "Post exchanges—While an exchange or a branch exchange may be allocated to serve specific areas or units, no exchange will be designated for the exclusive use of any particular race. Where such branch exchanges are established personnel will not be restricted to the use of their area or unit exchanges, but will be permitted to use any other exchange on the post, camp or station.

"Transportation—Buses, trucks or other transportation owned and operated by the government: Restricting personnel to certain sections of such transportation facilities because of race will not be permitted either on or off a post, camp or station, regardless of local civilian custom.

"Army motion picture theatres may be allocated to serve certain areas or units, but no theatre or performance in any theatre will be denied to any group or individual because of race."

Interracial Group Protests Abuse Of Soldiers At Westover Field, Mass.

Defender — Chicago, Ill.

2-26-44

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.—Westover Field, an army site near this town, came in for caustic criticism from Springfield residents Friday, after an interracial delegation had investigated charges of jim crow and persecution of colored soldiers at the field.

Following a two-hour conference with officers in charge, the delegation came away charging that Col. U. G. Jones, commanding officer at the field had sought to "whitewash" the situation.

Conditions at this army base reached a climax last Tuesday when 20 colored soldiers, confined to a hospital barracks were ordered to do heavy patrol duty. All except three refused, protesting that they were in no physical condition to perform the task. Nine of the soldiers were immediately placed in the guardhouse while eight others, attired in prison garb, were marched out onto the field by white soldiers armed with sub-machine guns, clubs and pistols, and forced to clean the field of debris. 2-26-44

It was this incident, revealed by colored soldiers themselves, that precipitated the citizens' investigation. The Springfield group that, urged by popular protest, went to the field to demand action against such abuses, was composed of the following local leaders in civic affairs: Mayor J. Albin Anderson, two colored ministers, the Reverends H. L. Moore and Herbert Wilkins; Russell Hatton, post commander of the Harrison Wright chapter, American Legion, Springfield's Negro chapter; C. Herbert Salter, organizer, United Electric Radio and Machine Workers of America, CIO; John Haraty, chairman of the Western Massachusetts CIO Council Committee against discrimination; and Mrs. Katharyne Jones, chairman of the Springfield Committee for the Abolition of Poll Tax, who served as spokesman.

In presenting its case, the delegation demanded an immediate end to all forms of racial segregation and persecution at the field. When questioned about the soldiers who had lodged the complaints, the delegation flatly refused to divulge any names. 2-26-44

Concerning the matter of segregation, soldiers at the field have constantly complained of being discriminated against in the barracks, mess halls, chapel and in the post's theatre. Further, they charge that colored soldiers are assigned largely to menial tasks, kept working long hours and those who protest are deprived of their stripes.

Major E. H. Worth who has been in charge of Negro personnel since Jan. 1, was directly blamed by the delegation as being responsible for the humiliating conditions aimed at Negro soldiers in the camp.

The city of Springfield prides itself on being the first city in the United States to initiate a broad program of education for tolerance in its public schools. This program is called the Springfield Plan, and has become widely accepted by educators throughout the country.

WHEN an Army officer with several years' ratings of "excellent" finds his morale so low as result of service in the South where he has been subjected to discriminations, insults, segregation, and lack of opportunity to use his skills to the fullest, says he would feel better if his fellow-Americans would just treat him like they do the Nazi prisoners—it's time for the War Department to sit up and take notice.

This officer is a Negro. He is educated. He is not a "squawker." He has been a good soldier. He admits a lot of progress has been made—over a hard, bumpy road—toward improvement of the Negro's plight in the Army. He cites the advance in aviation brought about through the efforts of Judge Hastie, of the present Civilian Aide, Truman Gibson, and public pressure — particularly the Negro press. He is not unmindful of the increased number of Negro officers as compared to the last war, nor of the broadened base of training given Negro enlisted men. 4-22-44

McALPIN

But he is bitter about the lack of respect the uniform of his country gets when it is draped upon the body of a Negro—officers and enlisted men alike.

And significantly, he says, the problem is not among the rank and file, in the Army, nor among the lower ranks of officers. Whites and Negroes can and do work together, play together, eat together, whenever they are not ordered not to do so.

White officers have insisted he accompany them to hotels, restaurants, etc., in the deepest South. He has done so. White enlisted men go to the "colored" movie on the post, though Negroes are refused tickets to enter the "white" movie. He has seen white soldiers, in protest against discrimination, take the seats at the "reserved tables" for Negroes in mess halls, where Negroes have been ordered to sit, but the whites have not been ordered not to sit.

The "problem" he says, is usually the creation of the top ranking officers, who "decree" separate movies, separate mess halls or tables, separate officers' clubs, separate seating on busses, separate toilets, etc. "In the interest of harmony, good order and morale," or "in compliance with local laws and customs."

Yet they do these same things in Iowa, Michigan, New Jersey, and most places outside of the deep South, even where laws and customs are in direct opposition to the Army policies of segregation—even when past experience proves the detrimental effect on morale. 4-22-44

What is needed, says this officer, are orders from Washington on the matter of race. Every officer, and particularly those wearing "leaves" and "eagles" and "stars," are "order-minded." They are jealous of their rank and conscious of the shame they may bring upon themselves and their families by disobeying orders.

A lot of us have arrived at similar conclusions by observation from the "outside." Here it is from a man who is living it every day. He can't do much, if anything about it as a member of the armed forces. He has gone on being a good soldier and an "excellent" officer—as he should.

The correction of such conditions should be a "must-drive" on the part of civilian Negroes and liberals during the Victory-year of 1944 as an integral part of the spirit of democracy—not to mention the political campaign this fall.

NAACP Asks Seabees' 'Unfitness' Charge Review

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.

9-23-44

NEW YORK — Permission to file briefs and appear personally on behalf of two colored Seabees dismissed from the U.S. Naval Reserve October 23, 1943, on a charge of "unfitness" was asked by NAACP special counsel in a letter September 13 to Secretary of the Navy James V. Forrestal.

The men, Arthur M. Segoins and Clifford F. Smith, were among the original 15 Seabees given "undesirable" discharges for discussing racial grievances at a supposedly "off-the-record" meeting called by the commanding officer while they were on duty at a base in the Pacific.

The facts revealed in a statement made to the NAACP by the Seabees immediately after their dismissal revealed that:

"When the meeting was called the commanding officer explained that the meeting was absolutely off the record. Each of the men told of grievances. Some of them were: 9-23-44

"White" and "colored" signs; the matter of ratings; a colored man could not be promoted to a first class rating; separate liberty buses for colored and white; all of the first class men and leaders with the exception of a few, were white.

Ratings Meant Nothing

"It was also brought out that the colored masters of arms were not permitted to place white sailors on report or to take any other measures, but were forced to refer the matter to white masters of arms; any punishment for breaking rules was uniformly more severe for colored men than for white.

"At the close of the meeting the men were told by the CO that he was glad the meeting had been called, that they would have similar meetings in the future, and it was decided that an interracial committee would be formed to bring about better relationship between white and colored. 9-23-44

"The next day the Regimental Commander wanted to know what the meeting of the day before was about, and who sponsored it. Told that we had no right to be at that meeting, we were asked if we knew exactly what we had gotten into; that it was against Navy regulations to hold such a meeting."

Regulations Forbid Jim Crow Clubs

6-26-44

By STAFF CORRESPONDENT

SELFRIDGE FIELD, Mich. — The real reason that two Army Air Forces units were suddenly removed from this field to Southern camps is because they insisted on a square deal, War Department denials to the contrary.

This is the inside story behind the surprise transfer of the 477th Bombardment Group to Fort Knox, Ky., and the 333rd Fighter Squadron to Walterboro Air Base, S.C.

Colored officers of the units were barred from the officers' club and a group of the more militant ones appealed to the commanding officer.

He upheld the jim crow and an appeal was made to the air forces area commander who ruled that as long as he was in charge, colored and white officers would not socialize together. 5-20-44

Offers Separate Club

He promised, however, that a separate officers' club would be constructed for colored only and such a club was being built when the units were shifted.

Dissatisfied with a jim-crow arrangement, the officers threatened to resign their commissions en masse, but lacked 100 per cent support from all the men.

One of the men who spoke out against the jim-crow order was Lieut. Milton Henry of Philadelphia who was dismissed following a court-martial hearing for insubordination.

Soldiers Who Went On Strike Back To Work

Journal + Guide — Norfolk, Va.

Granted Extra Pay And None Has Yet Been Punished

9-30-44

TUSCON, Ariz. — The 57 Negro soldiers stationed at Marana AAF here who went on strike Sept. 11 returned to work two days later. The soldiers, assigned permanently to kitchen police, have been granted the extra pay they say was their due when working for cadets. None of the men has been punished.

The strike was the climax against conditions which have long caused resentment among the men. Performing KP for periods up to 19 months, working 9 months for cadets without the customary extra pay, obliged to execute their extra squadron duty in the mess halls or other squadron areas than their own, unable to find adequate recreational facilities in Tucson — all these anteceded the strike which occurred when civilians were assigned to the recently reopened cadet mess hall.

9-30-44

PUT IN GUARD HOUSE

Thirty-three of the strikers had been put in the guardhouse for the two days of their work stoppage, and all had been warned of the long prison terms to which they were subject for mutiny.

The outcome of the strike is as follows: all Negro KPs have been assigned to the cadet mess hall where they will draw $25 per month in extra pay. However, they now work 84 hours a week as compared to the 56 hours a week they formerly worked in the general mess hall.

9-30-44

Civic leaders in Tucson have expressed renewed interest in establishing a Negro servicemen's center near amusement and transportation centers.

Whites Didn't Mind Business in England

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.

5-20-44

WASHINGTON—Denying that efforts to stir up feeling against our soldiers in England had been successful, George W. Goodman, recently returned ARC worker, told of an order issued by General Dwight Eisenhower stating that white soldiers had a right to their own prejudices at home, but that Britain was the Englishman's home.

The order ended with a blunt admonition to white soldiers to "mind your own business." Unfortunately," said Goodman, "Gen. Eisenhower went to Africa shortly afterwards, and they didn't mind their own business."

Mr. Goodman, former executive secretary of the Washington Urban League, who spent approximately two years as a Red Cross Club director in Bristol, England, addressed the Capital Press Club on Wednesday. He denied recent reports that our soldiers were being excluded from the community life of England as a result of the importation of native prejudices by white American soldiers.

5-20-44

Most Popular Soldier

While agreeing that prejudiced whites, officers and enlisted men alike, were sparing no efforts to force their racial bias upon the English, Goodman contended that the colored soldier has made himself the most popular allied soldier in the British Isles.

This, Mr. Goodman said, "has been due largely to their sense of humor, respect of local customs, and outstanding work records."

The English have been told that our soldiers were lazy, uncouth, and not to be compared with the British colonials.

Tale of Two Armies

The lord mayor of an English town told him that white American officers had said that they were bringing two different armies to Britain, Goodman related. The officers gave the impression that the colored troops had been picked up on the coast of Africa and brought on to England.

Said Goodman: "I told him that the only difference between the actual and reported occurrence was that of timing.

"I told him that we had been picked up on the coast of Africa against our wills and brought to England. But I also pointed out that we had stopped over in America long enough to help them to build a great nation before coming here."

5-20-44

Built Greatest Base

The Englishmen were rather confused, according to Goodman, at seeing the colored soldiers, relatively untrained in engineering, construct one of the greatest systems of air bases in the world.

They were no less amazed to see their work around the docks. The speed and skill with which they handled and unloaded cargo amazed even the skilled and experienced stevedores.

Commenting upon the "black and white nights" which nearly led to the resignation of all the colored Red Cross workers in England, he said that a command order had been issued to prevent the concentration of unusually large numbers of soldiers in any given village or city at one time.

"By the time that the order had filtered down to Bristol it read that no colored soldiers should come to Bristol on leave on certain nights."

Dailies Omit Negro Gun Crew News On Feat

Informer — Houston, Texas

NEW YORK.—Most daily newspapers and the big press associations failed to identify a Negro gun crew on the destroyer Lansdale whose sinking on April 20 was announced by the Navy department May 10.

Among New York papers, the Daily News was the only one to mention the Negro gun crew. It used the following language:

"Although the ship was torn almost in half, her gunners fought on and shot down at least two of the attackers (German planes). One gun, manned by Negro mess attendants, kept firing after the deck was awash and brought down one plane."

7-12-44

The United Press account, carried in the World Telegram, used the following language: "Though the ship had been torn almost in half, the Lansdale gunners fought on, downing at least two of the attacking planes. One of the planes was shot down even while the deck was awash."

The Associated Press account mentioned far down in the story the fact that colored mess attendants manned one of the guns.

Obey Jim Crow or Else, U.S. Tells Service Men

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.

5-20-44

NEW YORK—Precise and "official" information as to what a colored man in uniform may expect by way of personal humiliation if assigned to a training camp in the South was revealed last week by the Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Forces.

The committee, organized on a nation-wide scale, with offices at 360 W. 125th Street, to fight jim crow in uniform, began national distribution this week of a sheet of instructions titled "Laws Concerning Segregation of the Races."

The sheet, an exact reproduction by photo-offset of the original mimeographed paper, is, according to the committee, the key part of a "so-called indoctrination course" given every colored trainee upon arrival at the Naval Air Technical Training Center in Memphis, Tenn.

5-20-44

Called Typical Example

"The paper is all the more damning," the committee adds, "in that it is not an isolated instance of official backing up of jim crow by Federal authorities, but rather is typical of the kind of 'indoctrination' colored troops are subjected to throughout camps in the South."

While the committee points out that "it comes as no surprise that the army and navy carefully practice segregation," it adds, "it comes with something of a shock to see the details actually on paper and to read the cold, contemptuous language in which it is written."

The offending "order" picks up all of Dixie's jim-crow laws, rules and regulations providing for separation of the races in public transportation, hotels, restaurants and places of amusement, and places behind them the official sanction of the Federal Government.

The so-called "indoctrination" paper in full follows:

Laws Concerning Separation of Races

1. The laws of the State of Tennessee require the separation of races on all public transportation systems in this State.
2. Members of the colored race upon entering a street car or bus shall occupy those seats which are located at the rear portion of street car or bus and whenever seats in the bus or street car become vacant which are to the rear of any member of the colored race, such person shall vacate the seat which he then occupies and move back and occupy the rear seat which is then vacant.
3. The conductor or other person in charge of the street car or bus shall have the right to increase or decrease the space so set apart for either race, or he may require any passenger to change his seat when or so often as the change in passengers may make such change necessary.

4. All passengers on street cars or buses are required to take the seats assigned to them, and any person refusing to do so, shall leave the street car or bus, or if they remain in the street car or bus after having been asked and refuses to take the seat assigned to them shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not more than twenty-five dollars ($25).
5. The laws of the State of Tennessee also give to the owners and their employees of hotels, inns, theatres, public houses, moving picture shows, restaurants, places of amusement, or other business the right to determine for themselves the kind of patronage, customers, or guests they desire to have, and to exclude from their premises or business any person or persons for any reason they think necessary.

Tan Yanks Tell How Embarrassing It Is to Have to Serve in Non-Combat Units Only

BALTIMORE—Resentment over being compelled to serve primarily in non-combat units is found among many colored soldiers on Saipan Island, according to a Baltimore soldier in an engineer battalion there.

Private Lonesome praised the morale division for its work on the island. He said that movies are shown nightly and transcriptions of popular radio programs in the States and leading dance bands are broadcast.

He described the Koreans, many of whom were captured and later released and given unskilled jobs, as the hardest workers he has ever seen.

Says Race Unit's I. Q. Was Highest

Informer — Houston, Texas
Mar 18, 1944

CHICAGO — (ANP) — Revelation that the 184th Field Artillery regiment formerly the old Illinois Eighth regiment, had the highest I. Q. rating of any army units known to the officers of the Fifth Infantry division came this week from Maj. Ovid E. Harris, former battalion commander, in a letter repudiating Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson's charge that "many Negro units have been unable to master efficiently the techniques of modern weapons," of which the 184th was one of the units mentioned in the charge.

Major Harris, now on the inactive list, sent his letter to the President and Sec. Stimson.

"It is both amazing and shocking to find your signature placed over so gross a misstatement of fact." Major Harris said to Stimson.

Served 3 Years

As a battalion commander of the 184th Field Artillery regiment for three years, Major Harris said that every test given in handling weapons was passed with credit by his men. The test teams of the Fifth Infantry division gave a "superior," "excellent" and "very satisfactory" ratings following a combat test. All of this went to naught, however, to Gen. Courtland Parker.

"Despite all that has been said to the contrary, your regiment is not ready for combat," Gen. Parker declared. "You can march, you can implace your weapons, and you have demonstrated your ability to fire; but until your housekeeping improves I'll never certify you for combat. Why, just this morning I made an inspection of your barracks and found a pair of unlaced shoes under one of the beds. That is poor leadership." 3-18-44

"More than 300 of the enlisted men were college trained, but as replacements came the I. Q. rating was lowered," the Major revealed. "Of the first group received, 40 could not read nor write. Then we were called upon to furnish a cadre of 300 men for a quartermaster unit. Instead of allowing us to keep our best material for the artillery requirements, the selection was made from personnel cards and our men with the highest I. Q. were transferred."

"Our communications were rated superior," Major Harris pointed out. "We were credited with peculiar adaptability for motor marches and our fire direction centers became quiz centers for all visiting artillery personnel. In the fall of 1941 the 1st battalion went to Camp McCoy, under my command, for firing tests. Its scores for the G. H. Q. tests 1 and 11, have not been equaled. Col. Lewing of the second army conducted the test. Four official commendations resulted. Then came the usual reward— 350 men were transferred as cadre. Replacements were received. Our task started over again." 3-18-44

Broken Up

The 184th was gradually broken up and reorganized into the 930th and 931st field artillery battalions which the war secretary disclosed will be converted into combat engineer units. "Certain other existing Negro field artillery units are being converted to heavier artillery, but the 930th and 931st 155-mm. howitzer battalions have not been selected for conversion to heavier artillery or retention as field artillery owing to the unsatisfactory records of both units," Stimson wrote Rep. Fish.

In his letter Major Harris hit the mistreatment of Negro soldiers in the South. Colored officers were ousted from post theatres and denied the facilities of libraries, he said. Men and officers were openly insulted by post commanders and their complaints were turned back upon them as reprimands, he declared.

"In the interest of morale and the war effort," the major continued, "I suggest that the individual records of these units be examined prior to public condemnation. The pride and hope of these soldiers is to accomplish their assigned mission. Their desire is to perform as their predecessors did under the regimental flags of the Old Eighth in Cuba, on the Mexican border and so gloriously in France —one country, one flag."

"No soldier can say that those men lacked discipline," he stressed. "Nor can it be said truthfully, despite the handicaps encountered, that they are unable to 'master efficiently the technique of modern weapons. Fort Sill does not say it. Nor can it be said that these officers, in regimental ratings certify them for combat and at the same time indicate that they are unable."

Race Segregation In Armed Services Too Hot to Handle

Globe + Independent — Nashville, Tenn

Winfred Lynn Case Is Disposed of by Use of Word "Moot"; Effort Will be Made to Get Justices to Make Up Their Minds at Next Session

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 1—Last Monday the U. S. Supreme Court refused to review the Winfred Lynn case, involving racial discrimination in selection for the American Army. The Court's refusal even to hear the case was unexpected since one of the three judges in the lower court had ruled in Lynn's favor. The Supreme Court evidently regarded the Lynn Case as "too hot to handle."

Today, the Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Forces revealed the U. S. Supreme Court's reason for refusing to review the case. The clerk of the Court informed Arthur Garfield Hays, Lynn's attorney, by telephone: "The petition for a writ of certiorari is denied on the ground that the case is moot, it appearing that petitioner is no longer in respondent's custody." 6-16-44

In less technical language, the Court holds that the Lynn Case is "moot"—that is, it cannot be decided one way or the other—because the "petitioner (Winfred Lynn) is no longer in the "custody" of the "respondent" (Colonel Downer, commandant at Camp Upton, N. Y., at the time Lynn originally brought his suit). This amazing pronouncement of the Supreme Court, which bids fair to make legal history, ignores the reason Lynn is no longer in Colonel Downer's custody, which is, of course, that he is a soldier in the Army and was ordered overseas to the Pacific area several months ago. The Government's right hand, the Supreme Court, apparently takes no responsibility for what the Government's left hand, the Army, is doing.

Thus was born the Supreme Court's great Moot Suit. This issue, of course, has been pulled out of a hat at the last moment. The question of "mootness" was not even raised in the lower courts. The entire purpose of the Court's maneuver is therefore to avoid the issues: Does the Court sanction discrimination and segregation in selecting our thirteen million Negro citizens for the armed forces or are the military authorities acting illegally?

6-16-44

At the time that Winfred Lynn was ordered overseas, Mr. Hayes protested to the Adjutant General and received the following reply dated the 9th of February 1944 from Major General J. A. Ulio: "Should the unit to which he (Winfred Lynn) is assigned be ordered to proceed outside of continental United States and he is qualified for the duties to which assigned, he will not be removed from his unit."

The attorneys for Winfred Lynn will file a petition for a rehearing immediately and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Workers Defense League and the March on Washington Movement will file supplementary amicus curiae briefs. 6-16-44

Wilfred H. Kerr, co-chairman of the Lynn Committee, issued a statement today: "Our Committee will carry on the fight. The Supreme Court is adjourning shortly and the case will not be finally decided until the fall. In the meantime we must fight for the right to have the highest court in the land review this crucial case. The Negro and the progressive people of this country want to know why segregation is not discrimination and what is the meaning, if any, of the clause against discrimination in the 1940 Draft Act."

Patterson Replies To Protest Of Ala. Governor

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—(S N S)—The War Department, says Acting Secretary Robert P. Patterson in a letter to Governor Chauncey Sparks, has insisted during the current war that "all soldiers, regardless of race, be afforded equal opportunity to enjoy the recreational facilities which are provided at Army posts, camps and stations.

Patterson added that the War Department is "not an appropriate medium for effecting social readjustments."

The acting secretary's communication was a reply to a telegram Sparks dispatched to President Roosevelt last month in protest of a War Department memorandum banning the segregation of races at Army installations. Sparks said the instrument "violates a statewide practice and belief and aggravates rather than helps" race relations.

Patterson declared Spark's telegram had been referred to him for reply. "The thought has been," he said in his letter, "that men who are fulfilling the same obligations, suffering the same dislocation of their private lives, and wearing the identical uniform should, within the confines of the military establishment, have the same privileges for rest and relaxation."

Sparks said the letter did not constitute an answer to his telegram to the President.

"I agree,' said the governor, "that Negroes should be given equal facilities as white soldier. same facilities as white soldiers. There should be segregation. understand the War Department order also applies to civilian personnel of Army posts."

No Color Line In This Army Hospital

Journal + Guide
Norfolk, Va

By CONRAD CLARK

SOMEWHERE IN NEW GUINEA, (ANP) — Discrimination has received a terrible kick in the pants over here in New Guinea, as far as hospitalization for the Negro soldiers is concerned. 8-26-44

This afternoon I went to one of the station hospitals to visit two fellow New Yorkers, who are members of an all-Negro Anti-aircraft Artillery battalion over here.

The two soldiers were, T/4 Norwood Seigel and T/5 Eddie Conover, both residents of Harlem. According to the medical records Seigel had a slight attack of bronchial pneumonia and Conover was suffering from a mild attack of backache.

FOUR NEGRO PATIENTS

While in the ward visiting T/5 Conover, a nurse came in to treat the patients in her section. There were less than four Negroes in the ward, as compared to a dozen white GIs.

The nurse went down the line, treating each patient the same as the other, and when this correspondent asked how was the general attitude of the white medical personnel toward their Negro patients, she replied, "the duty of a nurse is to administer to the sick, and the hospital knows no patient by color, simply that he is an American soldier, fighting for his country, and who needs medical attention." 8-26-44

Army regulations prohibit the using of an individual name, but during the course of many visits to the different hospital, the writer has found the same spirit of democracy, all times.

Rep. Boykin Assails No Segregation Rule

Washington Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Bitterly attacking a recent War Department order banning segregation of whites and Negroes in Southern Army camps Rep. Frank W. Boykin, of Mobile, Monday wired Gov. Chauncey Sparks that "the whole Southern philosophy of segregation and white supremacy is at stake."

He asked the governor to wire all Southern and Western governors and "any others that agree with us" in protests. 8-28-44

Declaring that "we had just as well bring this to a head right now," Boykin called for a delegation of governors, senators and congressmen to call upon President Roosevelt in protest.

"If we don't, our way of life in the South is ruined," he stated. "I believe that the time has come when we will have to do something about the Negro problem and in many cases it is not the fault of the Negroes. The next thing they will want the Negroes in the white schools and colleges in the South, the law and medical schools.

"I believe also we should take this up with the leaders of Tuskegee and our other Negro leaders in the South and see how they feel about this."

He declared: "It is mighty hard to buck over a million bureaucrats but we have been doing it and will work harder." 8-28-44

He said he was leaving for Alabama Monday night to meet his son Seaman 1-C Richard A. Boykin USCG, who has been overseas two years and that he would be at the governor's service.

Starnes said "the people of the South and of the country know this order had its inception in the political program of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Congress of Industrial Organization, the Communist Party and other left-wing and radical groups."

Breaking Up Of Negro Combat Units Is Hit As Demoralizing

Fish Calls Upon War Department To Explain Plan For Race Soldiers

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(ANP)— Declaring that " the training of Negro personnel as combat units for months" and then breaking up these units and transferring the personnel to service units "is demoralizing to Negro soldiers" and " a waste of taxpayers' money," Rep. Hamilton Fish, New York Republiran, called upon the war department to state clearly whether "there is a deliberate plan to keep Negro soldiers out of actual combat."

In his latest blast against the war department, the veteran congressman, also a veteran of World War I having served as a captain with the old 15th. Fish wrote to Sec. Henry L. Stimson on Feb. 1 and invited him also to explain whether the non-discrimination clause introduced by him has been faithfully adhered to in the matter of training and utilization of Negro inductees.

PROMISES REPORT

John W. Martin, administrative assistant to the war secretary, promised that a comprehensive report would be made to the congressman in due course.

Citing several reported instances to bear out his inquiry, Fish sought the truth about reports that "several Negro tank destroyer units, which underwent training for several months at Camp Hood, Texas, have been broken up and the enlisted personnel transferred to quartermaster truck companies." He wandered in the same way about the disposition of the 931st Field artillery at Camp Forrest, Tenn., reported reorganized into quartermaster corps. 2-16-44

"I am aware of the fact that military necessity must control the assignment of personnel in the army," Fish wrote Stimson, "but if the planning of the general staff were adequate such actions would not be necessary. In the circumstances, however, I am still wondering wether there is not a deliberate plan to keep Negro soldiers out of actual combat.

99TH IS NAMED

"As far as I am informed, the only Negro units which have actually engaged in cimbat in this war are the 99th Pursuit squadron and a few anti-aircraft units. The record of Negro troops in all of the wars in which this country has engaged (and in which they have participated as fighting soldiers, does not justify their being relegated now to the ranks of labor battalions only." 2-16-44

Regarding the application of the Selective Service act, Fish said thot if Negro soldiers are being trained as combat troops but denied as such, such discrimination would appear to be a violation of the non-discrimination amendment.

Dixie Train Pulls Out Without Race Soldiers

Daily World-Atlanta, Ga. 5-12-44

BIRMINGHAM.—(ANP)— Is this what we're fighting for? a group of soldiers asked Saturday as they watched Southern railroad's No. 8 pull out of the Birmingham terminal station, after denying them accommodations to various camps east.

Almost 50 soldiers, enroute to camps in Florida, North Carolina and Georgia, were aboard the Frisco's Kansas City-Florida Special No. 105, and all held tickets which entitled them to board Southern's No. 8 which makes connection with 105 for points east. Though many of the soldiers had barely enough time to make it back to the various camps, the conductor, station master and MP's gave them no consideration whatever. 5-12-44

Significant is the fact that every white person aboad the Frisco soldier and civilian, was accommodated. The usual jim crow car was filled with whites as the Negro soldiers watched helplessly.

Files Discrimination Charges With FEPC Against Air Forces

Received Salary As Instructor But Was Given No Class: Fired

NEW YORK — (ANP —"I was obliged to just sit for eight hours a day for a period of approximately 120 days, dangling aimless around," declared Henry N. Conyers, instructor of army personnel, who has filed charges of discrimination against the air force with the FEPC, following his dismissal because of allege inefficiency.

A graduate civilian instructor of the army air force technical school for instructors, Chanute Field, Ill., Conyers said he was prepared to teach enlisted army personnel "the theory of electricity as applied to aircraft power systems," but charges that because he is a Negro, he was shifted from Chanute field to Miss., then Lincoln, Neb., and finally on June 1, 1943 to Sacramento Air depot Calif.

NOT ASSIGNED

"Not for one minute during my first four months was I officially asigned to a class although I received my salary regularly," declared the instructor.

Conyers attended the New York Institute of Commerce and Accountancy for three years before entering civil service in 1944 with the New York port of embarkation. His complaint to the FEPC, which has been forwarded to the agency's San Francisco office for action, states the following charges:

"I was obliged to just sit for eight hours a day for a period of approximately 120 days, dangling aimlessly around. 3-10-44

"On one occasion, our department had a class and no instructor for the class, but rather than untilize my service, the class was held up while the chief instructor drafted an instructor from another department to come to our department to instruct the class. 3-10-44

CALLED 'UNFAVORABLE'

"After three months, my chief instructor turned in 'unfavorable employes' rating' on me, although never once was I assigned to the duties commensurate with my classification.

"The supervisor subsequently removed me from the electrical department for which I am trained, to another department for which I had no instructor training, and replaced me with a mechanic.

"Because I refused to take an examination to remain a qualified instructor, which is not the procedure of any army school, I was dismissed.

"I also refused to take this test because the board of about eight chief instructor chosen to give me this test consisted of two of my accusers." 3-10-44

Conyers, who says that all he wants is to be cleared of the accusation of his being fired because of inefficiency, restoration of his classification and his civil service status, further stated:

"Everywhere I go I have to produce my papers. They show I was dismissed for inefficiency and I can't get a job.

Negro Soldiers May Get Better Break From Army

PM-New York, N.Y.
3-13-44

By EARL CONRAD

PM

Rep. William L. Dawson (D., Ill.) said today, in a telephone interview, that a controversy now raging in the Negro press is "smoking out the whole anti-Negro atmosphere in the War Dept. and predicted that, as a result, decisive changes in the segregation policy would come about.

The issue stems from a decision, confirmed by Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, to convert some Negro combat troops into labor battalions. He reported that two Field Artillery Battalions, the 930th and the 931st, have been transformed into a force of "combat engineers." These troops, though labor units, are also prepared to fight if necessary.

Stimson has been under fire for a statement published in the Congressional Record Feb. 23d, which according to the virtually unanimous opinion of the Negro press, falsely impugns the Negro's efficiency.

Stimson, explaining what Rep. Dawson calls a "no combat" policy, in answer to an inquiry from Rep. Ham Fish (R., N. Y.), made this statement:

"It so happens that a relatively large percentage of the Negroes inducted into the Army have fallen within the lower educational classifications, and many of the Negro units accordingly have been unable to master efficiently the technique of modern warfare."

Later, when Stimson was asked, "Is it the position of the War Dept. that colored American troops, on the whole, cannot be made into combat units because of their allegedly low educational classifications," he replied that it was not. He added: 3-13-44

"The number of troops now in combat and being prepared for actual combat is a clear indication of our policy."

Dawson, the only Negro in Congress, said that the issue had grown beyond the merits or demerits of Stimson's statement.

"The repercussions of the incident have served to bring into the open the whole vital issue of the War Dept.'s segregation policy," he said. "I can say that the question of the Negro's second-class position in the armed services has reached a stage where it can and will result in decisive changes."

He said he was in close touch with the War Dept. and that the whole question of the segregation policy was under discussion.

Dawson blames the "confederate" elements in the War Dept. with responsibility for creating and perpetuating the Jim Crow system in military affairs, and said the whole Department was "honey-combed with professisonal Southern military career men." President Roosevelt inherited that situation, Dawson explained, he did not create it.

Dawson, himself a veteran of World War I, said that Southern officers and their "confederates" in the War Dept. were especially fearful of the development of any very large group of Negro officers.

The influential Baltimore Afro-American, widely read along the East Coast, said editorially:

"Our own views are that the Secretary of War's statement on educational qualifications of colored troops is a stupid half-truth, an indefensible excuse for not doing his duty."

The Harlem newspapers, the Amsterdam News and the People's Voice, said the controversy revealed the real reason why Negro combat battalions have not been sent into service in war theaters. They pointed out that the only Negro combat units which have seen action are the 99th Pursuit Squadron and the 450th Anti-Aircraft Battalion.

States' Rights Record - Include Justice For Negro GIs

Philadelphia, Pa.
5-21-44

One point stands out above all others in the recent report by Orrin C. Evans in The Record on the treatment of Northern Negro soldiers in Southern camps:

Application of good will and common sense can and does provide easy solution to what at first may appear a difficult race problem.

In touring 14 camps in seven Southern States, Evans found that, while discontent among Northern Negroes was exaggerated, one abuse particularly promoted bitterness.

That is the failure of local transportation firms to serve the needs of the Negro soldiers. Purely on the basis of race discrimination.

UNWANTED

Unwanted as bus passengers, badgered and bullied by club-toting drivers, they are compelled to hike miles from camp to neighboring towns—and then back.

Either that or, as increasing numbers of Negro soldiers are doing, they remain in camp denying themselves a holiday in order to escape degrading slights and trouble.

They have before them the shocking, inexcusable violence visited upon one of their comrades, Private Edward Green. 5-21-44

Green was shot and killed by a vicious, quick-triggered bus driver in Alexandria, La.

Unfortunately, as the Attorney General of the United States discovered after an inquiry, there is no Federal statute under which the driver can be prosecuted.

Since Louisiana, where intolerance and prejudice corrupt the law, has taken no action, the driver is a free man — free to shoot down other American soldiers.

There was impassioned Southern oratory in support of States' rights when the soldier vote and poll tax bills were debated in Congress. Here is a State right and a State duty for Louisiana—

Prompt arrest and trial for a man charged with a brutal slaying.

PROBLEMS EXIST

Such problems as transportation failure at camps exist—only because somebody lacks will or imagination to solve them. 5-21-44

Brigadier General George Horkan provided an answer pronto at Camp Lee near Petersburg, Va.

He entered into an agreement with the local bus company to furnish busses exclusively for soldiers, white and Negroes alike, to travel from camp to Petersburg.

The War Department — now apprised of the transportation problem if hitherto uninformed—should assure adequate service at all camps.

The Army Acts

A week after Evans' articles appeared, four days after this editorial, the War Department ordered non-Jim Crow bus service provided at all camps.

How Brooklyn Navy Yard Retards Colored Workers

Puts Most Women on Night Shift and Bars All from Promotions, Workers Tell AFRO

By JONATHAN RICHARDS

BROOKLYN, N.Y. — Racial discrimination in war industries is no longer a matter of speculation but a fact. A recent survey by the War Manpower Commission disclosed that "only very small advances have been made in the placement of colored people in skilled and semi-skilled occupations."

This report has been given very little publicity and the Office of War Information has made efforts to soft-pedal it.

For some time the Brooklyn Navy Yard has been accused of discrimination by labor unions, the National Urban League, and also by various individuals who have made unsuccessful attempts to fight this government agency.

Few Hired Before War

Prior to the war, very few colored workers were hired by the Navy Yard Labor Board, located at the Sands Street Gate in Brooklyn.

In normal times probably no more than 5,000 people constitute the entire working force. Now this figure has swelled to 60,000 or more workers.

Naturally, with the manpower shortage situation reaching a critical stage, more and more colored men and women have filled the employees' ranks with the result that they number several thousand at this time.

The discrimination brought to light has nothing to do with the navy yard's hiring policy, since most people now applying for jobs get them provided they have the necessary experience and can pass the physical examination. It begins after you're hired.

Rating Based on Colored

It many cases your color will determine the rating and salary you will receive and also the particular type of work to which you are assigned and also the shift you work—day or night.

I spoke to a young man who told me that he filed an application for the position of helper trainee machinist which begins at $6.16 per day. For this job one needs only to have six months of experience in the machine trades. No examination is given to quality except, of course, the regular physical examination.

"One day," he related, "I received a letter telling me to report to the labor board for the job. I went down and found that I and six white men, were applying for the same job and pay.

Special Test Given

"We had been waiting there a few minutes when a man came over and told me to follow him. We went to a machine shop where he told me to take off my coat and see what I could do with a machine. 1-15-44

"I applied myself to an engine lathe and faced and turned a piece of steel down to several thousandths of an inch according to specifications. Evidently this satisfied the man as he told me to return to the labor board office and wait my turn for medical examination.

"I got back to find the same six men still sitting around. They said that they hadn't been called for a machine test. After I was put on the job, I talked to many other whites and they also said they never had to take the test I did.

"There was absolutely no reason why I had to do it. Pick up the application form and it says specifically that no test is required for this position."

I checked the application form and found what this man said was true.

Say Ability Is Overlooked

I talked to several other men who told me that they were first class mechanics and should be receiving a mechanic's pay. Instead, they were doing a high type of work, running lathes, automatic screw machines, radial drill presses, and were getting only a helper machinist's salary.

In short, the navy yard disregarded their experience and accorded them the lowest ratings despite the importance of their work.

Girls Get Night Work

A girl told me:

"For very obvious reasons, you'll find that most of the women working on the night shift are colored. They make sure to put as many whites on the day shift as possible. If this isn't outright discrimination, then what is?

"We can't complain to the supervisors about this because their comeback is that there's a war on and we all have to do our share. You can't fight that kind of talk and you won't be able to reason with them. They're always right and you're always wrong. That's the policy here!"

A woman working in a department which uses precision instruments and testing devices complained: 1-15-44

"I've been working here for

In none of the tight labor markets of the North does there appear a significant use of skilled colored people-colored workers in war industry but that there is no question but little or no use their good money. There has been an increase as a whole."

Jim Crowism Abroad Is Laid to Red Cross

PM - New York, N.Y.

2-14-44

Former Aid Charges Discrimination in North Africa and Middle East

By WILLIAM FISHER

PM Exclusive

John H. Faulk, a former American Red Cross assistant field director stationed at a camp in Cairo, charged today that the Red Cross had allowed itself to become associated with Jim Crowism in the minds of Negro soldiers serving throughout North Africa and the Middle East.

Faulk, who recently resigned because he felt his post was "useless," said that after talking with hundreds of Negro service men he had become convinced there existed "an universal distrust in their minds" for the organization supposed to be their "big brother" because it:

¶ Refuses to permit them to attend dances.

¶ Admits them to clubs at furlough centers with a condescending "do come in, you're colored," which, he said, was as effective in keeping Negro soldiers away as barring them outright.

He called the Red Cross policy on discrimination "buck passing." The Red Cross, he said, constantly shunts the blame for Jim Crowism overseas onto the Army.

Prejudiced Superiors

Faulk, who collected Negro folk lore in rural Texas and Louisiana on a Rosenwald Fellowship before the war, said:

"While the Red Cross made every effort to disclaim official responsibility for its inability to wipe out discrimination, I found to my surprise many of my superiors had decidedly prejudiced views toward the Negro soldier. 2-14-44

"There are many Red Cross men overseas who do not approve these practices. But they are seemingly in the minority. Consequently, it was my impression that the Red Cross is trying to make the best of an unhappy situation without taking a definite stand against discrimination."

Faulk, who was interviewed here while on his way from Cairo to Texas, said he was constantly reminded by his superiors that he had been sent overseas by "American money to maintain the status quo. This was most apparent in the instance of Negro service men," he said.

Tried to Enlist

He reported one of his superiors as saying to him: "You don't understand the nigger problem, although you're a Southerner. You have to make them sweat." The superior, Faulk said, had been a Brooklyn policeman.

A former English instructor at the University of Texas, Faulk was rejected as an enlistee in the armed forces because of an eye defect. He joined the Merchant Marine, serving on a tanker for eight months. He went overseas for the Red Cross last February.

"The job appealed to me," he said, "with one eye it seemed to be my only chance to get overseas with the troops.

"When I arrived overseas I asked to be stationed with Negro troops because through my work I had become deeply interested in Negro problems.

John H. Faulk

"The authorities ostensibly approved and said they thought my request commendable, but did absolutely nothing about placing me where I wanted to be."

Instead, Faulk was stationed with white troops to keep them informed on home-front happenings and to encourage the soldiers' families to write. It was a window-dressing job, he says, which was in constant conflict with the overseas Army Special Services Division. 2-14-44

Unpopularity

Faulk said he found the soldiers enthusiastic over Red Cross work in the hospitals and in the clubs at furlough centers, but that they were extremely indifferent to the type of activity for which he was responsible.

"Many of my co-workers—morale builders—had so little to occupy themselves with, they were constantly off on sight-seeing trips," he said. "Because of this, coupled with the fact they enjoyed all the privileges but none of the responsibilities of Army officers, it is my impression we were unpopular with the soldiers.

"No one in this country knows what American boys overseas are going through, soldiers of all ancestry—Negro, Jew and Gentile. And it would be doubly hard for anyone to understand what Negro troops have to put up with."

In Washington, Harold G. Anthony, Red Cross Publicity Director, said that Faulk had arrived in North Africa about the time Red Cross activity was being dismantled along with the closing down of the military theater there.

"As to his second charge," he said, "our clubs are open to white and Negro alike. That's definitely Red Cross policy. 2-14-44

"If it is disagreeable to the white soldiers when Negroes enter the clubs that is not our fault. If things are as bad as Faulk says they are the Red Cross is not responsible for the situation."

Conditions in Southern Camp Shocks Delegation

Daily Worker - New York, N.Y.

2-15-44

(Special to the Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14. — The Associated Negro Press announces that the War Department late last week was handed the most comprehensive and best documented report ever made on the treatment of Negro soldiers in the South. Prepared by the Rev. J. L. Horace president of the Illinois Baptist Convention, for the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches, the report names specific instances of mistreatment and charges that in one camp Nazi prisoners had more rights than the Negro soldiers.

The report was made first to the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches in St. Louis on Jan. 18, following Mr. Horace's tour of 10 Southern camps.

The Negro ministers, shocked at the revelations, requested that the report be made to the Secretary of War. Last week, accompanied to the War Department by Truman K. Gibson, civilian aide to the Secretary of War, and the Rev. Dr. William H. Jernagin, Mr. Horace laid his documented charges before Assistant Secretary of War John J. McCloy. 2-15-44

Mr. McCloy, according to the ANP, was deeply impressed. He commented that many complaints on the treatment of Negro soldiers had come to his desk but that this report was the most comprehensive. Mr. Horace was himself an officer in the first world war.

SOME MAIN FACTS

The following are highlights of the findings:

1. The civilian community near which Negro soldiers are stationed in the South, and not the War Department, determines the way these men shall be treated.

2. Clinics, in general, mark Negro soldiers fit for duty, regardless of what the men say of their own condition. It is, therefore, difficult for Negro soldiers to get hospital treatment.

3. Policemen are cruel and revengeful, and seem to express the pent-up hatred of the community. They take jurisdiction and arrest soldiers for the slightest disorder and the government does not seem to interfere.

4. Civilians treat the colored soldiers as undesirables. . . . Many soldiers refuse to take leaves for fear of trouble in town.

5. Many Negro residents of such communities assume a similar attitude, fearing that to treat the Negro soldiers differently will bring unpleasant reaction from white people.

6. This complete atmosphere of hostility embitters the Negro soldier.

7. At Grenada, Miss., "German war prisoners receive more courtesy than American Negro soldiers. Our men have to use certain latrines and drinking fountains, while German prisoners use them anywhere."

8. At Camp Flora, Jackson, Miss., Negroes are not allowed to send their clothes to the camp cleaners. They must send them to town, where they frequently get lost. 2-15-44

9. A Negro battalion at Camp Livingston, Alexandria, La., was trained as artillerymen for two years, then made into a labor outfit.

The camps visited by the Rev. Mr. Horace were Robinson, Little Rock Ark.; Livingston and Clairborne, Alexandria, La.; Flora and Jackson Air Base, Miss.; Shelby, Hattiesburg, Miss.; Sibert, Gadsen, Ala.; Fort McClelland, Anniston, Ala.; Fort Benning, Columbus Ga.

The Negro minister, commenting on his report, said that the South "is still fighting the Civil War and is trying to win this one so it can dictate the racial policy and peace terms." He concludes:

"We must refute and expose the propaganda that is leveled against us—concealing our part in the war; keeping us out of important parts of the war and vital industry; magnifying our death rate and venereal diseases, much of distortion coming from biased white health officers. Our low income, bad housing and slum dwellings are the fault of the social pattern and should be the basis of condemning the social order instead of piling up biased figures to fix Negroes to a lower status."

Army Commander Condemns Bias

Army Asked to Investigate Westover Field Jim Crowism

PM - New York, N.Y.
2-13-44

Staff Correspondence

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Feb. 12.—Springfield citizens, continuing their fight against Jim Crow rules at nearby Westover Field, today carried their case to Maj. Gen. J. A. Ulio, adjutant general in Washington, demanding that he launch an immediate investigation at the base.

Protests against segregation and mistreatment of Negro personnel at the field also were sent to Sen. David I. Walsh (D., Mass.) and Rep. Charles R. Clason (R., Mass.). Clason announced that he already had asked the War Dept. for an investigation of earlier protests by Springfield citizens.

The protests, outlining in detail the alleged mistreatment of Negro soldiers at the base, were signed by Mrs. Katheryne Jones, chairman of the Springfield Committee to Abolish the Poll Tax; John Haraty, chairman of the Fair Employment Practice Committee of the Western Massachusetts CIO Council, and Russell Hatton, past commander of the Harrison Wright chapter of the American Legion, local Negro chapter.

Together with Mayor J. Albin Anderson, and two Negro ministers, they formed a delegation Thursday which called on Col. U. G. Jones, commanding officer at the field, demanding an immediate end to segregation policies.

The group charged that Negro soldiers were segregated in the post movie theater and at chapel services, that the sick were denied medical treatment and instead were put to work, and that most of the 500-odd Negroes at the base were assigned to menial tasks, in spite of having received specialized training by the Army. 2-13-44

Meanwhile, the protests appeared to be bearing fruit in a relaxation of some of the Jim Crow restrictions. Negro soldiers at the post reported that an order banning issuance of passes to colored personnel was revoked an hour after the visit by the Springfield delegation Thursday. It was also reported that Negroes assigned to making beds for white enlisted men, in violation of Army regulations, had been relieved of that assignment.

It also was reported that Negroes heretofore denied medical treatment on the grounds that there were no available beds in the field's hospital were now being called to the hospital.

From a Negro Soldier

To The News and Courier:

As we negro American soldiers march forward into battle, we are mindful of our past, and are wondering what has the future in store for us. We have had, since being in the army, some very unpleasant experiences. We fear if these things are allowed to happen at a time like this they will become worse in the future.

We feel sure that there are only a few of each race who will deliberately instigate trouble between races after such tough war, but the few who will do so are the ones with whom we are concerned. These few can easily spread propaganda which will lead to trouble. We, the negroes, are determined to deal with all problems which may arise intelligently.

We are ardent readers of your newspaper, and especially your editorials. Being your editorials do not seem to have the same conception of the word democracy, where the negro is concerned, as our conception; being we are now in a country where it is likely for your editorials to get into the wrong hands, we destroy them after reading them. We do not know very much about the fine points on censorship, so we are somewhat in doubt whether or not your editorials represent excellent propaganda for the Japs and Germans to use advantageously.

Yes, as we march on the field of battle we ask that you look toward the light and finally see that all men are created equal. We ask that you help to make the peace that we are now fighting for an enjoyable peace.

Equality Topic Stirs Peterson

Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—(AP) Officials of the War Shipping Administration and Representative Hugh Peterson, Democrat, Georgia, are engaged in a sharp battle over the social equality question.

Peterson says WSA leaders "are lacking in courage and are being unfair to the government and to laborers" unless they oust administrators who enforce social equality rulings. 3-20-44

Agency officials maintain "it is all right" for key WSA men to believe in social equality, but have agreed to investigate some of them to see if they are connected with subversive organizations.

The tussle got under way during a hearing of the special house committee investigating executive agencies, as Peterson renewed his campaign against Craig Vincent, WSA regional director in charge of providing crews for ships sailing from Savannah, Jacksonville and other Atlantic ports.

OPPOSES MIXED CREWS

The Georgian said Vincent and other WSA officials "are forcing white seamen to accept social equality by providing mixed crews."

Then addressing Samuel D. Schell, WSA executive officer who is Vincent's superior, Peterson declared:

"It is not fair to laborers of this country for you men in high executive positions to place in key official positions men who believe and openly announce and confess that they believe in social equality and who can force the laborers to live in a condition of social equality. 3-20-44

"You fellows ought to have courage enough, as American citizens, to do your duty, to see that the rights of our people and our laborers, are protected.

"It is not conducive to good government for you men in key positions to take the stand you are taking today."

After hearing Peterson's remarks, Schell promised a full investigation of Vincent, but added that he would recommend his dismissal only if evidence proved that he was associated with subversive organizations. 3-20-44

Schell said that he thought it was all right to have key WSA officials who believed in social equality, although he did not hold such beliefs himself.

RAPS NEW DEAL POLICY TOWARD NEGRO SOLDIERS

Daily Tribune
Chicago, Ill.
2-12-44

Ex-Senator Declares Rights Are Denied.

Negroes from 36 states, attending a national Republican conference in the Pershing hotel, 6400 Cottage Grove av., yesterday heard William E. King of Chicago, former state senator, urge that some action be take nin behalf of the Negro fighting man.

"Under the New Deal," said King, "the Negroes have been denied the right to fight and die for the country they love. I hope this meeting will work out some plan to right this wrong.

"The mask of deception was pulled from the face of the New Deal in the repudiation of the fair employment practice committee. There is but one party in America that holds out any hope to the Negro—the Republican."

Storm Delays Delegates.

The conferees, who are to consider recommendations to the Republican national convention which will be held here June 26, gathered slowly because of travel tie-ups resulting from the snow storm. Representatives from six more states are expected before the meeting closes tonight. 2-12-44

Edwin Henry, judge of the Municipal court in Philadelphia, was named temporary chairman of the meeting. Other officers chosen are: Charles W. Anderson, member of the Kentucky state legislature, vice chairman; Mrs. Fennie Shenks of Minneapolis, second vice chairman; Atty. Eunice H. Carter of New York City, recording secretary; Charles Mahoney of Detroit, treasurer.

Consider Permanent Group.

Move to make permanent the organization opened a lively floor discussion. A committee on permanent organization was chosen and charged with making a report before the meeting ends.

Republican planks concerning Negro participation in the post-war program were scheduled for meeting debate. The Republican position on the rights of minorities and the possibility of Negro representation at the peace table were expected to draw attention.

Questions And Reasons

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal.

The last few weeks Italian prisoners of war at Fort Knox were rigged in brand new American uniforms and absorbed into the United States Army as an Italian Service Unit. We also have in this army thousands of Negroes who were born in this country, were drafted into service units and wear this uniform. I want to pose two questions: Will these prisoners who have shot at our flag be discriminated against when they partake of public recreation and when they travel in public?

Will these Negro soldiers who defend our flag be discriminated against when they do these same things?

Whether the answer to each of the above questions be yes or no, will some one in each case, please, give me, one good reason why?

House Committee Eyes Army Book On Races

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON — (SNS) — The Military Affairs Committee of the House closed the books Monday on a secret investigation of Army plans to distribute 55,000 copies of a pamphlet on racial equality, but kept an eye on a Government warehouse to make certain that the books stay there.

Titled, "The Races of Mankind," the pamphlet was published by the Public Affairs Committee Inc., of New York City, and was prepared by Prof. Ruth Benedict and Dr. Gene Weltfish, identified with the department of anthropology of Columbia university. 3-7-44

Chairman May, (D-Ky.), said the War Department abandoned plans to distribute the book in connection with its orientation courses after the committee threatened to "expose the motives behind the book." The purpose of the book, he declared, was to teach racial equality of white men and Negroes.

COMMITTEEMEN IRKED

What irked May and other committee members was what the Kentuckian said was a claim in the book that surveys indicated the average Negro in New York, Connecticut and Massachusetts was the intellectual equal of the average white resident of Kentucky, Arkansas and Mississippi.

Committee members said the book had been banned from U. S. O. centers and its distribution then was promoted by the C. I. O. Refugee Committee. When the Army purchased 55,000 copies, May said the committee decided to investigate. 3-7-44

Army spokesmen claimed the book was never intended for general circulation among soldiers, but was to have been distributed among officers teaching orientation courses as background material to refute the Nazi "super race" theory.

DISTRIBUTION HALTED

Because some of the material was founded inadequate, the Army said the book was not distributed and the 55,000 copies were stored in a warehouse. The decision to hold up distribution, spokesmen added, was made before the committee investigated. 3-7-44

So far as the committee is concerned, May said, "the matter is closed, but we intend to keep an eye open to see that this book doesn't go out to our soldiers through War Department channels. If it does, somebody is going to have to do lots of explaining."

Newbold Morris, City Council president: "What the hell is the war about?" (story at right)

Army & Jim Crow: a dialog in five parts

ONE OF THE SERVICES we perform for our readers is to telephone important people and ask for their opinions on important issues in the news.

This week we called up some people to ask whether they thought the War Department was wise to send out that recent letter to all Army esablishments reminding them that they were not to permit discrimination (Jim Crowism) in their buses, theaters and post exchanges. Gov. Sparks of Alabama wired a protest to FDR as soon as the Army's reminder came to his attention. We wanted to know whether certain people felt that the War Department was right, or Gov. Sparks.

We tried first to speak to John Shaw Billings, executive editor of Time Inc. We got his secretary who sounded rather young. When we said that we wanted to talk to John Shaw Billings she said he was not around at the moment.

WE: Is he expected back later in the afternoon?

SEC.: Well, he might be. But I wish you would call Mr. Hodgins. He will take care of anything that you want to see Mr. Billings about.

WE: We don't want to see Mr. Billings. We want to talk to him over the telephone to get his opinion for a story we are doing.

SEC.: Well, Mr. Billings doesn't talk to anyone outside of the company. You'd better talk to Mr. Hodgins.

WE: But we don't want Mr. Hodgins' opinion. Who is Mr. Hodgins?

SEC.: He's the vice-president. He talks to everybody first.

WE: Doesn't Mr. Billings talk to anybody unless Mr. Hodgins talks to him first?

SEC.: Well, that all depends on who is calling.

WE: Will you give Mr. Billings a message —that the newspaper PM is calling.

SEC.: Well, can't you tell me more about it? Is it concerning the Luce story?

WE: No, it has nothing to do with the Luce story. It's about the letter sent out by the War Department to all Army establishments on the subject of race discrimination at Army posts.

Mr. Billings' secretary told us to call back in 15 minutes after she had had time to give her boss the message. When we called, she said that Mr. Billings had not yet returned and again suggested that we talk to Mr. Hodgins.

WE: We'd rather wait until Mr. Billings gets our message. We'll call again in 10 minutes.

We did call again, but apparently Mr. Billings had not returned. We told his secretary that we would call in the morning, which we did.

SEC.: I told him what you wanted, and he said he didn't have any opinions to give out.

WE: Won't he talk to us to say why?

SEC.: I'm afraid not.

After that, we thought maybe we ought to call Mr. Hodgins after all to find out if he could get Mr. Billings to give us an opinion. Mr. Hodgins listened without interruption to our explanation of what we wanted to talk to Mr. Billings about, and how much trouble we were having in our efforts to reach the editor. When we had finished, Mr. Hodgins said: "I have no idea whatever what Mr. Billings' opinion is."

WE: His secretary said that if we told you about the subject matter, you would then tell Mr. Billings about it.

HODGINS: I am in no way disposed to secure a statement from Mr. Billings for PM, in the light of your headline yesterday.

We thought for a moment, trying to remember if we had carried a headline about Mr. Billings or Mr. Hodgins, and then we asked, "What headline?"

HODGINS: If you will look at yesterday's issue of PM, I'm sure you will be able to find it.

(We remembered a headline about William Bullitt; when we looked at it later on we read Answering Bullitt's Life Magazine Call for War Against Russia).

WE: Is it because of our headline that you would not want to ask Mr. Billings for his opinion?

HODGINS: I would most definitely not care to ask him.

Mr. Aldrich's secretary

We ran into another secretary when we tried to call Winthrop Aldrich, chairman of the board of the Chase National Bank. At our first call, his secretary, who sounded terse, competent and protective, said that Mr. Aldrich was not in, but that we might reach him the next morning. When we called at that time, the secretary said: "I talked with Mr. Aldrich this morning over the telephone, and he says he is not familiar with the letter which you mentioned, but in any event, he doesn't have any comment to make.

WE: We could give Mr. Aldrich all the available information about the letter. And we'd like to talk to him to find out if he cares to say why he does not want to comment.

SEC.: Because he doesn't know enough about it.

WE: We have all the facts which he could check very easily with the Army.

SEC.: He would want to read them himself, but in any event, he doesn't have the time to give any thought to it.

We got Newbold Morris, president of the City Council, after only four calls. When we told him about Gov. Sparks objecting to the Army letter, Morris said:

"Who is Gov. Sparks?"

We told him, the Governor of Alabama.

"Well, that is just about the kind of statement to expect to hear from the Governor of Alabama," he said.

Did he think that the Army was wise in taking such action at this time?

MORRIS: If you know anything about me at all, you would know how I feel about those things. I once publicly stated that if I were a soldier in the United States Army, and a Negro officer told me to do anything, I would do it just the same as if he were white. What do you want me to say now?

WE: Do you think the Army's action was a wise one?

MORRIS: Why, of course I do. Who wouldn't, except the Governor of Alabama? That is an American doctrine. What the hell is the war about? What is the Declaration of Independence about? When the War Department issues an order like that, it's a shame that it has to be necessary to reaffirm an American doctrine that we have been living under since 1776. This is the Army; where merit is the basis for recognition, and color is not supposed to have anything to do with it.

WE: Then you think the Army was wise in issuing the letter?

MORRIS: It's not only wise but mandatory. I hope they carry it out in practice and enforce the doctrine that they have announced.

We put it in writing

Our next call was person-to-person to DeWitt Wallace, editor of the Reader's Digest, and we reached him without going through several secretaries first.

Wallace said, "Well, I wish you'd put that question in writing. I'm in the middle of a conference right now."

We said we would, and that we would mail him a special delivery letter immediately, so that maybe we might receive a reply in time to make our deadline.

The next afternoon, we received the following telegram:

YES THE ARMY IS RIGHT. MOREOVER IN OUR OWN ORGANIZATION NEGROES AND WHITES ARE WORKING TOGETHER IN COMPLETE AND MOST GRATIFYING HARMONY. DEWITT WALLACE, READER'S DIGEST.

Mr. Hibbs of the SEP

We tried to get Ben Hibbs, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, but a man by the name of Day Edgar answered to say that Mr. Hibbs was not there, but that he might be able to reach him if we would explain what we wanted.

EDGAR: You give me the dope. I handle everything that has anything to do with the editorial part of publicity.

WE: We'd like to talk to Mr. Hibbs directly, because it's his personal opinion that we want.

EDGAR: He refers all those calls to me.

So we gave Mr. Edgar the dope, and he said: "I don't know if he has any opinion, but if there is any opinion available, I'll get it for you."

He called back later in the afternoon

Winfred Lynn Committee Enlarges Scope To Fight All Segregation In The Armed Forces

In the committee's quarters at 360 West 125th street, Wilfred Lynn, chairman of the Lynn Committee to Abolish Segregation in the Armed Forces, explained that the recent decision was an attempt to meet the growing concern throughout the country on the matter of racial segregation and discrimination in training the nation's military forces.

"There is no greater contradiction in our American life today than that represented in a bi-racial American army, two armies in fact, one white, the other black, waging a war for freedom and democracy abroad while it perpetuates at home those things against which it professes to fight," said Mr. Kerr.

Originally, the Lynn Committee was organized to push the case of Winfred Lynn, a Negro gardener of Jamaica, Long Island, who in 1942 brought suit in federal court against the "Negro quota" system by which he as well as all other Negroes, was being drafted into the U. S. Army.

Lynn, now a corporal serving in New Guinea, maintained that the very idea of a "racial quota" was in itself a plan of racial discrimination, and that, as such, it was illegal and unconstitutional. His is the only legal attack made to date against discrimination in selective service.

NINE SICK VETERANS COULDN'T BELIEVE IT

4-8-44

EL PASO, Texas — Nine sick Negro soldiers, refused service in the local railroad station's dining room because of Dixie's jim-crow policy, were forced to look on as 24 German prisoners of war came into the same lunch room, accompanied by two guards . . . sat at the tables, had their meals served them, smoked and enjoyed themselves.

This was the amazing story as told by a Negro war veteran as an answer to the gripping letter written by Corporal Lucius Adams from "Somewhere in Italy" and carried exclusively in The Pittsburgh Courier under the title, "What Are We Fighting For."

The story as related by the Army veteran . . . also a corporal . . . draws a clear-cut picture of the skin-difference among fighting troops, which is amplified only in this country.

Parts of his statement follow:

"I have just read Corporal Adams' letter. . . He claims to know what he is talking about, as he has crossed one ocean. However, there is one thing he has failed to understand. The people 'over there' know that they are one, be they black or white. There is but one law. A soldier is a soldier, a sailor is a sailor, no matter the color of his skin, his race or his creed. He is treated as a man and a soldier. He knows he belongs, and come hell or high water, he is willing, nay eager, to die, if needs be, for his people, his flag, his country. 4-8-44

WHAT HAPPENED TO US HERE IN AMERICA

"I know what I'm talking about. I was born in Trinidad, B.W.I. I left there at the age of 14, went to school in Cardiff, South Wales. I ran away from school and joined the merchant navy during the first world war. I have sailed the seven seas and the five oceans. There is hardly any port of this known world I have not visited.

"But the all-time low in human relationship occurred less than two months ago. Allow me to tell you what happened on the 5th of February, 1944, right here in the United States.

"Nine of us, all colored soldiers, were on our way from the hospital at Camp Claiborne, La., to the hospital at Fort Huachuca. After having been crowded like cattle in one coach from Alexandria, La., (Editor's Note: Jim Crow) we arrived here on the 4th of February and had to wait for our train for about 12 hours. We went to the "colored" USO, slept overnight and returned to the station the next morning . . . NINE SICK AMERICAN SOLDIERS.

WE COULDN'T EVEN 4-8-44
BUY A CUP OF COFFEE

"We could not purchase a cup of coffee at any price around the station. The only place that would serve us was the lunch room at the station. But we couldn't eat where the white people were eating. To do that would contaminate the very air of the place, so we had to go to the kitchen.

"That was bad enough, but that's not all. About 11:30 the same morning, about two dozen German prisoners of war came to the lunchroom with two guards. They entered the large room, sat at the table. Their meals were served them. They smoked and had a swell time.

"As we stood on the outside and saw what was going on, we could scarcely believe our own eyes. There they (the Germans) sat; eating, talking, laughing, smoking. They were ENEMIES of our country, people sworn to destroy all the so-called democratic governments of the world. 4-8-44

"And there we were. Men sworn to fight, to give our lives for this country, but WE were not good enough to sit in the lunchroom.

"That, my dear corporal, would never happen in England.

"What are we fighting for? On what team or on whose side are we playing or fighting? The only time a colored person has any trouble of that kind in England is when these white Americans . . . cause it.

" . . . I too, am asking myself, what are we fighting for?"

ONE of the most important victories yet achieved in the struggle against Jimcrow in the armed forces was the order of the War Department banning segregation—which is another form of racial discrimination—in GI post exchanges, theaters and transportation. An order dated July 18, 1944, handed down by the Adjutant General, said in effect: No theater may deny admittance to a member of the armed forces because of race; all races will be permitted to use army exchange on the post without segregation, and U.S. buses and trucks may not refuse colored passengers, or Jimcrow them to certain seats. This latter provision applies to U.S. buses and trucks on or off the post.

8-27-44

I did not get this enormously significant and pertinent information from Sen. Robert Taft, since, I'm sure, it would come under the ban of news favorable to the policies of President Roosevelt, our Commander-in-Chief, and hight influence Negro soldiers and thousands of whites, to cast their ballots for FDR (that is, if the soldiers' vote can slip through the legal pillboxes and barbed wire entanglements set up by the Republican candidate Dewey in New York).

8-27-44

THIS order does two things. It is a direct attack upon segregation which, although it is Jimcrow, some people accept on the basis that there can be "separate but equal accommodations" for Negroes—a state of affairs which does not and cannot exist, and the Army has begun to realize it. Secondly, it attacks Jimcrow against Negroes in the armed forces at the point where it is worst. For although discrimination still exists in the armed forces, considerable progress has been made within the armed forces toward breaking it down. A typical example is the fact that Negro and white officers have been trained together even in Columbus, Georgia—and in the last world war there was a Jimcrow officers training camp established in Des Moines, Iowa.

8-27-44

This is not to say that all is well, but it shows that the forward march of history which has brought forth the FEPC—and the use of the armed forces to enforce its decrees—has also affected the armed forces. The grim reaper has put his finger on the shoulders of white supremacy in America, and all those who cling to it are likely to pass into oblivion along with their beloved mistress.

THE most fierce examples of Jimcrow in respect to the armed forces have been the free hand which the polltax officials in the South have had to utterly and contemptuously disregard the American uniform when it is on a Negro soldier. These one-horse sheriffs—with the citizenship of an American, the mentality of Hitler and the trigger-finger of Ku Kluxers—have been known even to shoot down Negro soldiers simply because they sought to get into town or to go on furlough to see their families. The past policy of the Army had been to appease these prejudiced officials by having the camp regulations conform to the states' rights—page Mr. Dewey!—conceptions of Martin Dies, Cotton Ed Smith and Joe Starnes who have just been defeated. Now the Army headquarters in Washington, with no politics in its mind, has sent this vestige of states' rights into oblivion by guaranteeing equality of Negro troops—without segregation—on U.S. vehicles of transportation, theaters and exchanges. 8-27-44

Obviously, the other system is bad for morale of Negro troops—and white troops—and that doesn't help speed victory. It is the dictates of military necessity in a war which requires that the forces of right win over the forces of evil, and that element of compulsion is as permanent, as moral and as powerful as Lincoln's wise Emancipation Proclamation was a military blow against the slavocracy.

There are still sharp and disgraceful evidences of prejudice with respect to the armed forces—as the ban against Negro women in the WAVEs and SPARs. But the Adjutant General's order of July 18 shows that it can be done.

War Dept. Reduces Terms of 5 Soldiers

Men Had Rebelled Against Jim Crow Practices in Florida Camp

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Five soldiers, sentenced last March at Dale Mabry Field here to terms of fifteen and thirteen years on mutiny charges, have had their terms drastically reduced.

David Levinson, Philadelphia attorney, was advised Wednesday that the sentences have been reduced as follows:

William J. Flemons, of Washington, and Leo M. Jones of Philadelphia, five years; James E. Crowley, Brooklyn, and Arthur Boyd, Summit, N.J., two years; and Joseph R. Kent, Evanston, Ill., three years.

The men had been put in the guardhouse at the field on minor charges after each had encountered trouble at various Army camps in the South because they protested treatment handed them and other colored soldiers.

They refused on March 23 to leave the guardhouse for fatigue detail, demanding to see the commanding officer. They said that their meals from soup to dessert were dumped on one plate while white prisoners had their food served on two.

For an answer, Levinson said, a non-commissioned officer threw several tear gas bombs into the jail. At a court martial the men were accused of inciting to mutiny, mutiny and not attempting to curb mutiny. 9-16-44

The next step will be an appeal for Presidential pardons.

War Official Declares Army Will Continue Jim Crow Policy

Amsterdam News 4-1, 4-4,

By AGNES E. MEYER
(Wife of Eugene Meyer, Publisher of the Washington Post)

This is the THIRD and last in the series on the Negro and the war written by Agnes E. Meyer and published in THE WASHINGTON POST and New York HERALD TRIBUNE in their issues of March 19 and 26. The first article by Mrs. Meyer, which appeared in the POST and HERALD TRIBUNE on March 19, was reviewed in THE AMSTERDAM NEWS of March 25, but in view of the special importance attached to the official statement of discriminatory policy toward the Negro in the United States Army by John J. McCloy, Assistant Secretary of War, THE AMSTERDAM NEWS published, by permission of THE WASHINGTON POST, the entire second article. In this final instalment, Mr. McCloy's statement as quoted by Mrs. Meyer is published in full.—Editorial Note. 4-15-44

Army's Aid Forgotten

All the many constructive contributions which the Army is making to the military training and general education of the race are forgotten; the fact that its policy of segregation is more limited than ever before is overlooked.

Through a series of accidents the Army bears the brunt of the Negro's long accumulating passion for equality. The fact that democracy as an aim is explicit in this war not only lends added inspiration to the Negro cause but makes the major arm of our military forces a logical target for Negro protest.

What position does the Army take in regard to this complicated situation? I asked that question of the men who could give not only the best informed but the most sympathetic reply, the Assistant Secretary of War, John J. McCloy, chairman of the Army's committee on minority groups. This is his statement as dictated to me.

"We have taken as our basic policy that there will be segregation of the Negro regimental units. This has been the policy of the Army ever since the Civil War and even before. We are fighting a tough war and our troops have to go up against seasoned champions. Therefore we cannot trifle with morale. We have to go the tried way. 4-15-44

"In gaining the highest possible morale of the Army you cannot make extreme experiments. Segregation makes difficulties, but mixing units would create even more upheaval, and we cannot take such risks. The Army is not a social institution and it cannot get too far ahead of the social structure in which it has its origin. We are in thorough sympathy with the Negro as a soldier but nothing can be done to endanger the military value of our effort.

Some Progress Reported

"Compared to the last war, however, we have made considerable progress. The Negro soldier is treated like the white soldier in every particular except that he is segregated.

"There is a complete non-discrimination policy in respect to facilities, food, clothing, housing and treatment. We have insisted that he should have the same caliber of leadership as any white regiment. 4-15-44

"On every post we have endeavored to maintain a policy of just and equal treatment. There have been breaches. In a Southern company, new officers come in, not professional soldiers, who feel they know 'how to handle colored people.' They are apt to apply the policies of the communities from which they come. We hop on them for it and are continually alert to the trouble they make. Our greatest problems are the prejudices and general attitude of local areas, and the abuses of various kinds that spring from prejudice.

"The lack of facilities for the Negro in such communities is a great handicap in itself. We had to make great efforts to increase the Negro's recreational facilities in the Southern towns where his recreation has been neglected. But the greatest practical difficulty is still securing adequate transportation. We have not been able to control the Jim Crow laws in local Southern towns on the buses and even on the railroads. 4-15-44

Blamed for Police Brutality

"The brutal behavior of the local police to the colored soldier made matters worse. We have been criticized for this, but we have done and are doing our utmost to combat it. In many cases we have even used the threat of boycott to improve transportation, by the cancellation of franchises, or by taking over transportation ourselves. Actually we haven't enough trucks to do this everywhere. But if we did this for the Negro, it would be free and then the white boys who pay carfare on the other buses would object.

"We have begun a new survey of the whole situation, particularly as to colored troops from the North who are not used to the segregation practiced by the South. We do not put colored Northern troops in the South as a matter of racial discrimination, but because most of our camps have been placed there for climatic reasons. 4-15-44

"The Army is now far ahead of civilian life as a whole in regard to its discriminatory policies, but it does not seem so to the Negro because he is more conscious of

O. K.'s Jim Crow

JOHN J. McCLOY, Assistant Secretary of War, whose blunt statement of policy regarding the segregation of Negro units leaves no question or doubt about the place of the Negro in the Army. 4-15-44 himself and his problems than he was in the last war.

"The officer candidate schools are not segregated and the Army is doing what it can to select the officers carefully. Promotions are supposed to reveal unfairness. Actually we are making them up to the point that the war effort demands. There are several battalion and regimental commanders, several full colonels, in fact, every grade of officer up to brigadier general. The Negro is in all branches of the service. Negro paartroopers are making their first jumps at Fort Benning this very week.

"As far as the use of Negro troops in the Army is concerned, they are already located in every theater of combat throughout the world. Several units have distinguished themselves. A number of individuals have won citations, such as the D. S. C. down to the soldier's medal for heroism. Other combat units will be shipped abroad when we feel they are ready. 4-15-44

"The Negro is at a disadvantage in the mass because his education has been neglected. We cannot with the most intensive training make up in a short period for his lack of educational background. It is not as easy, therefore, to make them into efficient combat troops, but by selection we hope to give the Negro every chance to make good on the field of battle. We are interested in making a military asset out of the Negro, and, just because he is handicapped in the mass, we have been careful to give the specially qualified individual every opportunity for progress.

Local Prejudice Increased

"The complaint of the Negro is directed against the Army because it is a good focal point for his whole general state of dissatisfaction. The Negro hoped and we had hoped that the Southern civilian attitude toward him would change if he was in uniform. But, unfortunately, the Southern local prejudice increased in intensity, and only a strong public opinion can change it.

"The Negro's irritation which is leveled at the Army should be directed against these local prejudices over which the Army cannot presume to exert control.

"It is especially short-sighted for the Negroes to heap their general sense of wrongs upon the Army because their troops would take better advantage of the training program if their morale were higher. The Army is doing all that it can to improve morale, and the Negro leaders should co-operate. Instead of using the situation to step up race consciousness, the emphasis should be placed upon the fact that the Negro has a great opportunity in the war to show what he can do. 4-15-44

"The propaganda of Negro leadership depresses their troops and increases their lack of morale at a moment when it should be at the highest pitch. The propaganda against the Army encourages the fatalistic sense of not belonging, to which the Negro is always sensitive. The men hear the talk of their own leaders and say; 'What's the use?'

"But their instinct, and the rational decision of some Negro leaders, is to go the other way and encourage full participation. Actually more can be gained for the whole race by encouraging morale in spite of any and all dissatisfaction, justified or not. Many of the Negro Army officers and Army chaplains are taking that position, but they have to meet the opposition of their racial leaders, who say: 'We won't move unless we get something for it.'

"Negative Attitude" Cited

"This seems to me a short-sighted policy as far as the elevation of the race is concerned.

"I confess that some Army men are discouraged about this negative attitude of Negro leadership. Our committee and the general staff have worked very hard to overcome the problems that exist, but our efforts meet with little response. We are constantly hearing that the Negro is disgruntled and yet our only aim is to make him feel as adjusted to military life as the other men. 4-15-44

"The Negro is getting better care, attention, nourishment, education and consideration than he receives in civilian life. I am told that G-3 checks up more carefully to get good subalterns for Negro regiments than for white troops. The 9th Squadron, which has lately done so well, got better equipment, better and longer training than any other Army flying units, as we were eager to have them make good.

"We shall continue our efforts to overcome mistakes, but injustices can occur in so large an organization as the Army in regard to handling of white recruits as well as Negroes. Our aim is to right these mistakes in both cases as quickly as they come to our attention. It is a pity, therefore, that complete equality in the Army has taken such hold of the Negro mind as to become their predominating thought. For our first aim, whether Negro or white, should be the winning of the war." 4-15-44

In evaluating Mr. McCloy's statement, Negro leadership should take into consideration that he is as free of inherited prejudices and emotionally as stable in his judgment of Negro problems as any one with whom I have discussed the question of Negro morale.

Civilian Morale Depressed

What Mr. McCloy did not know is that the morale of the civilian population has also been depressed to a point of deperate melancholy.

"The cynicism and resentment of our students," said the gentle and judicially minded Howard University professor of philosophy, Dr. Alain L. Locke, "has become markedly greater in the last few years. It is a bitter thing to see young people so disillustioned. The Army situation is the nub of the matter, for its policy of segregation implies second-class citizenship."

The young people, themselves, have expressed their feelings to me in much more violent language. "I am beginning to hate the face of a white man," said one of them.

The white reader will find it difficult to understand this mounting hatred and resentment in the face of an ever-improving Negro status in the Army. There are two answers. The Army has not sufficienty publicized among the Negro masses the numerous advantages offered them in its ranks, nor has it used its powers to build up public sentiment against the maltreatment of the Negro soldier. This left all the tactical advantages to the Negro leaders and they did not fail to seize them.

Problem for the North, Too

But the North will also have to meet the attitudes which the Negro troops bring back from the front. It should examine critically the reasons for its growing impatience with its intransigence toward the Negro in uniform, will then reap the evil harvest that it has sown and continues to sow.

come more militant in its demand that the backward Southern communities begin to practice better race relationships. Otherwise the returning Negro troops are bound to be the focal point of racial disorder. Viewing the present antagonisms between the Negro and the Army from their largest aspect, nothing is more important than that.

In the mean time greater harmony can scarcely be achieved unless Negro statesmanship modifies its strategy and does its share to put the Army program for the Negro in a more favorable light.

In addition, the efforts of both the whites and the Negroes must unite in securing for the returned Negro soldier his fair share of the jobs when the industrial reorganization takes place. Reassurance to the Negro that this time he can count upon retaining some of the economic progress he has made during the war would be the most practical proof that the moral conscience of America is genuinely aroused and that our democratic war aims are not the eyewash they seemed to him after the World War.

Then he would also have more reason to believe that his partial segregation in the Army was not the insult that it seems, but an unavoidable military necessity. He might even heed the advice which Dean Hastie gave just after his resignation from the War Department "to grit his teeth, square his shoulders and do his best as a soldier."—M.—R.

JOHN DAVIS GOES SOUTH; GETS FACTS

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.

4-22-44

Editor's Note: Who runs the U. S. Army?

What men are responsible for the conditions which have disturbed both soldier and civilian morale among Negroes?

The Courier knows these men . . . key-figures in establishing and maintaining Army policy. The Courier knows these men come out of the South.

The Courier, however, wanted to know more about these men . . . their backgrounds, their training, their qualifications.

John P. Davis, brilliant news analyst and a member of The Courier editorial staff, went into Dixie . . . into the home-towns of these men.

His investigation produced rich news dividends. His findings, contained in three soul-searching articles, draw aside the curtain of mystery and give you a highly dramatic expose upon which the entire attitude of the War Department policy on Negro troops can very easily be based.

By JOHN P. DAVIS
Washington Bureau

The other day a Negro soldier in a Southern Army camp wrote his former high school principal in Atlanta, Ga.: "I don't know, but I'm positively sure something is happening to me. Whatever it is I believe it is feeding me with hatred and prejudice, and I eat it, drink it and digest it. . . . I have seen and heard things here in camp that crushed my spirit and morale more each day. Should we attend a post theatre we are segregated. The same equally applies to bus transportation, patronizing the camp PX or what have you . . . I feel I prefer death fighting for democracy in America rather than to die on a battlefield."

4-29-44

GOOD BAROMETER ON ARMY POLICY

The existence of such a sentiment among Negro soldiers is the barometer by which America should judge the policies of the War Department affecting Negroes. It is not likely that many Negro soldiers have such extreme feelings as those expressed in this letter. But the fact that even a few Negro soldiers feel this way is a grave problem for America. It throws open for serious questioning the whole attitude of the War Department on Negro troops.

4-29-44

The War Department has publicly stated that it did not approve of mixing Negro and white enlisted men in the same regimental units. It has publicly stated that because of the lower educational classifications of many Negro soldiers they have been unable to master techniques of modern weapons of war. And for this stated reason it has pursued a policy of converting to labor battalions some of the most famous units of Negro troops, among them the 9th and 10th Cavalry regiments and the 8th Illinois National Guard regiment.

VISITS DIXIE CENTERS

Add to this the failure to use a single unit of Negro ground forces during the first 27 months of the war, the unsatisfactory program of promotions of Negro officers, the constant irritations experienced by Negro "G.I.'s" in southern camps and you have some of the basic reasons for a low morale among some Negro soldiers.

These policies do not help America win her war for freedom.

Who are the men who make these policies and carry them out? what have been their relationships with their Negro fellow-Americans? It was to answer these questions that The Pittsburgh Courier sent me more than 1,000 miles into the Deep South. The assignment was to get the facts about the Army's Poll-Tax Generals.

SOME BENEFITS

4-22-44

Not all the policies of the War Department are harmful to the morale of Negro troops. The majority serve well the interests of America and her Negro soldiers. The nearly 700,000 Negro servicemen —many of them for the first time in their lives—have been given good training, taught discipline and orderly habits, fed wholesome food and clothed comfortably. In many instances they have been under the command of officers who respected them and treated them with sympathy and understanding.

Commanding generals such as Lt. Gen. Mark Clark and Maj. Gen. Omar Bradley in the North African, Sicilian and Italian campaigns were quick to recognize and commend Negro troops under their command for gallantry and soldierly accomplishments.

Nor do all the Army's generals who happen to come from the South deserve the title "poll-tax general." There are those in a position to know something of the way the Army General Staff is run who have a good word to say about Maj. Gen. Ray E. Porter, born and trained in Arkansas, and now Assistant Chief of Staff, G-3, War Department General Staff. Porter received the Distinguished Service Cross and the Croix de Guerre with Gilt Star in World War I.

WILL UNCOVER POLL-TAX GENERALS

4-29-44

But it will serve no good purpose to America's war effort to gloss over the fact that all too frequently there are men on the General Staff, whose background, traditions and experience prevents them from dealing with Negro troops free from bias and prejudice associated with the poll-tax system in the Southern States from which they come. These are the poll-tax generals.

Negro America—with the lives of 700,000 of its finest sons pledged to the cause of America's victory over the Axis—has a right to know the facts about the men who anonymously develop Army policy and prepare such letters as the one Secretary of War Stimson signed and sent to Representative Hamilton Fish, saying in effect that Negro soldiers are too dumb to fight. For today these men have much to do with running Uncle Sam's Army.

Negroes Asks FDR's Help

Post — New York, N.Y.

9-20-44

A protest against the War Dept.'s plan to create separate facilities for Negro soldiers returning for relief from battle strain was wired to President Roosevelt yesterday by 26 Negroes of Harlem who also asked an appointment to discuss the question.

The signers included Judge Jane Bolin, Police Lt. Lewis Chisholm, Judge Hubert T. Delany, Rev. A. C. Powell, Jr., Dr. Channing H. Tobias, Walter White and Doxey Wilkerson.

The telegram said, in part:

"We learn that white soldiers brought back from overseas for recreation and relief from battle strain are to be given appoximately two weeks each at Government expense at luxurious hotels and resorts at Lake Placid, N. Y., Santa Barbara, Calif., Miami Beach, Fla . . . But Negro soldiers are to be required to go to Theresa Hotel in New York's Harlem and Pershing Hotel on Chicago's southside . . .

". . . The action of the U. S. Government in segregating Negro soldiers who also have faced death on foreign battlefronts and in introducing segregation in northern communities where it is both illegal and contrary to public opinion is a reprehensible act which Negro soldiers and civilians alike resent . . ."

Army Stands Firm On Jim Crow Order

World — Memphis, Tenn.

9-8-44

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — There appears to be no disposition on the part of the war department to recede from the position it has taken in the non-segregation directive sent to all army posts early in July, in spite of the ranting and protests on the part of southern legislators and governors.

Last week Rep. Newsome of Alabama entered into the record the protest of Gov. Chauncey Sparks of his state sent to President Roosevelt August 27 asking that the opinions of southeners be invited before it is made effective.

Up to last Thursday the White House had not replied to the Sparks telegram. A. spokeman there acknowledged receipt and simply said that the matter "is in the mill". There was no clarification as to whether there would be an answer or not.

Meanwhile, as rabid segregationists continued to rail against the war department directive, liberal elements were hailing it as "an important step forward in the fight to abolish discrimination based on race, color or creed from the armed forces and from our country." The National Federation for Constitutional Liberties has been notable in this respect.

9-8-44

In a letter to President Roosevelt which referred to "those ossified white supremists" who would suspend the order, the federation told him that "the great majority of Americans abhor the views and tactics of this group and assured him of continued "support to your leadership of our country."

Anti-Jim Crow Order in Army Stinks—Report

Amsterdam News — New York, N.Y.

9-16-44

"The belated order by President Roosevelt and the War Department to the Army to cease segregation and Jim Crow in camps against Negro soldiers, stinks to the high heavens. It is an insult to the intelligence of the Negro and of all liberty loving people. It comes too late," declared Attorney William A. Booker, of Chicago, prominent in political and legal circles in the Windy City, on a visit to New York last week. Mr. Booker is the regular Republican candidate for state representative in the Illinois General Assembly from the first district of that state.

"I think the systematic manner in which Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York has gone about his campaign," he replied in answer to a question as to his opinion of the GOP Presidential nominee, "in which he has tied up state after state under Republican governorships, is further proof of his fine ability for organization and the executive capacity to get things done.

"The one thing this country at large will need, and the Negro in particular, after the war," continued Mr. Booker, "will be a man of the type of Governor Dewey who is fresh with vigor, endowed with ability, and has the courage to recognize worth and ability among all our racial groups without regard to race, color or national origin—his record in New York is proof again of that fact. The Negro will need such a man who has the courage of his convictions to face and solve the problems of post-war employment, assuring us post-war security. I believe that Dewey will see to it that the Negro is just as indispensable in peace as he was in the industry of war.

9-16-44

"I was with him at Springfield, Ill., in August, at a round table conference at Governor Dwight Green's mansion, and this is the impression he made on all of us: namely, that he is concerned with giving security through the enactment by Congress of a fair employment practice commission as one of the basic needs to assure us economic stability. I believe that his forthright position on law enforcement would cause him to act swiftly and with justice in frowning upon, and eradicating maltreatment of Negroes in the armed forces. The utter disregard of the Roosevelt Administration in this connection has been an insult to the intelligence of all liberty-loving people."

NEGRO TROOPS SLANDERED

Ref-New York, N.Y.

CONGRESSMAN Hamilton Fish (R., N.Y.) has done Negroes a great service by getting officially from Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson a statement on the use of Negro American troops in combat units in Europe and Asia. 3-4-44

On February 1, Congressman Fish wrote to the Secretary of War and asked for an explanation as to why Negro regiments were being broken up into smaller units and shifted to labor work almost exclusively. On February 19th, Secretary Stimson replied to the Congressman's letter and while he did not answer all the questions asked of him, much of what the Secretary of War shows crystal clear that Negroes can expect no gains to be made in the Army.

"Your information concerning the utilization of certain Negro personnel from Tank Destroyer and Field Artillery units in organization of service units is correct," Secretary Stimson wrote. "Moreover, additional Tank Destroyer units organized with colored personnel have been retained. The 930th and 931st Field Artillery Battalions, both former components of the 184th Field Artillery, are currently being refilled, but present plans contemplate conversion of the Battalions to Combat Engineer units. Certain other existing Negro Field Artillery units are being converted to heavier artilley, but the 930th and 931st 155 mm. Howitzer Battalions have not been selected for conversion to heavier artillery or retention as Field Atillery owing to the unsatisfactory records of both units. To have retained those troops as Field Artillery units and concurrently to have converted or stripped other Negro or white Field Artillery units with substantially high efficiency records, would have been an uneconomical use of manpower. The present plan to convert the units to Combat Enginners is based on similar considerations." 3-4-44

Continuing the Secretary of War wrote:

"In converting combat units to service units, the War Department's selection of units to be converted has been based solely on the relative abilities, capabilities and status of training of the personnel in the units available for conversion. It so happens that a relatively large percentage of the Negroes inducted in the Army have fallen within the lower educational classifications, and many of the Negro units accordingly have been unable to master efficiently the techniques of modern weapons. To have committed such units to combat at the dates of conversion would have endangered operational successes as well as submitted the personnel to unnecessarily high casualty rates. Our limitations of manpower and urgent and immediate need for service units of a type whose mission would be efficiently discharged by the personnel concerned left no choice but to include Negro troops in conversions such as those mentioned in your letter.

"Concerning the use of Negro troops overseas, our general policy is to maintain the same ratio between Negro and white troops overseas as exists in the Army as a whole. I am sure you realize, however, that it is impracticable to maintain a uniform ratio of races to branches of service in all theatres. Your statement that Negro combat units overseas are used on service assignments is, of course, correct. The statement is equally applicable to white units overseaas. The fact is, there is no defensible reason for not so employing combat troops when necessary, and the procedure actually is to be encouraged in order to obtain maximum manpower value. As you know, rarely are all combat units in an area committed simultaneously. The decision as to when and how any unit shall be employed rests entirely with the responsible commander.

"I believe the foregoing will clarify the major problems raised in your letter. Permit me to emphasize, in conclusion, that any implication that the War Department is deliberately attempting to avoid sending overseas, or to keep out of combat, troops of the Negro or any other race, is entirely without foundation. Large numbers of Negro troops are overseas or en route and will be given every opportunity to win battle honors and demonstrate their worth in actual combat."

Congressman Fish commenting on the War Department Secretary's letter declared that "it is astounding to me that after twenty-six months of World War No. 2 virtually no Negro units have been engaged in combat except the 99th Pursuit Squadron and a few antiaircraft units. 3-4-44

"I do not agree at all with the official policy of the War Department in using colored soldiers as service troops, and particularly with its policy of breaking up such a well known and gallant Negro regiment as the former Eighth Illinois National Guard, which served with distinction and heroism in both the Spanish-American War and the World War.

"I specifically asked the Secrtary of War why the crack 24th Infantry Regiment, fully equipped and prepared for any eventuality, is performing service duties at docks and supply dumps while awaiting possible assignment to combat. Twenty-one months have passed since this outfit embarked for California for the South Pacific. Mr. Stimson simply ignored this question and give it the silent treatment.

"I cannot speak for the colored people of Chicago, but I should think they will be shocked when they learn that the Old Eighth Illinois National Guard Regiment, of which they rightfully have been so proud because of its service as an infantry combat regiment in the last war, is now turned into an Engineer Regiment after more than two years of training in preparation for front line service as a Field Artillery unit.

"I do not understand how it is that four separate colored regiments made such gallant fighting records in the last war, which was won in approximately 19 months and yet no colored infantry troops have been ordered into combat in this war. The educational standards of colored people have improved in the last 25 years, and I cannot agree with the Secretary of War's inference that colored soldiers' efficiency ratings are so low that 'many of the Negro units have been unable to master efficiently the techniques of modern weapons.' I believe many American Negroes will resent bitterly this broad indictment of their people, and the discrimination against their use in combat units in defense of their country.

"It seems passing strange that French Sengalese or whole British divisions from India have been fighting so superbly with our Allies, and that Russians with 'low educational qualifications' have been the heroes of this war, and that even the Japanese with 'lesser educational qualifications' than American Negroes, have been found to be brave and efficient soldiers." 3-4-44

Congressman Fish has rendered a great service by getting Secretary of War Stimson to at long last answer — if even insultingly — why Negro soldiers are treated no better than they are.

"YES, I BELIEVE IN SOCIAL EQUALITY"

...T Gun for WSA Boss Who Obeys FEPC Orders

Tribune-Washington, D.C. 3-4-44

If you had any doubts that Congressman Howard Smith, Alexandria (Va.) Democrat, is a reactionary leading the forces which makes discrimination against Negroes not only permissible but compulsory, then you should have dropped in on his special House Investigating Committee, Wednesday.

If you doubt that he's not using every opportunity to smirch the Fair Employment Practice Committee, then you should have been there more so.

The occasion was the hearing of Craig Vincent, Atlantic Coast regional director for the War Shipping Board, called to testify in regard to the WSA policy of hiring of seamen in the Merchant Marine.

The Seafarers' International Union has charged the WSA with "checker-boarding" crews, insisting upon mingling Negroes with whites on board ship, despite the objections of both Negro and white seamen.

Marshall E. Dimock, WSA assistant deputy administrator, Vincent's boss, was also called upon to testify. 3-4-44

Confused on Social Equality

Although the charge was specifically stated, the committee got mixed up on the FEPC non-discrimination policy and social equality between Negores and whites.

Vincent and Dimock emphatically denied deliberately trying to mix the crews, saying they adhered to the FEPC policy and followed a system of first-come-first served in sending out men for ship crews.

Asked early in the hearing by Smith whether or not he believed in social eyuality, Vincent replied that while he did personally, the President's order against racial discrimination in jobs was not involved in the question. Then Vincent's fat was in the fire.

Rep. Clare Hoffman (Rep., Mich.) also got an affirmative reply when he asked Vincent whether or not he believed in the social intermingling of races.

3-4-44

Hammer at Record

Hammering at Vincent, the committee revealed that through a bookkeeping error which persisted for some months, the administrator drew two fat Government salaries—$5,800 and $7,500 a year—at the same time.

This happened when Vincent was promoted from his Washington job with the WSA which paid $5,800 to his present Newed York City position with the agency which carries a $7,500 salary. His wife is also on the Federal pay roll at $3,800.

Eventually the mistake was discovered and Vincent has paid back $625, it was said.

The committee harped on the fact that Vincent received a draft deferment obtained by the WSA on the ground that he was indispensable to the war effort. They also tried to picture him as subversive on the basis of a brief membership in one or two so-called subversive organizations.

"Not Disqualified"

On the stand, Dimock insisted that despite the attempted smears, Vincent was indispensable, that he knew nothing to disqualify him, and that the WSA is interested primarily in full manpower utilization."

The committee did not give Vincent an opportunity to rebut the union's charges, but members expressed themselves as doubtful of his usefulness after the views he had given.

AIR FORCE BANS DISCRIMINATION

The Herald—Boston, Mass. 8-25-44

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24 —(AP)—The War Department said Thursday the Air Forces sent to all its commands recently a memorandum calling attention to War Department policy forbidding discrimination between Negro and white personnel at Army posts.

The Air Forces memorandum dated Aug. 17, was based on a general Army circular issued July 8 which restated a long-standing department policy. This policy forbids discrimination at post exchanges, theaters and other recreational facilities at Army posts and by Army-operated transportation facilities.

The July 8 order, issued over the signature of Maj. Gen. James A. Ulio, the adjutant general, said:

"Exchanges — While exchanges and branches exchanges may be allocated to serve specific areas or units, no exchange will be designated for the exclusive use of any particular race. Where such branch exchanges are established, personnel will not be restricted to the use of their area or unit exchange, but will be permitted to use any other exchange on the post, camp or station. 8-25-44

"Transportation—Buses, trucks, or other transportation owned and operated either by the government or by a governmental instrumentality will be available to all military personnel regardless of race. Restricting personnel to certain sections of such transportation because of race will not be permitted either on or off a post, camp or station, regardless of local civilian custom.

"Arm Motion Picture Theaters—Army motion picture theaters may be allocated to serve certain areas or units, but no theater or performance in any theater will be denied any group or individual because of race."

Soldiers Would Rather Go Overseas Now Than Stay in Dixie

By STAFF CORRESPONDENT

CAMP CLAIBORNE, La.—Soldiers can't be polled concerning their opinions of the Army in general of this camp in particular, but after spending a few hours here one gets the idea that "it stinks."

After spending a few days here, one revises that opinion downward, and reaches the conclusion that it is one of the worst hell holes in this man's Army.

Most of the men here seem resigned to Army duty. They don't go beyond the usual healthy griping about the work, but there seems to be a general dissatisfaction with the lack of recreation facilities and adequate transportation between the camp and the nearest town, Alexandria. 3-4-44

Overseas No Worse

The net result of these conditions has been to cause the men to feel that they won't be any too sorry to get overseas—that conditions there can't possibly be any worse than here.

There's an unwritten law that colored service men cannot ride busses from town unless there are five of them. If there are five, they may occupy the back seat; otherwise they must wait until five are ready to go. 3-4-44

It seems that this arrangement was made because colored people constitute one-third of the population and therefore are entitled to only one-third of the seats. These busses hold fifteen.

Some Haul Whites Only

There are fifteen or sixteen GI busses which have been hired out to private companies which do not allow colored persons to enter at all.

In addition, there are four busses which operate irregularly, for colored troops only.

I asked the public relations office about this situation. Officials there said that transportation was a problem and that there are as many complaints from whites as from colored service men.

Has Army Sanction

The fact remains, however, that colored officers are not allowed to ride certain busses and that this policy is approved by the Army, which rents out the busses and has a say as to how they shall be operated. 3-4-44

There have been many instances which indicate that white service men themselves do not like the setup which denies their fellow colored soldiers transportation.

On the bus out from Alexandria, Friday, a white soldier occupied the vacant seat next to a colored soldier. The driver stopped the bus and demanded that he move. He finally did after a rough exchange of words.

Recreation Lacking

Recreation after reaching Alexandria is nothing to write home about. The town boasts a USO center, several beer gardens and a few girls, but going to town to some is better than staying on the post and seeing movies night after night.

Recreation on the post is as limited as would be expected with separate activities for colored and white troops and a sharp line drawn between what one can and can't do.

Lt. Isaiah Taylor, of Le Compte, La., special service officer in charge of recreation for the 1311th Engineer General Service Regiment, promotes the usual basketball and boxing contests, movies and one camp show a month, but these activities don't begin to meet the needs of the 1300 men in his unit.

Morale Low 3-4-44

There is need of additional big name shows, more dances and social entertainment, because jim crow has caused the men's morale to drop very low.

The same holds true for the several thousand other colored troops in the camp.

There are seven movie houses and one main theater on the post for white personnel, and one in the colored service area. At the main theatre there are broadcasts from the stage.

Too Few Clubs

There are four USO clubs in the town of Alexandria for white personnel; one for colored. There are a number of service clubs on the post; two for colored.

Not only is there a transportation problem to and from the camp; there's one at the ticket office, too. At the Missouri-Pacific office I saw colored soldiers wait an hour while attendants waited on white service men at the eight "white windows."

Soldiers tell me they often have to buy tickets on the train, although they reach the station an hour ahead of train time.

Officers Restricted

Besides the gripe about recreation and transportation, officers of the colored regiments have an additional complaint, namely: they are ignored when promotions are made and that many of them, eligible for upgrading in status, have been "overlooked."

As a result, letters are being prepared by these men requesting transfers from the regiment. One of them was commissioned fourteen months ago and, despite efficiency ratings of "excellent," and additional administrative work, has not been elevated from second lieutenant. 3-4-44

Medical Captain Highest

The highest ranking colored officer on the post is Capt. D. V. D. Bradley, of Philadelphia, who is medical officer for the 1311th Regiment.

Among the soldiers here at Claiborne are:

Sgt. John M. Ross, Beltsville, Md.; Pvts. Jesse Jackson, Roanoke; Noah Smith, Tampa, Fla.; Sgt. Calvin Ball, 1401 Winchester Street, Baltimore, who has been in the army a year; Sgt. William Davenport, Gloucester, Va.; Sgt. Benjamin Crawford and Alfonso Wallace, both of Pittsburgh; Charles Hines, Chicago; Sgt. Joseph F. Anthony, New York City, who was busy at his work of demolition for field day exercises; 8-4-44

Blood Bank

BLACK BLOOD

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.

By HORACE R. CAYTON

A Successful Means of Protest Against the Red Cross Blood Policy

"YOUR Red Cross is by his side," says the poster. But that blood bank is sure Jim Crow. And that's what's embarrassing the American Red Cross in its current drive for funds. The response of Negroes to the various local war community chests and to the bond drive has shown that they are earning money and are willing to give. But appeals from the Red Cross have fallen flat. Why?

4-8-44

Recently a friend of mine who works for the NAACP was faced with this problem: A Negro employed in one of the defense plants complained that the management wanted to deduct a certain amount from his salary as a contribution to the Red Cross drive. This fellow had read in the press about the Jim Crow blood bank, which the Red Cross had refused to change even though it wanted Negroes to aid its financial campaign. He had seen how the Red Cross had picked out Negroes for ridicule in a recent newsreel film. He had read how in England, Italy, and North Africa, Red Cross officials were accused by their own Negro staff of upholding the army caste-color system with greater diligence than did the regular army officers. Now, this fellow objected to giving to the Red Cross, but he did want to do something more for the war effort and didn't mind giving either money or blood.

Mr. Cayton

My NAACP friend couldn't help him, but after thinking about it for a while, I've got an idea.

WHY NOT GIVE IT TO THE CHINESE? 4-8-44

Why don't Negroes contribute the amount of money they would normally give to the Red Cross to a fund which would be used to establish a blood bank for the Chinese? This would kill two birds with one stone, including the most obnoxious one, Jim Crow. Why give to the Chinese? Well, they're our allies. They're not getting as much lend-lease as they ought to, so it's an absolutely patriotic objective to aid the weakest of our allies. If the country can't send them enough airplanes, well, Negroes can send them all the blood they need. I don't think there would be many Chinese soldiers who would choose to lie on the battlefield and die just because there weren't any containers of white—or perhaps Chinese—blood handy. They'd be glad to get a little black blood if it would save their lives — clever fellows, these Chinese. 4-8-44

BLOOD AIDS DEMOCRACY

Then look at it from the point of view of the American Negro. He wants some share in this world revolution; at the same time, he's not interested in encouraging the lily-white policies and practices of the Red Cross. This would be a successful means of protest without someone saying that Negroes were disloyal or weren't aiding the war effort, or were interested in "social equality"—except, perhaps, with the Chinese.

WHEN you get to thinking about it, the idea grows on you. Look what it would mean for our relations with the non-white people of the world. American diplomats could tell them, "You know, we have a racial minority at home. The Japanese and Germans tell you that all we do is lynch them. But nobody can say the Negro's morale isn't high! Look—they're sending the Chinese their blood! Nobody can say they're not interested in this fight."

BLACK BLOOD FOR REDS

Wouldn't that be an inspiration to India? Just as the American Negro is accepted in the American system and is willing to give his blood to see that system projected throughout the world, so the Indians can find a "place" for themselves within the British Empire. Score a point for the idea that this isn't a color war, but a real war for democracy! (Thank you, Father! It's wonderful!)

4-9-44

OF course, I could suggest that we send the blood to the Russians, who apparently have no race prejudices. But I'm only afraid of one thing. Most of the poll-tax congressmen have already accused many vigorous Negroes of being 'Communists" or "Reds." These gentlemen have always assumed that the Negro's blood was black, or probably, at best, a deep purple. If they were to get a look at this blood bank and find out that the Negro's blood was really red, and it was being sent to the Red Russians — my! Mr. Dies wouldn't like that.

RED CROSS JIM CROW TO BE CONTINUED

Courier — Pittsburgh Pa.

5-14-44

NEW YORK—In response to a letter from Basil O'Connor announcing continuation of the blood plasma segregation policy, Walter White expressed sharp disappointment about the attitude of the newly appointed Red Cross head. In a communication to the latter, Mr. White said: "I had honestly hoped that you would show more courage and forthrightness in your approach to what is one of the most shameful episode and practices in the war for human liberation."

New Jersey Solons Implore FDR To End Red Cross Bias

Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa.

4-22-44

TRENTON, N. J.—The latest effort to end the official Red Cross policy of blood segregation comes from the New Jersey State Legislature which, last Wednesday memorialized Franklin D. Roosevelt "to use his office to abolish racial discrimination as to donors of human blood plasma."

The resolution was sponsored by Dr. James O. Hill, Negro Republican assemblyman from Essex. Addressed to the President as ex officio head of the Red Cross, the resolution states:

"The American Red Cross has always been an American institution that has never discriminated in the objects of its bounty regardless of race, creed or color. It has been reported that persons of the Negro race have been denied the right to give their blood to save the lives of others, regardless of race, color or creed."

4-22-44

The Red Cross policy of accepting Negro blood only for use with Negroes has been under constant attack from liberal groups all over the country since its announcement prior to the entry of the U. S. into the war, but the action of the New Jersey assembly marks the first such condemnation to come from a State Legislature. Added irony of the segregation policy is the fact that Dr. Charles Drew, noted Negro surgeon and Spingarn medalist for 1944, was largely instrumental in the development of the Red Cross blood plasma bank.

Labels On Blood Plasma Unknown To AEF Doctors

Courier — Pittsburgh Pa.

12-23-44

With American Forces In France —"There is no racial segregation of blood, either plasma or whole," a foreign correspondent has written a colored weekly. "If there is a label segregating the blood, it is removed before it reaches the front."

The writer sent several labels from blood plasma cartons to substantiate his assertion and added, "Very few doctors have even heard of the Red Cross' policy."

One medical corps captain is quoted as saying: "I have been using blood plasma in the treatment of combat patients for 3 years, and I have never seen any race identification of blood or even heard of it. Why, it's ridiculous! Do you think we go around asking unconscious soldiers what race's blood they prefer?"

Louisville Interracial Conference Asks That Blood Donor Center Be Open to All

Call — Kansas City, Mo.

6-26-44

LOUISVILLE. — (ANP) — One of the recommendations made at the conclusion of an interracial conference held at the Presbyterian Theological seminary on Thursday night was that there be no "segregation" at the blood donor service center here.

The blood-donor recommendation provided that Louisville chapter, American Red Cross, be asked to let Negroes go to the center and volunteer whenever they are ready to give blood.

Under the present plan a mobile unit visits Beecher Terrace Health center and other Negro centers to collect the blood donations at stated intervals. The new arrangement, according to predictions, will encourage greater participation of Negroes in donating blood to the Red Cross.

A move toward post-war security for the Negro worker was made by Robert Black, Urban league official, and Walter Rauth, Jeffersonville Boat and Machine Works representative.

Their recommendation said that "some type of assurance against dismissal after the war be given the Negro who adjusts himself in industry." It was also urged that the Negro not be confined to the low-paying jobs and that upgrading be dealt with according to "qualifications and not discrimination."

One of the recommendations made by a group headed by Dr. Charles H. Parrish of Louisville Municipal college, and the Rev. Dr. Edward A. McDowell Jr., of Southern Baptist Theological seminary, was that a Negro be named to the board of education.

One-fifth of the Negroes in Louisville own their own homes and 11 per cent of those over 25 are high school graduates, said Dr. Parrish. He listed the changes in the attitude toward the Negro during the last 15 years. "Despite a favorable white press not one change has come about in favor of the Negro that has not been protested," Dr. Parrish declared.

Although he warned that racial uplift can become an obsession, he predicted that there was a trend toward rejection of the caste system.

5-26-44

The attitude and policy of downtown stores towards Negroes was hit in a recommendation by Frank Stanley of the Louisville Defender and Miss Louise Diecks, acting city director of welfare. Downtown stores will be asked to adjust their policy toward Negroes and encourage instead of of the Red Cross at the Forest Glenn annex of Walter Reed Hospital. The majority of the soldiers there are convalescing from wounds received in combat areas overseas. White and Negro soldiers were indiscriminately quartered and treated at Forest Glenn. Segregation there by the Red Cross cannot be laid to the Army as in the labeling of the blood of Negroes in the blood banks.

Ousted From Dance

Some of the Negro patients who were being visited by their wives and sweethearts, went to the dance given for "wounded servicemen" and their guests. A Red Cross worker approached the dancing Negro couples and asked them to leave the hall.

Several of the white soldiers—particularly those who have been overseas—objected to their Negro buddies being ordered out. But the Red Cross worker was adamant.

The story of the insult and discrimination spread. When the Red Cross a couple days later sought to obtain a regular quota of blood donations at the Annex, the Negro soldiers, who normally give 60 to 120 pints, gave only 20 pints. The resulting loss was from 5 to 12 gallons. The men told the commanding officer the reason for refusing to give when he inquired at request of the Red Cross.

D. C. Police Halt Protest Meeting Against Red Cross Blood Jim Crow

Members of the Metropolitan Police Department of Washington shown informing a group of 300 blood donors that they will not be permitted to hold an open air meeting scheduled in protest of Red Cross blood segregation policies, because of their failure to obtain a police permit or permission from the owners of the building which houses the center.

The five young women shown above were among 300 who contributed 300 pints of blood at the D.C. blood donor center on Labor Day, accompanied by protests. They are, left to right, Misses Charlotte Parkus, Frances Jones, Bernice Narcisse, Helen Schonick and Lanng Beran.

Since the group had not obtained the permit necessary for the holding of a meeting on property under control of the Metropolitan police, Captain Joseph Pearson of the second precinct informed them that there was no place in the vicinity that the meeting could be held unless it was on the steps of the Acacia Life Insurance Building which houses the donor center.

When permission for the use of the steps was denied by Acacia officials, the meeting was called off.

Although more than 200 persons were on hand for the meeting, there was no disturbance or disorder of any type and the squad of ten plainsclothesmen, present to augment the six uniformed Metropolitan policemen and like number of Capitol policemen, amused themselves by playing car poker and batting about a soft ball borrowed from a passing youngster.

Dr. William H. Hastie, president o fthe D.C. branch of the NAACP, is shown protesting the denial of the right to hold the meeting. Captain Joseph Pearson of the Second Precinct stated that his men were merely following orders and seeing that regulations were upheld.

Labor Day Demonstration Broken Up After Group Presents 300 Pints

Though D.C. and Capitol regulations, enforced by more than 22 Metropolitan and U.S. Capitol police, prevented the holding of a scheduled open-air protest meeting, members of the Washington labor and race rganizations presnted 300 pints of blood to the D.C. blood donor center on Labor Day.

Accompanying the blood donations were 300 protests at the Red Cross policy of blood segregation according to the race of the donor.

Letter to O'Conor

Earlier, a letter had been sent to Basil O'Conor, director of the American Red Cross, pointing out the lack of scientific jurisdiction for the practice and protesting its continuation on behalf of members of the organizations supporting the demonstration.

Behind the contributions and the protests were members of the United Federal Workers of America, CIO; the Washington Industrial Union Council, the D.C. branches of the NAACP and National Negro Congress, and the Laborers' Union, AF of L.

Blood Segregation Is Protested Anew

CIO-New York, N.Y.

The Newark Interracial Council announced yesterday that it has again volunteered its services to the Newark Chapter of the American Red Cross in its 1944 campaign for funds, at the same time continuing its policy of protest against the Red Cross' segregation policies.

The Council is actively raising funds for the Red Cross, and carrying on also a program of intergroup education in which it is exposing to the public the scientific facts concerning blood plasma and the un-American policy of blood segregation." 3-17-44

In co-operation with various Newark organizations, the Council has prepared a petition form which calls for funds for the Red Cross and, at the same time, solicits signatures of protest against the separate blood bank policy of the Red Cross. The forms have been widely circulated in Newark.

Dr. Charles Drew, Surgeon — A Study in Blood and Race

PM New York, N.Y.
3-30-44

MEMORANDUM: To Reps. John Rankin and Andrew J. May.

SUBJECT: Race, Blood and White Supremacy.

You'll appreciate, I'm sure, the juicy irony in the story of Dr. Charles R. Drew, professor of surgery at Howard University. Dr. Drew has just been awarded the Spingarn Medal for "the highest and noblest achievement" by an American Negro, presented annually by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. Dr. Drew rates the award for his outstanding work in blood plasma.

And thereby hangs an instructive tale, gentlemen. Dr. Drew, who had done brilliant research in blood plasma with Dr. John Scudder at the Presbyterian-Columbia Medical Center in New York, set up the first big plasma bank in this country, in answer to an urgent call for help from Britain during the awful blitz period of September, 1940. Drew was unanimously chosen to direct the project by a distinguished group of blood experts as "the best qualified of anyone we know to act in this important development."

In a review of this pioneer work, the Blood Transfusion Betterment Assn. stated: 3-30-44

"Since Drew, who is a recognized authority on the subject of blood preservation and blood substitutes, and, at the same time, an excellent organizer, has been in charge, our major troubles have vanished."

Drew was appointed first director of the American Red Cross blood plasma bank in New York City when it was set up in 1941. His organization became a model for other Red Cross blood banks.

Here's the cream of the jest, gentlemen. At the very time Drew was setting up this Red Cross blood bank, helping save thousands of American lives through his brilliant scientific and admisistrative work, his blood would have been rejected by the Red Cross had he offered to donate it. Later, when the Red Cross modified its policy and accepted Negro blood on a Jim Crow basis, his blood would have been segregated with that of other Negroes.

All because of the blind, baseless prejudices of gentlemen like yourselves. Red Cross officials will freely admit that their blood segregation policy represents an appeasement to prejudice. There is no scientific basis whatever for segregated blood in plasma banks.

Dr. Drew — who is only 39 — is now chief of surgery at Freedman's Hospital in Washington, D. C., besides teaching surgery at Howard. His scholastic career was phenomenal. He was loaded down with honors during his undergraduate years. At McGill University Medical School at Montreal—one of the finest medical schools on the continent—he won first prize in physiological anatomy, obtained the Rosenwald Fellowship in Medicine, and graduated with top honors.

While gathering these scholastic honors, he gained international renown as an athlete. He was National Junior AAU champion in high-hurdles in 1926 and all-time top scorer in Canadian intercollegiate track competition at McGill. 3-30-44

Drew not only holds an M. D. degree, but obtained also the coveted Doctor of Medical Science degree as a result of four years of post-graduate work at Columbia University's College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Handsome, modest, well-endowed both physically and mentally, he is a living refutation of the myth of white supremacy. He has fought his way up through the dense mass of discrimination that only a Negro knows. He is all American calibre, a man deserving homage from all, black and white.

Policy Refutes Our War Aims, Asserts White

NEW YORK—(SNS)—In a congratulatory message to Basil O'Connor, newly appointed President of the American Red Cross, Walter White, NAACP Secretary, urged immediate reversal of the current segregation policy between Negro and white blood plasma.

Asserting it has done more than any other act to depress the morale of American Negroes and of many white Americans, Mr. White pointed out that "Our Axis enemies have used this policy of segregation to convince colored people of the world that our country is not sincere when it says that it is fighting against the racial theories of Adolph Hitler while at the same time it practices a similar master theory." 8-5-44

Commenting on the increasing need for blood plasma at this time, Mr. White said, "Courageous action by the Red Cross in reversing its present policy, will we know, result in the immediate donating of of blood by many hundreds of Americans, Negro and white, who want to do their utmost but who have been stopped by the segregation policy of the American Red Cross, the Army and the Navy."

Mr. O'Connor, who is Trustee and Executive Chairman of the Georgia Warm Springs Foundation, and a senior member in the firm of O'Connor and Farber, was the law partner of President Rooseevlt from 1925 to 1933.

New Red Cross Head Stands Pat on Jim-Crow Blood Bank

PM New York, N.Y. 8-4-44

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—Basil O'Connor, who was recently appointed by President Roosevelt as chairman of the American Red Cross to succeed the last Norman Davis, expects to continue the present policy of segregating the blood of Negro and white donors for plasma banks intended for the armed forces.

"I contemplate making no change in the present policies of the Red Cross in general, including that governing the blood banks," O'Connor told me. He did add, however, that his present position didn't preclude the possibility of reconsideration of the Jim-Crow blood policy in the future, in consulatation with military authorities.

Basil O'Connor

Mr. O'Connor's statement blasts the hope of some liberals that the change in Red Cross directorship might bring about a reversal of the shameful segregation stand that has caused more resentment among the Nation's 13,000,000 Negroes than any other single wartime factor with the exception of the Army's Jim-Crow policy. Liberals based their hope largely on O'Connor's previous record as a promoter of racial and religious amity. He is an active member of the Conference of Jews and Christians. 8-4-44

The Jim-Crow policy pursued by the American Red Cross is absolutely indefensible on either scientific or humanitarian grounds. Physiologists and other scientific experts have pointed out time and again that there is no difference whatsoever in the blood of whites, Negroes or any other race. (The skin color of the different races is caused by pigmentation of certain glands underlying the skin; blood plays no part whatever.) The Red Cross position on segregated blood represents outright appeasement to prejudice and ignorance. It is the one great blemish in the otherwise notable war record of the Red Cross. The racist bloc in Congress has been a powerful factor in preventing that humanitarian agency from changing a morale-weakening policy conceved in error and continued in cowardly appeasement.

Red Cross doctors in several Northern blood-collecting centers have been so disgusted with the anti-scientific segregation policy that they haven't bothered to label blood donations as white or colored.

O'Connor, a genial, well-disposed man, a close friend of the President and his former law partner, shouldn't be judged too harshly for his failure to reverse the long-standing policy of the Red Cross. New to his post (which he fills without pay), unfamiliar with the long, complicated and painful story of how the present policy was developed, anxious to learn more about the vast undertaking he now heads, he may feel that other factors outweigh the rumpus that might be stirred up if the present policy is ditched—no matter how unsut or unsound it is. He may yet be persuaded to change his mind.

Meanwhile, it is to be hoped that liberals and union workers—in our armed forces. The blood does get to GI Joe, regardless of policy.

Negro and white—who have opposed the Jim-Crow policy will nevertheless continue to pour their blood into the plasma banks so vitally needed to save the wounded

Basil O'Connor Announces Continuance Of Blood Bank Segregation In The Red Cross

In response to a letter from Basil O'Connor announcing continuation of the blood plasma segregation policy, Walter White expressed sharp disappointment about the attitude of the newly appointed Red Cross head. In a communication to the latter, Mr. White said: "I had honestly hoped that you would show more courage and forthrightness in your approach to what is one of the most shameful episodes and practices in this war for human liberation."

Referring to the southern origin of the United States Surgeon General responsible as a single individual for the establishment of the unscientific policy now being protested on all sides, Mr. White pointed out "It had been our hope that the American Red Cross would have the moral courage to admit that it had made a mistake and that it would have initiative enough to say frankly to the Honorary president of the American Red Cross, the President of the United States, and to the Army and Navy that it could not be a party to a practice and doctrine which savors more of Hitler's theory of a "master race" than of a democracy."

Denouncing the excuse made by Basil O'Connor that "From the point of view of all the people of the United States, the present arrangement is the best possible in all of the circumstances," Mr. White declared in closing, "It is this same lack of moral courage which is responsible, from my personal observations in four war theatres of operations, for the surrender to and the spreading by the Red Cross of patterns of segregation and discrimination which hold it not only up to question of its bona fides, but America as well."

No Basis for Red Cross JC Either

NASHVILLE—The Red Cross's policy of segregating blood of colored Americans is a "concession to prejudice for which there is absolutely no biological basis," Dr. Otto Klineberg, professor of psychology at Columbia University, declared here Friday.

Dr. Klineberg was speaking at the American Missionary Association's three-week Race Institute in session at Fisk University.

He declared that type A blood in colored people is the same as it is in whites, Australians or Hottentots.

Hopkins Caters to Whites

He cited the case of Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, which maintains a separate blood bank for colored and white patients as an example of how hospitals also cater to the prejudices of their clientele.

Dr. Klineberg stated that there is no correlation between physique, stature, color, etc., and mentality and that there is no reason to suppose that people who differ physically will differ mentally.

He said also that it is impossible to discover what criterion to use in distinguishing race, pointing out that some have advocated color and head shape, both of which are not conclusive.

Eliminate Word "Race"

He added that classification on the basis of race is an "outdated and outworn pastime" and advocated the elimination of the term "race" because it creates a false idea of differences.

He admitted that his view represented the minority view among scientists.

In discussing the question of race mixture, Dr. Klineberg said that any two groups of human beings can intermarry and have perfectly healthy offspring.

The nature of the offspring, he said, depends in a large measure on the kind of genes, stating that if there are healthy genes in both parties, the offspring will have good healthy genes.

Advantages, the Key

He indicated further that given the same educational, economical, and social advantages, colored people will end up with the same kind of mentality and response as other groups.

The only circumstance under which a race may have a distinctive mentality, he said, occurs when a small group has isolated itself and interbred and the result is a small physically homogenous group.

Race Barriers Collapse; White Donors Aid Mother In Chicago Daily; Save Her Life

Kindness crashed the color line here this week.

Red Cross' Jim Crow blood banks notwithstanding, white blood doners are willing to mix their blood with Negroes to save a life.

Stricken and near death, a 34-year-old Negro mother faced a life or death test of Senator Bilbo's and A. Hitler's pure blood policy.

She is Mrs. Clara Saladin. She is alive today because some 200 white donors did not believe in the pure-blood bogey.

Shrunk from 130 to 98 pounds, and needing a rare type of blood to build up resistance for a critical operation, Mrs. Saladin appealed through a daily newspaper for blood donations.

She had been confined for seven weeks here at the Women and Children's hospital. Her letter, printed on Thanksgiving day, frankly faced the race issue and stated:

"I think it fair that I let you know I am a Negro. I can't believe that will make much difference when a person wants only a chance to live."

Race and color prejudice apparently collapsed in face of this appeal. Offers of blood poured into the hospital.

Among some 200 race-unconscious donors, only 11 were found to have the correct type: 2 R.H., negative. They were all white.

Hospital officials state that Mrs. Saladin will receive transfusions from the donors at two-day intervals until her resistance is sufficient for surgery. She is suffering from intestinal tumors. It will take at least three transfusions before she can withstand surgery, officials stated.

Mrs. Saladin lives at 2318 S. State street with her husband, Harry, 37, a mechanic, and one of their two sons, Calvin, 16, a junior at Waller high school. Calvin is also a member of the Civil Air Patrol.

Her second son, Gerald, 18, is working on a Mississippi farm.

CHICAGO—(ANP) — More than 200 Chicagoans last week forgot racial barriers and rallied to the cause of shutting out death from the Saladin family when it was publicized that the mother, Mrs. Clara Saladin, 34, was in need of a rare type of blood.

Now resting easy in the Women and Children's hospital, the woman Saturday was given her second transfusion of blood by a second white person.

Mother of two boys, Calvin, 16, a high school junior and Gerald, 18, now working on a Mississippi farm, Mrs. Saladin last week seeking to procured blood donors, directed a letter to a Chicago daily, stating:

"I think it fair that I let you know I am a Negro. I can't believe that will make much difference when a person wants only a chance to live."

Scarcely four or five hours had passed when more than 200 persons had offered their blood but doctors found only 11 of the number to possess the rare 2 R. H., negative type. All the 11 were whites.

Mrs. Saladin, in the hospital for the past seven weeks, has come down from the 130 pounds which she normally weighs, to 98 pounds.

Hit Jim Crow Blood Banks In Louisville

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Jim Crow blood banks collected by the Louisville Chapter of the American Red Cross were hit when members of an interracial conference, held at Presbyterian Theological Seminary last week, asked that the blood of both races be collected and pooled together instead of segregating colored donors at Beecher Terrace Health and other centers of Negro population.

The conference led by Dr. Harvey Curtis Webster of the University of Louisville, and sponsored by the Union for Democratic Action and the Louisville Committee of the Kentucky Council on Interracial Co-operation, recommended specific actions on problems affecting race relations and agreed to appoint a steering committee to continue the program outlined at the conference.

Asks Job Rights

Frank Stanley of the Louisville Defender, head of the "general community contacts and conflicts" division, and Miss Louise Diecks, acting city director of welfare, urged that downtown stores adjust their policy towards Negroes and encourage their trade. Other recommendations from this committee were that Negroes be represented in the housing units on the basis of need rather than population; that training facilities be provided for Negro doctors and nurses and that the Louisville Railway company be asked to employ Negroes as operators on its transportation facilities.

A minimum wage-and-hour law for domestic workers was asked by Mrs. Emmet F. Horine and Mrs. Mahalie Holman who recommended standardization of domestic work it was pointed out that the approximately 4,000 domestic workers in Louisville receive a weekly pay of $12 to $18, compared to some 14,000 and provisions for old-age security. Racial Bloods

THE FURORE caused by orders given a couple of years ago prohibiting the use of Negroes as donors for the United States Army has died out. It would seem that by now all well informed persons are aware of the ridiculousness of the idea that there is any racial superiority or inferiority as regards blood plasma for saving life.

Yet several requests have recently been received for information on the subject. An indubitably authoritative statement on the matter is supplied by the following quotation from the "Queries and Minor Notes" Section of the Journal of the American Medical Association for May 16, 1942:

'Numerous chemical and serologic investigations have yielded no evidence that the blood of one race can be distinguished from that of another. Manoiloff, a Russian investigator, devised for the differentiation of races a chemical test of the blood based on oxidation reactions, color changes in dyes serving as indicators.

"He and his colleagues claimed that they were able to distinguish by this method the blood of Russians, Jews and Ukrainians, but subsequent investigations by other workers have failed to substantiate their conclusions. The test was not applied to distinguish Negroes and Caucasians. This particular problem has been investigated chiefly by immunologists. Bruck stated that by means of complement fixation tests he could distinguish the serum of a Caucasion, a Negro, a Malayan, a Chinese and an Arab.

"His experiments were repeated by many investigators, especially Marshall and Teague and Landsteiner and Miller, none of whom could corroborate his data. Using the serum of a Caucasian, a Negro, a Japanese, a Negrito and a Tagalog as antigens for comparison, Marshall and Teague could find no difference among them.

"Fitzgerald, in similar experiments, used the serum of a Caucasian, a Japanese and a Negro and obtained results that led him to say that 'the existence of specific (serologic) differences has not been proven.'

'Landsteiner and Miller on repetition of Bruck's experiments, stated that if serologic differences exist between Negroes and white persons they are much smaller than those between man and the anthropoid apes. The significance of this statement is shown by the difficulty experienced by Nuttall in distinguishing between the primates and man by means of the precipitin test.

"In a review, Landsteiner wrote that the only serologic peculiarities observed are those concerning isohemagglutinins and that these are not such as to demonstrate the existence of slight but regular differences by which the race of an individual could be ascertained but have only statistical significance and deal with the frequency of certain properties. In this respect these serologic qualities are comparable to more or less distinguishing but not always constant attributes of a race, like the color of the eyes or hair or body weight.

"Wiener reached a similar conclusion as to the general failure to disclose race specific antigens. He stated: 'Attempts have also been made to produce sera which would serve to differentiate the blood of different races of the human species. Thus far all attempts have failed.' There is, therefore, no factual basis for the discrimination against the use of Negro blood or plasma for injection into white people.

"The present agitation arises from the inopportune publication of orders prohibiting the inclusion of Negro plasma in the proposed military plasma bank. The aversion perhaps represents the persistence of the ancient folklore that one's personality is closely associated with one's blood. Frequently used cliches, such as 'noble blood,' are remnants remaining in the language from a day when such supersitions were more prevalent than they now are.

"Blood transfusions were originally practiced with the blood of stockyard animals. This practice was discontinued not because of an aversion to the source of the blood, but because of severe and frequently fatal reactions. Patients repeatedly receive into the veins serum from rabbits, horses, sheep and other lower animals. These substances are received with an equanimity that is completely inconsistent with the aversion often associated with the injection of blood as much like that of the recipient as two substances can be."

Congress Ends Without Permanent FEPC, Other Pro-Negro Measures

Anti-Poll Tax, Army Discrimination Other Progressive Bills Hit 'Snags'

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON, (ANP)—The historic 78th Congress came to an end last week without establishing a permanent FEPC, or abolishing the poll tax, or providing protection for Negroes in the armed forces against assault by civilians.

While important legislation in- fluenced largely by the incidence of war was enacted during the session, none of it was designed to meet the special needs of Negroes against the evils of economic, political and social insecurity — today or in the post-war period. On the other hand, activity was great.

Poll Tax Bills Dropped

The poll tax bills were dropped into the hopper on the first day of the first session, yanked out of the rules committee in less than six days, and swept through the house by a vote of 265 to 110. In the senate, however, it went through protracted consideration, some hearings on constitutional phases, and finally came up on the floor in the early summer. A filibuster ensued and the senate refused to vote electure. 12-23-44

At the request of the war department the chairmen of the two military committees presented legislation which would extend the jurisdiction of the federal government in the prosecution of offenses against men in the uniform of the United States. The bill passed the senate in February and although reported by the House group, had to go before the rules committee where it still reposes.

Present FEPC Not Invited To Congressional Hearings

Tribune—Philadelphia, Pa.
11-18-44

WASHINGTON, (ANP)—Although it is extremely likely that congressional committee and possibly floor discussion of permanent FEPC legislation will come up in the next few weeks before the 78th congress expires, the present agency has not yet formulated any views as to the soundness of the bills now under consideration by committees of both houses.

11-18-44

Because of the opinion held by some outside of FEPC that the agency is willing to see "any kind" of bill passed so long as it gives permanency, officials of the committee were asked to discuss the subject last week.

ChairMalcolm Ross said quite frankly that neither he nor his staff had formed any conclusions regarding the coalition bill now before the senate and house committees on labor and education. Of course, he said, individual members of the staff have probably made personal observations, but none of this has been organized as a committee viewpoint. 11-18-44

Ross explained that when he testified before the house labor committee, he had been instructed to confine himself to the question of need for such a committee, and not to venture opinion upon the particular legislation under consideration. This he did.

The presumption is, however, that in the three years the FEPC has been in business, the experience gained certainly should be of some value to those who are planning for a permanent agency. That such information has not been requested thus far is not the fault of the committee, it is freely recognized. It is nevertheless being considered remiss on the committee's part not to have formulated a set of opinions in preparation for such an invitation, either from public or private groups interested in the legislation.

Last week the National Council for a Permanent FEPC announced its opposition to a "purely advisory" permanent committee, claiming such would be "ineffectual in relation to the problem."

N.Y. Threat to Kill FEPC After the War

Afro American—Baltimore, Md.

Signal Co. Praises Women; Blames Men for Abesenteeism; Lying; Sleeping; Gambling

By RICHARD DIER

9-2-44

NEW YORK—Denouncing the FEPC as a hindrance to the war effort and as a constant source of infection for the creation of racial problems, Herbert Hessler, plant superintendent and assistant personnel director of the Horni Signal Manufacturing Company, frankly states that the employers' time will come after the war ends and the FEPC is abolished.

In an exclusive AFRO interview, the executive of this company, which operates ten plants in New York with over 2,000 employees, bitterly assailed the present tactics used to eliminate discrimination in war industries.

"The FEPC has taken entirely too much authority for itself," he said. "They've gotten to the point where they come in and tell you just how many colored people to hire. I had a recent investigation by the members of that committee and I'm just about fed up.

"I know I'm talking for thousands of employers when I say: just wait until the war's over! There'll be no more FEPC. You can bet on that, and then we'll run things our own way.

"They have no idea of what we're up against when we hire colored people. Don't think I'm against employing them. In fact, I was the one to suggest to the company that we take them on.

"Right now, we have colored women working on machines, on the assembly lines, and also as matrons. They're doing a damn good job, too. We have no kick coming about them. 9-2-44

Men Blamed

"It's the colored men employees who are giving us the trouble. We started putting them to work in the shop, and they always looked around for a place to fall asleep during working hours.

"They showed no interest in the work. They gambled, played the numbers, and we had to get rid of them because they were breaking the morale of our white employees.

"We employ colored men now as guards only. To prevent any friction, even the chief guard is colored. As far as I know, there has never been any trouble between our white employees and our colored guards.

"That's a pretty good record, when you consider that the whites have to have their packages and pocketbooks inspected by the guards when they come in to work and when they go home.

"We've had a hell of a lot of trouble with our colored guards.

Police Records

"When they put in their applications for employment with us, they lie like hell. They claim to have had no police records. When we send their applications down to the police department to be checked, we find all sorts of things charged against them.

"Naturally, we can't hire them because of this, and the police department is angry because we always bother them. But we have to get the records checked because we are manufacturing vital equipment for the armed forces, and we must be careful whom we hire. 9-2-44

"We had one colored guard who stole a company pistol out of the plant. We had some tough job getting it back.

"Others come in drunk on the job. It's not an easy situation.

"When I first put colored girls on the assembly line, a few white girls resented it and I let them walk out. After a few weeks, the other whites got used to working with them and now they think nothing of it.

No Racial Trouble

"I've always done my best to see that both races get along well on the job. We've had no racial trouble here in the past two years. I'm proud of that record.

"The colored women are doing a fine job in the shop. As for colored men, I've had my experience with them. I'll never put one of them to work in the shop. They're no good, no matter what the FEPC comes around and tells me." 9-2-44

Personal Observations:

Mr. Hessler's hatred for the FEPC is similar to that which so many of our industrialists have. They resent anybody's telling them a few things about economic and racial equality. If these executives practiced tolerance, they wouldn't resent having friendly discussions with the FEPC.

The fact is, they know they're guilty of discrimination and they don't want to do anything about it nor have any governmental agency bring it to their attention. They're guilty of two things: hatred of colored people, and interference in the running of their business.

all the more reason to fight for the continuation of the FEPC as a permanent governmental agency, with more power than it has now.

President Roosevelt Declares For Permanent FEPC; Wants Post-War Period Free From Discrimination

The New York Age. 11.4.

CHICAGO, Ill.—Speaking before record turnout of voters here Saturday night, President Roosevelt urged the Congress to make the FEPC which he created by executive order a permanent body. The President also outlined his domestic policy and specifically warned that there must be no discrimination because of color.

11-4-44

"The American people," said President Roosevelt, "are resolved that when our men and women return home from this war they shall come back to the best possible place on the face of this earth, they shall come back to a place where all persons, regardless of race or color or creed or place of birth, where they can live in peace and honor and human dignity—free to speak, free to pray as they wish—free from want and free from fear."

"Last January, in my message to the Congress on the state of the Union, I outlined an economic bill of rights on which a new basis of security and prosperity can be established for all.' And I repeat it now:

"The right of a useful and remunerative job in industries, in shops, on the farms, or the mines

"The right to earn enough to provide adequate food and clothing and recreation;

"The right of every farmer to raise and sell his product for a return which will give him and his family a decent living;

"The right of every business man, large and small, to trade in an atmosphere of freedom from unfair competition, from domination by monopolies at home or abroad.

11-4-44

"The right of every family to a decent home;

"The right to adequate medical care and the opportunity to achieve and enjoy good health;

"The right to adequate protection from the economic fears of old age, of accident, or unemployment;

" And last of all the right to a good education."

Talking about the F. E. P. C. which he created by executive order, President Roosevelt said:

"And with all that our economic bill of rights, like the sacred Bill of Rights of our Constitution itself, must be applied to all our citizens, irrespective of race, or creed or color.

"Three years ago, back in 1941, I appointed a Fair Employment Practice Committee to prevent discrimination in war industry and Government employment. The work of that committee and the results obtained more than justify its creation.

11-4-44

"I believe that the Congress of the United States should by law make the committee permanent."

BILL PASSES BY SCANT MARGIN OF FOUR VOTES

Faces Stiffer Opposition When Measure Comes Before Senate

By VENICE SPRAGGS
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON — Passing the House by a four-vote margin of 123 to 119, Saturday, the proposed new funds for the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices faces an even stiffer opposition and the possibility of defeat in the Senate.

Included in the omnibus War Agencies Appropriation Bill of $1,033,358,367, one of the largest votes against any war appropriation was registered in the 247 to 58 roll call vote when the $500,000 for FEPC was allowed to stand in.

Southern Democrats led the fight against the agency they claimed was promoting racial disunity and was "discriminating against the white people," and provided most of the 58 votes cast against the bill in final passage.

6-3-44

Republicans Change Vote

On two preliminary tests made with the House in Committee status the FEPC appeared to have been put out of business. Rep. Malcolm C. Tarver, Democrat, of Georgia offered an amendment which would strike the FEPC appropriation from the bill.

On a standing vote taken while the House was in committee status the Tarver amendment was adopted tentatively by 139 to 95 receiving strong support from the Republicans.

Rep. Marcantanio (American Labor Party, N. Y.) demanded tellers. Again about half of the Republicans supported the Tarver proposal and it again was adopted tentatively by 141 to 103. In the House proper the Republicans torn between a stand against agencies created by executive order without legislative sanction, and political expediency in a campaign year switched their vote. A teller vote of 123 to 119 set aside the earlier committee vote.

6-3-44

Exemption of FEPC Possible

An agreement has been reached on the amendment to the Independent Office Bill now in conference which will permit agencies created by executive order to continue until January 1, only unless appropriations are made for their maintenance.

6-3-44

The amendment sponsored by Senator Richard B. Russell, Democrat of Georgia is conceded to have been designed to kill FEPC. If the appropriation voted by the House gets through the Senate FEPC will be exempt from the provisions of the Russell amendment.

Getting off to a heated debate on the preliminary procedure by which Chairman Clarence Cannon, Democrat of Missouri had obtained unanimous consent in the House earlier in the week to waive all points of order on the bill, the foes of the FEPC disputed bitterly the parliamentary triumph which side-tracked the use of the technicalities with which they had expected to block the appropriation.

Challenging Rep. Hobbs, Democrat of Alabama who claimed that "under this infamous, nefarious FEPC, the majority of the American people, the bulk of the taxpayers, are being discriminated against every day, and that the FEPC is denying white people the right to work or is ousting them from their employment." Rep. Vito Marcantonia declared that the FEPC "did not compel anybody to work," that it confined itself to only one activity, "the prevention of discrimination against anyone because of race, color, or creed."

Dawson Defends FEPC

Representative William L. Dawson, Democrat of Illinois, noticeably stirred by the invalidity of the Southern Representative's argument rose in defense of the FEPC saying, "I too am an American and in making my claim to that I apologize to no man. By every rule that you may measure men, apply it to me and see if I measure up to the test."

6-3-44

Speaking of his service in the first World War and showing a scar on his forehead resulting from mustard gas he said, "I volunteered then because I was an American. In the war we were called to the colors but we were not called back to work."

The FEPC Dawson said had been appointed merely to "give the Negro a fair chance at employment, it had no power to compel anyone to do anything. Their work should be continued."

6-23-44

Amendments of Georgia Senator Added to Bill

WASHINGTON. — The President's Fair Employment Practice Committee was saved Tuesday, when, by a 38 to 21 vote, its $500,000 appropriation was approved. After vicious debate in which the senate sank to the lowest levels of dignity, honesty and democracy, 22 Democrats and 16 Republicans upheld the appropriation.

Thirteen Southern senators, one Western Democrat, Johnson of Colorado, and seven Republicans voted against the measure.

After refusing to adopt the amendment offered by Senator Russell of Georgia to strike FEPC from the 1,030-million dollar war agencies supply bill, the senate adopted Russell's amendments to prohibit use of the $500,000 appropriation to pay the salaries of any persons on the staff who (1) initiate or investigate or otherwise work on any complaint where the person accused of discriminating does not have the right to appeal any ruling to the President; (2) work on any case which might result in seizure of the plant by federal authorities, or (3) violate any act of congress by orders or directives or recommendations of the FEPC.

The senate, after being told by Senator Thomas of Utah, who called the amendments "conniving and subtle," and by Senator Chavez of New Mexico and Senator Mead of New York that it was killing FEPC after voting to continue it, refused to pass Russell's amendment to prohibit consideration or investigation of complaints wherein there might be an existing contract between a labor union and an employer.

It likewise defeated another in which Russell sought to limit the FEPC to use of not more than 25 per cent of the funds for employment of persons of minority groups which represent less than 15 per cent of the total population of the United States.

Senators Bilbo of Mississippi, McClellan of Arkansas, Eastland of Mississippi and George of Georgia were leaders of the "white superiority" arguments. Senator Pepper of Florida was the only Democrat from the Deep South who voted for FEPC's appropriation.

The southern politicians alone hold out against reason and conscience. They dare not trust their fortunes to honest elections and a fair count. They need the "race" issue and so cling to it in spite of all inconsistencies.

The FEPC as operated under President Roosevelt's executive order insisted that no barrier to the employment of Negroes should exist in plants doing work for the government. To have it otherwise would have meant that Negroes could not work on production for which they helped to pay. Only the southerners dare defend that discrimination. And they do it indirectly, claiming that the FEPC program amounts to dictating to employes whom they shall hire.

Let's consider that charge: If unions under authority of the Wagner act use their bargaining power selfishly, if they refuse to open their doors to all workers, regardless of race, the law, speaking through the mouth of "white" unions already says Negroes may not be hired! The FEPC would only be restoring equilibrium when it says Negroes shall not be discriminated against.

Discrimination and segregation are not for a democratic plan of community life. We ought not need an FEPC, but we do so long as we have "race" as a political issue.

Governor Dewey's Mistake

Courier - Pittsburgh, Pa 4-1-44

Great oaks from little acorns grow and catastrophes spring from slight errors. 4-1-44

This is likely to be brought home to Governor Thomas E. Dewey sooner than he thinks.

Famous as a racket-buster and with an excellent record as chief executive of our most populous State, Governor Dewey of New York has long held the lead among Republican aspirants to head the G.O.P. in the 1944 Presidential election.

But Governor Dewey made a little mistake last week that may bring about his downfall, when he by-passed the demand of New York liberals, colored and white, for the enactment of a State Fair Employment Practices Act, and appointed a committee instead to gather more facts on the Negro problem—as if there were not enough available already.

From the angry criticism of the Governor's action which comes from all sides, it would appear that the colored citizens of the Empire State have soured on Mr. Dewey overnight.

This would be serious enough in a key State in a Presidential election year when the balloting is bound to be very close; but it is even worse for Mr. Dewey when it is considered that Negro voters everywhere are dead set against any candidate even slightly suspected of having no interest in their fight for more and better jobs.

They are bound to ask "If he by-passed a State FEPC, will he not by-pass a National FEPC?"

Logic is of course on their side, because we have to judge men on their records and not on their speeches.

We do not pretend to know what Governor Dewey can do now to appease the Negro voters, but if he wants their vote he had better give a better demonstration in New York of his friendliness toward them, or his chances of getting into the White House will be very slim.

And this goes for all the other men with ambitions to lead this Nation, wherever and whoever they may be.

Congress Urged to Fulfill Campaign Pledges on FEPC

PM New York

By Elizabeth Donahue

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29—Campaign pledges by both major political parties to establish a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission will be tested in this session of Congress.

Chairman Mary Norton (D., N. J.) of the House Labor Committee, with the backing of a majority of her Committee colleagues, is requesting that the measure setting up a permanent FEPC be given a number one priority on the legislative calendar. 11-27-44

Mrs. Norton is first requesting the House Rules Committee to make way for the FEPC bill immediately. The Rules group is responsible for determining how and when important bills reach the floor for final action. If the Rules Committee pigeonholes the measures, Mrs. Norton will resort to the only other possible device for forcing action in this session. PM

She will start a petition among members of the House and if she succeeds in persuading 218 members to indorse the bill ,it must be acted on before adjournment next month.

Meanwhile, although companion legislation has been favorably reported to the Senate some weeks ago, there is no indication that the Senate sponsors of a permanent FEPC will press for action before adjournment. Sen. Dennis Chavez (D., N. M.), the logical man to bring the measure to the floor, will not return to Washington until Dec. 4.

The House abor Committee which acted favorably yesterday was divided 9-5 on the legislation. The only Republican who opposed it was Rep. Clare Hoffman of Michigan.

In recognition of the Committee's action the National Council for establishment of a Permanent FEPC issued a statement declaring: "The Committee's action, so soon after the campaign is a good test of campaign pledges. Both the Republican and Democratic political leadership promised enactment of this measure. Both parties supported it in the House Labor Committee."

Despite the fact that a temporary Fair Employment Practice Committee, set up by order of the President, has curbed racial discriminations in war industries, minority groups are demanding that the Government establish a permanent policy insuring them equal job opportunities.

Davis Shows How State Failed To Protect Negro Nurse's Job

By HARRY RAYMOND

The urgent need for strong amendments to the proposed New York State FEPC bills was stressed to the State Commission Against Discrimination yesterday by City Councilman Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., Manhattan Communist, through his recital of a typical case of job discrimination against a Negro girl by a county official and buck-passing on the matter by state agencies all the way up to Gov. Dewey's office.

Ben Davis, Jr.

Miss Bettie L. Brown, 594 Teasdale Pl., had qualified last year as a public health nurse. Davis testified at a hearing of the commission, and early this year reported at the Clinton County Public Health Committee in Plattsburg to fill a vacancy, but was barred from the job because of her color.

She was forced by Edward Gallant, chairman of the Health Committee, to resign the position because "there were no Negroes in the community" and she might be in "danger personally," Davis said.

The case was then taken to the State Department of Civil Service in Albany, which stated it had "no authority" in the matter, Davis continued. Miss Brown was subjected to a grand run-around, with the Director of Public Health Nursing offering "sympathy" and the State Committee on Discrimination in Employment holding conferences with the Department of Health and the Civil Service Commission, but getting nowhere.

DEWEY PASSES BUCK

Then, according to Davis, Miss Brown wrote directly to Gov. Dewey, and the governor's assistant counsel referred her back to the Committee on Discrimination. Finally, Davis explained, Dr. Alvin Johnson, chairman of that committee advised Miss Brown the committee unfortunately had no power in the case, as its field extended "only to concerns having war contracts."

Davis congratulated Dr. Johnson, vice-chairman of the present investigating commission, for his stand in labeling the case "a disgraceful situation" and for his work on the commission in behalf of stringent anti-bias laws.

AMENDMENTS SUGGESTED

He pointed out, however, that the commission should go further by amending its tentative bills setting up a permanent five-man State FEPC. He asked that the loop-holes be plugged with these amendments:

1. That court review of the commission's findings be limited to questions of law.

2. That the clause disqualifying an investigating commissioner from voting on a finding be eliminated.

3. That the right of complaint be granted not only to the aggrieved person but also to other parties.

4. And that exemptions of non-profit organizations from the law be eliminated.

These amendments were clarified by Harry Sacher, labor attorney, who said there must be "no long study, no run-around, no drawn-out review."

"But the bill makes employment without discrimination a civil right," declared Assembly Majority Leader Irving M. Ives, chairman of the commission. "It is a far-reaching measure."

"That's just it," replied Sacher. "I want you to make the enforcement of the right equally broad."

Councilman Stanley M. Isaacs, Manhattan Republican, and Abraham Isserman, of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, both argued for inclusion of charitable and non-profit organizations, as did Sacher.

The first support by industrialists of the anti-discrimination voiced so far came during today's session from S. J. Novick, president of the Electronic Corp. of America, and Stanley Simon, director of industrial relations of the Bulova Watch Co. A telegram from Thomas J. Watson, president of the International Business Machine Co., declared support of legislation "deemed necessary" to asssure equal rights and opportunities for all "regardless of nationality, religion or color."

Sole opposition to the legislation so far was voiced by industrialist groups in Syracuse and Rochester.

Among others testifying in behalf of the legislation in the big hearing room at the Bar Association were Dorothy Funn, National Negro Congress; Willard Johnson, National Council of Christians and Jews; Mayor Stanley Church of New Rochelle; Assemblymen William T. Andrews and Hulan Jack of Harlem; the Rev. David Licorish, of the National Postwar Planning Commission; William H. Kilpatrick, Urban League; J. M. Carpenter, Brooklyn Council of Churches; Rev. W. D. Clemens, N. Y. State Council of Churches.

Dr. George Hallett of the Citizens Union, and Ben Hurtzberg, of the American Jewish Committee, supported the bills with substantially no amendments.

Adopts Resolution To Ban Race Bias, Back FEPC

Staff Correspondence

CHICAGO, Nov. 24.—Walter Reuther, UAW vice-president, warned the CIO convention here yesterday that only 200,000 of the present 2,000,000 aircraft workers will be retained in the industry after the war unless a way is found to convert airplane factories to other production.

He proposed that aircraft industry—that part of it not needed for the manufacture of peacetime planes—be converted to the manufacture of pre-fabricated houses.

Reuther said that mass-production housing would make fine, modern homes available to workers for $3000, compared with $8000 for present comparable homes.

Working all day Thanksgiving, the CIO convention heard a number of speakers and adopted other important resolutions.

An anti-discrimination resolution recommended that CIO unions seek to incorporate in future collective bargaining agreements the provision that no person seeking employment shall be discriminated against because of race, creed, color or place of origin. The resolution also called for the end of Jim Crow, the poll tax, and "any other form of discrimination or bigotry." It praised FEPC and demanded that it be made permanent by Congress.

Attack Reilly

The removal of Gerard Reilly as a member of the National Labor Relations Board was demanded in another resolution, on the ground that he "expressed bias and prejudice and unprincipled administration which results in the practical negation of the benefits guaranteed labor" by the Wagner Act.

The convention approved reconversion and postwar tax programs drawn up by a special CIO tax committee. Those programs in substance would exempt from Federal taxes workers making less than $3000 a year; retain present tax rates on corporations and persons with incomes of more than $5000 a year; favor small business, and plug existing loopholes in the inheritance tax.

Price Control

Tightening controls on price and rent control and rationing was demanded in another resolution. The WPB was called on to require the textile industry to produce adequate quantities of necessary clothing and household textiles giving them priority over high-priced lines; and it asked the OPA to establish specific and enforcible prices on clothing and textiles.

"Forthright support" of Government policy and Secretary of State Hull in refusing to recognize the Argentine Government was voted in another resolution. It also encouraged the industrialization of Latin-American nations, with a view to raising the standard of living in those countries.

Describing himself as "a farmer from Manhattan," Mayor La Guardia urged the CIO delegates to establish closer and better relations between workers and farmers.

Utility Firm Asks Strong Anti-Bias Bills

By HARRY RAYMOND

Spokesmen for the Associated Gas and Electric Co. joined with representatives of organized labor, religious, civic and legal bodies yesterday in demanding adoption by state legislature of vigorous fair employment practices laws as the State Commission on Discrimination wound up its seventh and final statewide hearing on a pair of proposed anti-bias bills.

Dennis J. Driscoll, trustee of the power company, told R. Brodsky, International Workers Order; Michael Obermeyer, Hotel and Clarice F. Brows, Restaurant Employes (AFL); counsel, told of bloody revolution," declared the conservative Charles H. Tuttle, Dr. Bella V. Dodd of the Communist Political Association, and counsel for the commission. Commission Chairman Irving M. other witnesses. Ives likewise rebuked Hart, saying:

"You mean to say because Communists are for the bill it's no good. I think the Communists can have some good ideas, too."

Ives challenged Hart's arguments that no laws could make persons of both "principle" and "de- different races work and live together. He pointed to men in the armed services "who are doing so under a Selective Service."

FASCIST-LIKE

The only total opposition to the proposed legislation came from Dr. Bella V. Dodd, Merwin K. Hart, president of the National Economic Council, who in earlier by both all CIO and most AFL spokesmen, stating it would be "impractical" and "inconsistent" a fascist-like amendments to the main bill urged for the law to provide court review of the commission's determination of fact in discrimination cases.

On this point she was in agreement with John F. O'Donnell of the American Labor Party; Saul Mills, city CIO secretary; Rose Russell of the Teachers Union; Joseph

"We've travelled around the state for two weeks but have seen no sign of bloody revolution," declared the conservative Charles H. Tuttle, counsel for the commission.

Ives challenged Hart's arguments that no laws could make persons of different races work and live together. He pointed to men in the armed services "who are doing so under a Selective Service."

He assailed "colored folks" for inciting "lawless demonstrations" and claimed anti-bias laws would lead to "bloody revolution."

"That's due to patriotism," responded Hart.

"Well," declared Ives, "it would be patriotic for all people to live and work together in peace."

Fearl Buck, novelist and educator, criticized those who claim race bias should be eliminated by education and not law.

"We cannot wait for education," she said; "education must be backed by law."

Among the scores of witnesses appearing at the final session for a stronger FEPC law, minus legal loopholes, were: Julius Cohen, Brooklyn Community Council; George E. Haynes, Federal Council of Churches; Thurgood Marshall, National Association for Advancement of Colored People; J. H. Cohen, American Jewish Congress; James V. King, State, County and Municipal Workers of America; Max Meyer, White Plains Friends of Interracial Cooperation.

Also Judge Nathan D. Perlman, Special Sessions Court; James Quinn, Central Trades and Labor Council, AFL; Thomas R. Sullivan, Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians; James H. Shelton, Metropolitan Council for Fair Employment; Dr. John Wade, Superintendent of Schools; Dr. Ordway Teed, chairman of the Board of Higher Education; Charles A. Collins, Hotel and Club Employes Union, AFL.

More than 300 persons testified before the commission during its two weeks of hearing sessions.

Last night the commission adjourned and set Jan. 18 as the date for its next executive session. Meanwhile, a sub-committee of the commission, including Assemblyman Ives, Mr. Tuttle, Robert Benjamin and John Brosnan, is scheduled to go to work rewriting the bills in light of mountains of testimony taken at the hearings.

FEPC Reports More Firms Aid

12-6-44

Daily Worker Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The Committee on Fair Employment Practices reported today that it is getting increased compliance from employers with the President's anti-discrimination executive order.

Summing up FEPC activity in October, Chairman Malcolm Ross said that almost 50 percent of the workers complaining of discrimination were directly benefited.

A total of 120 of the 279 cases closed during the month resulted in satisfactory adjustments, Ross said.

In 11 cases of discriminatory firing, all workers complaining were rehired after FEPC moved. In three out of the four cases involving discriminatory refusal to promote, workers were promoted as part of employment settlements with FEPC.

In two thirds of the cases, complaints were against private industry. But 28.5 percent of the complaints were against private agencies and five percent were against unions.

One of the successes reported by FEPC was in obtaining hiring and training of Negroes in "a large aircraft plant in the deep South. . . . In a variety of jobs above the lower categories."

While FEPC is making inroads into breaking discriminatory practices, it is pointed out that establishment of a permanent FEPC with real powers would lead to far more effective results.

State FEPC Is Opposed By Industry Spokesman

Hearing Is Told That Enforcement Commission Is Unnecessary

By KARL PRETSHOLD
Staff Correspondence

SYRACUSE, Nov. 29.—The first opposition to establishment of the proposed State Fair Employment Practice Commission was voiced here yesterday by Forest E. McGuire, executive vice president of the Syracuse Manufacturers Assn.

McGuire, appearing before the State Commission against Discrimination, said he didn't oppose the general purposes of the proposal to outlaw discrimination, but insisted that a new commission to handle enforcement was unnecessary.

The Discrimination Commission moves on to Rochester today where more than 150 civic leaders and representatives of labor and industry have been invited to appear before it. The Commission is making a survey of public feeling on proposed legislation, which would declare the right to work without regard to race, creed, color or national origin a civil right and would establish a special commission to enforce the law.

Cites Possible Cost

McGuire said enforcement should be handled by the State Labor Dept. and the Industrial Commissioner. Existing laws, he pointed out, ban discrimination in giving employment, and the proposed measure would merely broaden those existing laws by declaring employment to be a civil right.

Speaking for industry, he "took strong exception" to the proposal to set up a five-man commission with members drawing $10,000 a year. The cost of the commission might soon run into several hundred thousand dollars a year, he said.

Under questioning by Commission members, he admitted he was not acquainted with the present work of the Labor Dept. and Industrial Commissioner, and said he didn't know if they were already overburdened with work.

Mrs. Rhea Eckel, executive secretary of the New York State Citizens' Council, testified that one of the most important features of the proposed legislation was that which would encourage local citizens' councils to fight discrimination and work for tolerance.

"Without local backing the whole program might fail," she said. "About 20 upstate cities and towns already have local citizens councils trying to promote goodwill, understanding and co-operation between racial and other groups within the communities."

Not Broad Enough

Sidney Greenberg, Syracuse attorney for the American Labor Party and the Syracuse CIO, said the proposed law deals only with discrimination in employment. He urged that it be widened to prevent discrimination in housing, education, recreation and social welfare. The proposed agency should have power to investigate and act on discrimination anywhere it appears, he insisted.

In opening the hearing, Charles H. Tuttle, Commission counsel, again said the proposed legislation "goes much further" than any legislation either enacted or proposed in any of the states or by the Federal Government. The measure was drawn, and he said it was hoped it would operate, on the theory that it was necessary to go far beyond mere law enforcement.

"This measure invokes the forces of goodwill and conciliation of the state" he said, "and holds actual enforcement in reserve to be used" when conciliation and appeals to good will fail.

Next Congress to Vote FEPC Permanence, Mrs. Norton Says

By Mary Spargo

At the conclusions of hearings yesterday, on a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee, Representative Mary T. Norton, chairman of the House Labor Committee, predicted that the FEPC would be given permanent life by the Sevnty-Ninth Congrss, which takes office in January.

Mrs. Norton said that Republicans were pledged to support the measure by their party platform, and that the new Democratic House members are predominantly liberal. They wil be inclinde to support President Roosevelt's request for such legislation, she declared.

Although Mrs. Norton is attempting to call a session of her committee to report out an FEPC bill next week, the number of members out of town, the Thanksgiving recess and probable adoujrnment of this Congress early in December make action during this session questionable.

A measure creating an FEPC is on the Senate Calendar, but there is little expectation of action on that side either during this Congress.

The House group has three measures to consider, proposed by Representatives Thomas E. Scanlon (D., Pa.), William L. Dawson (D., Ill.) and Charles M. La Follette (R., Ind.).

Unless the soldier votes, counted late this month in Pennsylvania, change the present totals, Scanlon, a member of the Labor Committee, is defeated for reelection and will not return from his district.

Mrs. Norton declared that if Scanlon does not return she will introduce his legislation in the new Congress.

So many members of the powerful House Rules Committee are opposed to the measure, that it is expected that it may have to reach the floor by petition.

Southerners yesterday declared that they would continue their long fight to kill the measure, although many privately admitted that their fight is hopeless.

Senator Richard B. Russell (D., Ga.), declared, "We can keep it from being passed this session, and then maybe we'll have a better chance to block it finally in the next Congress."

Hearings closed yesterday without any opponents of the FEPC having requested to be heard. Mrs. Norton said the record would remain open long enough for opponents to file statements with the committee.

3 Members Of State Committee On Discrimination In Employment Quit In Protest Against Governor Dewey's Killing Of Their Legislative Proposals

Age — New York, N.Y. 4-1-44

The State Committee on Discrimination in Employment lost one-third of its members by resignation on Friday when they met on Friday afternoon at 80 Centre street. Eight of the 25 members resigned in protest against Governor Thomas E. Dewey's tabling of proposed anti-discrimination legislation in a special message to the Legislature on the eve of adjournment.

The resignations followed several weeks of protest by committee members to Gov. Dewey against his silence and indifference towards bills prepared and recommended by the committee to the Legislature. The Governor's special message to the Legislature called for an investigation into the problem of discrimination by a legislative committee of 23 to report in February, 1945.

Those who resigned from the committee, a branch of the State War Council, were:

Dr. Channing H. Tobias, senior secretary of colored work, National Council Y. M. C. A. 4-1-44

Lester B. Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League.

Dr. Myra Logan, prominent Harlem physician.

Dorothy Bellance, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, CIO.

Lewis Gannett, book editor of the Herald Tribune.

Dorothy Strauss, attorney.

Dr. Sidney Goldstein, Free Synagogue.

Louis Weiss, attorney.

Led by Dr. Tobias, five other members of the group resigned on Friday, and two who were absent, Mr. Granger and Dr. Goldstein, followed shortly with their resignations. All joined in signing a strong letter to Governor Dewey which said in part:

4-1-44

Statement of Resignation

"The undersigned hereby resign as members of the Committee on Discrimination in Employment. They have taken this step only after mature deliberation and in the conviction that recent events have left them no practicable or proper alternative. They deeply regret that they feel unable to carry forward, as members of the Committee, a task which they know to be of immediate and crucial importance alike to the war effort, to the minority groups whom they were appointed to assist, and to the people of this state.

. . . "In October, 1943, the conclusion of the Committee — that there was urgent need for one or more new statutes — was communicated to you. The proposals of the Committee, being still inchoate, could not receive definite approval, but you did indicate general interest in the ideas advanced. Thus encouraged, the Committee went forward with its work, and, after studying a wide variety of legislative proposals, prepared two bills. 4-1-44

"One of these looked to the creation of a new civil rights bureau in the State Attorney General's office; the other definitely made it unlawful for employers or labor unions to discriminate against individuals by reason of 'race, color, creed, national origin or ancestry.'

"The substance of these bills received the unanimous approval of the Committee on Discrimination and they were submitted to you on March 1, 1944. You received them sympathetically and indicated to the subcommittee which brought the bills to you that they constituted a new and promising approach to the problem. Obviously you did not — and could not — give them your final approval without further study, but you advised the subcommittee that you would institute that study at once. 4-1-44

"In the period immediately following your receipt of the bills from the Committee, neither the Committee nor its Chairman heard anything from you. The Committee was not advised whether you approved or disapproved the bills nor whether you regarded any changes in the language used in the bills as necessary or desirable. Instead, on March 8, without any notice to the Committee and without any public support from you, the bills were introduced into the State Senate by Senator Wicks. Thereafter, so far as the undersigned know, nothing was done in regard to the entire legislative situation until March 16. On that day, the Chairman of the Committee on Discrimination, by telegram, requested you to give the bills your support and indicated that he and other members of the Committee would regard your failure to do so as a repudiation of the work of the Committee which would leave them no alternative but resignation from the Committee." 4-1-44

Delay Of Year Cited

"On the following day, March 17, you sent to the Legislature your special message in which you called the bills prepared by the Committee 'well intended,' and expressed yourself as 'in accord' with the principles of the bills, but concluded that a new commission should be created to study 'the entire subject of discrimination.' On the following day, the Legislature passed legislation authorizing the new committee which you had requested. Thus all action on the whole problem of discrimination has again been postponed—this time until 1945—while a further commission makes a further study of the entire subject.....

"Your action in proposing a new commission to restudy the problem of discrimination is in essence and in effect a repudiation of the work done by the Committee on Discrimination which leaves its members no alternative but to resign....The urgency and gravity of the problems with which the Committee has concerned itself are so great that a year's further delay in seeking a remedy is, in the opinion of the undersigned, wholly unjustified. Whatever reasons may have moved you to suggest the delay, the undersigned are unwilling, by silence or acquiescence, to share with you the responsibility for the postponement of the action. 4-1-44

"The Committee cannot continue to function without any real power. To the public it is held out as a Committee on Discrimination in Employment and the public believes that it has and exercises extensive powers to reduce such discrimination. The undersigned have studied, and are aware of how limited the Committee's present powers are. They are further aware that, for the present and until the new commission has made its study and recommendations and these have been enacted into law, nothing more can be done. Thus, if the present Committee survives at all, it must go on subject to the basic weakness that it is charged with grave responsibilities which it cannot appropriately discharge. The undersigned are unwilling to continue as partners in futility. It is these conclusions which have compelled the undersigned to send you their resignations." 4-1-44

Two Remain On Committee

The resignation of Dr. Tobias, Mr. Ganger and Dr. Logan leaves the Committee with two Negro members, Rev. George H. Sims, pastor of Union Baptist Church, and Dr. C. B. Powell, editor of the Amsterdam News, who was last year appointed Boxing Commissioner by Governor Dewey.

Professor, Va. 12-2-44

COLUMBUS, O. — (ANP) — Advocating the establishment of a state FEPC in each state in the union, Dr. Charles S. Johnson, professor of social science, Fisk University, Nashville, speaking the morning before the second biennial assembly of the United Council of Church Women, said that such formations would strengthen the work which has already been accomplished by that agency.

"The militant support of Christian citizens in each community is needed to establish and help keep in continuous operation the principle of fair play in the employment of those who have been chronically handicapped by prejudice," the school head stated.

The Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill, a bill which treats with socialized medicine and now pending before congress, should be supported, Dr. Johnson said as he spoke of the need for a federal health program.

Also stressing the need for better houses, Johnson said that if church treasuries with millions of dollars would consider investing their funds in such socially useful channels as model housing projects, they would realize profitable returns.

Ross Gets Wings Clipped By FEPC

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga.

10-4-44

By HARRY HcALPIN

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA) — Malcolm Ross, chairman of the Fair Employment Practice Committee, has had "his wings clipped" according to information leaking from the meeting of the FEP committee held last week in New York City for the purpose of working out a reorganization of FEPC staff functions.

Ross has enjoyed almost absolute freedom from criticism in the Negro press because of fear that such criticism might hurt the FEPC, which has innumerable ill-wishers in Congressional and business circles. Internal frictions and bickering, which are known to have existed, and regarded as indication that he is not a good administrator. 10-4-44

Riding on the wave of poularity which the agency enjoys among Negroes, and lulled by the absence of criticism, Ross has assumed the stature of an expert on Negro affairs. He is reported to have reached the assumption that he could dispense with the advice and counsel of the exceptionally qualified Negro members of his staff, and to have disregarded the organizational chart by taking the director of field operations, Will Maslow, also white, into his confidence as adviser.

The committee is reported to have been critical of this organization recently when it advised Ross at a previous meeting to abandon his plan to submit a series of amendments to the Chavez bill in the Senate for a Permanent FEPC while hearings were being held. The admendments had been worked out by Ross and Maslow without any knowledge of them on the part of other staff members. The committee told Ross to clear all amendments and everything else concerning a permanent FEPC through the National Council for a Permanent FEPC with an office in Washington. Both Ross and Maslow are reported to have been lukewarm to the FEPC bills pending in Congress, which provide for enforcement powers in the proposed new agency. They are said to have favored a milder proposal which some Congressional members plan to recommend. Ross should be the head. No suggestions have been made that Ross head up the commission sought in the Senate and House bills now pending. 10-4-44

It is also reported that many of the committee members were disappointed with the showing Ross made as chairman at the hearings held in St. Louis and Los Angeles in August.

Council Passes Quill Transit Resolution

By ART SHIELDS 11-29-44

In a dramatic session yesterday, the city Council backed Councilman Michael J. Quill's fight for higher wages for transit workers employed by the Board of Transportation. At the same time the Council unanimously endorsed a resolution asking Congress to support a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee to give Negroes equal rights in industry.

The FEPC resolution, which was sponsored by the Council as a whole, was identical with the resolution originally introduced by Councilman Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., Communist.

Mr. Davis had asked the Council to adopt the resolution on a non-partisan basis. It calls on Congress to support the Marcantonio and Dawson bills on the FEPC issue.

The Council also rebuked the John L. Lewis' United Construction Workers for its threats of a strike by maintenance workers in city public schools.

And it urged that no plays should be produced in this city by Noel Coward, the playwright, who slurred Brooklyn soldiers in Europe.

TRANSIT ACTION 11-29-44

The transit decision was a complete endorsement of Quill's fight.

By an almost unanimous vote—only one member abstaining—the Council asked Mayor LaGuardia to appoint an impartial committee to investigate the low wage situation in the city transit industry and make a prompt report as Quill was demanding.

Speakers from both sides of the chamber said wages were shockingly low.

A delegation of more than 100 CIO subway, bus and streetcar workers in the gallery was a silent but weighty argument behind Quill.

The transit issue first came before the house in a general resolution introduced by Councilman Joseph Sharkey and Louis Cohen, asking the Board of Estimate to approve increases commensurate with those given other city workers.

This was too general, said Quill. Definite action must be taken. Accordingly he proposed that the mayor—

". . . appoint a committee of disinterested and impartial citizens to examine into and report, with its recommendations, on the pending dispute between the Board of Transportation and its employes' request for adjustments in their wage hours and working conditions."

Quill's measure, first proposed as an amendment to the Sharkey-Cohen resolution, was finally adopted as a special resolution.

COHEN YIELDS 11-29-44

Majority Leader Sharkey backed Quill in the fight to the chagrin of Cohen, who said that "I seem getting to be the foot. The majority is becoming the minority."

Cohen, who took the floor several times against Quill's measure, finally accepted it, however.

Quill pulled no punches in his denunciation of Chairman Delaney of the Board of Transportation, who often refuses to meet labor representatives and who pays substandard wages.

More than 4,500 transit workers are still getting wages of 58 to 75 cents, said the transport workers' leader.

"This means a take home wage of $23 to $31 a week," said Quill. "How in the name of God can an American family be raised on $23 to $31 a week."

The Board of Transportation's wages were 5 to 11 cents an hour under those paid by private transit companies having agreements with the Transport Workers Union, said Quill. 11-29-44

The transit workers will keep their no-strike pledge as they have kept it in the past, said Quill. But they must have justice.

Councilmen Stanley Isaacs, Peter V. Cacchione and Benjamin Davis took the floor for Quill's measure.

Doctor Witherspoon Dodge

Daily World — Atlanta, Ga. 11-16-44

Negroes of Atlanta and the Southeast will receive with deep regret and dissappointment, announcement of the transfer of A. Bruce Hunt from the Regional Office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice in Atlanta to the position of Western Counsel at Los Angeles. In his brief tenure here, Mr. Hunt had made a deep and abiding impression upon the minds of Negroes for the absolute thoroughness and utter sincerity with which he grappled with the problems of discrimination against minorities in War Industries coming within the purview of his Committee. His keen and critical appreciation for the problems and handicaps under which Negroes labored and his strong determination to perform faithfully the duties of his office in the face of unfair and unfriendly attacks, both upon him and the Committee by local elements, created for him a following among Negroes seldom achieved by anyone similarly stationed. Nevertheless, we take comfort in the fact that his services will not be lost to the race and that his transfer is a promotion to a wider and more critical area of service.

In is stead, we are pleased to welcome Dr. Witherspoon Dodge as our new Regional Director. Dr. Dodge is no stranger in Atlanta. Neither is he a novice in the Labor Movement and the cause for Minority rights. His sincerity and his devotion to the race have been thoroughly demonstrated and tested. Negroes in Atlanta will doubtless remember him best as the pastor of the Radio Church, in which he vigorously and fearlessly espoused equality and justice for all. In the Deep South he is more generally known for his service with the Textile Workers Union and with the Office of Production of the War Production Board. Besides these, Dr. Dodge has had a brilliant career both in the ministry and in the field of education.

It is assured, we believe, that the change will in no wise alter or circumscribe the activities of the Committee on Fair Employment Practice in the Southeast. The Nation needs this Agency now, more than ever. The great welter of problems, both during and after the war, which the Negro worker and other minorities are most certain to face, demand, not only the continuation of the vital services of this Committee, but likewise make it mandatory that the approaching sessions of the 78th Congress will give substance and meaning to both the Republican and Democratic parties' platforms to work for a Permanent Committee. Negroes could not expect to be satisfied with anything less. Even the presence of such a Committee, despite the fact that most of its investigations are strictly private, will serve as a great deterrent to unscrupulous employers, bent upon exploitation of labor for selfish designs.

U.S. Post Office Dept. Bars FEPC Stickers from Mails

12-23-44 Baltimore, Md. American

NEW ORLEANS, La.—Letters bearing FEPC stickers will not be accepted for mailing, according to instructions given to postmasters by the U.S. Post Office Department. Ralph Handlin, Department of New Orleans, received a letter from the Post Office which he said was received November 27 from the Washington R. Butler, hosiery Life Insurance Company.

A check with the Post Office Department in Washington brought forth the information that the order banning the stickers was sent out on November 23 by Postmaster-General.

The last line on the sticker, reading: "March on Washington Movement," was considered controversial. The other printed matters had been given the same ruling had been given for any other city. 12-23-44

According to Handlin, "The use of stickers bearing slogans of a controversial nature can not be approved and, therefore, mail matter bearing stickers like the specimen submitted should not be accepted for mailing."

These letters were received by

The inscription on the stamp is as follows:

"MAKE FEPC PERMANENT For Jobs and Justice March on Washington Movement" Controversial Slogans Barred

In letters to two local businessmen last week, returning covers of letters they had mailed bearing the FEPC endorsement, Mr. Handlin quoted part of a letter from the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General. Asked whether other postmasters had been given the same ruling, a department spokesman said that unless requested, no similar ruling had been given for any other city.

Malcom Ross, FEPC Head, On 'Spot' for Liberalism

Call - Kansas City, Mo.
1-7-44

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — While investigators of the Dies committee made a congressional charge that the FEPC "promotes disunity and racial unrest," further steps in the plan to destroy the committee were noted this week in the form of a "get Ross" campaign.

Fearless Leader

Malcolm H. Ross, FEPC chairman, is guilty of defying southern anti-Negro traditions by demanding a discontinuance of race discrimination as practiced by 14 southern railroads and seven unions.

Hailed as one of the country's most fearless leaders, Ross' anti-discrimination attitude has resulted in a concerted attempt to destroy the FEPC and label him a dangerous "Red," because of his determination to enforce the fair employment practice policies of his organization.

A recent attack came from the Smith committee, named for Rep. Howard W. Smith (D. Va.), when Aaron Ford, former Democratic congressman from Mississippi, and investigators demanded FEPC records and files on the southern railroad and union cases.

A promise of public hearings against the FEPC on the ground that it has "acted without proper authority" was made by Smith, who openly represented the grievances of railroads and unions.

Ross explained the precedent of turning the railroad cases over to the President by pointing out that about a year ago the committee asked the President to enforce an order against the International Association of Machinists, AFL, which had been found to have prevented the hiring of Negroes in the Boeing Aircraft plant at Seattle, and at the Bethlehem shipyard at San Francisco.

Ross revealed that the six non-southern railroads who have made offers to confer with the FEPC were not included in the case sent to the White House, which he listed as the Pennsylvania, New York Central, Baltimore and Ohio, Chicago Terminal Co., Missouri, Kansas and Texas, and Union Pacific railroads. 1-7-44

Early Background

The plan to persecute Ross is being followed on the claim that Ross' early background while at Yale is evident that he is a Communist; that his book, "Death of a Yale Man," published in 1939, was pro-communist; that his great interest in Negro welfare is in line with his Communist leanings; that he is a protege of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Atty. Gen. Francis Biddle, both guilty of defying southern race traditions and accused of causing racial unrest.

"The first step in the plot to oust Malcolm H. Ross and to destroy the FEPC is in the making," one government official commented. "Now the world can see what forces are behind our country's race traditions, which have nearly crushed its Negro people."

Unflinchingly, Ross has continued his courageous fight against discriminatory employment policies in war work by issuing a final directive against the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Employes Union, Inc., ordering it to eliminate all barriers to the employment or upgrading of Negroes into platform jobs on the Philadelphia street cars and buses, and a written statement of facts has been obtained by the FEPC from the Capital Transit Co., of Washington. This is a step toward enforcing the committee's order here. Ross declared.

House Votes To Restore FEPC Funds

Post-Washington, D.C.

Party Lines Crossed As Move to Withhold Appropriation Fails

BULLETIN

The House last night passed the $1,033,358,367 appropriations bill for a scor eof home-front agencies, including the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

5-27-44

By the Associated Press

After earlier voting to deny funds for the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee, the House last night reversed itself and restored a $500,000 fund for the agency in the War Agencies Appropriation bill.

A teller vote of 123 to 119 in the House proper set aside an earlier teller vote of 141 to 103 in committee of the whole to strike the FEPC fund from the bill.

In the earlier vote Southern Democrats were aided by a large group of Republicans in tentatively knocking the appropriation from the $1,033,000,000 omnibus bill financing almost a score of home-front war agencies for the fiscal year starting July 1.

The voting crossed party lines, about half of the Republicans present voting with Southern Democrats in support of the amendment deleting the FEPC item after being challenged by Southerners and one of their own colleagues to evidence the sincerity of their past criticism of New Deal bureaus by voting to deny the FEPC more money. 5-27-44

FEPC now is financed from the President's emergency fund.

Two days debate on the omnibus bill had been devoted almost entirely to the FEPC. The fight against it, led by Representative Tarver (D. Ga.), was based on contentions of Southerners that the agency, not specifically authorized by Congress, was more interested in advocating social racial equality than in preventing discrimination against Negroes.

The bitter debate brought warnings of grave racial problems in the future and a remark from Representative Gibson (D. Ga.) that "there are only two things that are going to save this nation: one is ballots and the other is bullets."

Navy Will Lift Race Marks From Brooklyn Yard Badges

PM-New York, N.Y.
5-22-44

Navy officials have informed the FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee) that racial designations will be removed from the badges of workers at the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

For several years, workers at the Yard had been compelled to wear badges containing, among other information, the letter W for white workers and the letter C for colored employes. Charges of discrimination at the Yard were first revealed by PM in February.

When the FEPC began investigating charges of racial discrimination at the Yard, Adm. Monroe Kelly, who resisted attempts of the Committee to conduct an on-the-spot-survey of conditions there, said Franx Knox, then Secretary of the Navy, was responsible for forcing the workers to wear the racial designations on their badges.

Kelly himself said he saw no reason for the designations from a security point of view, although the letters indicating color had been ordered from Washington "for security reasons."

FEPC investigations revealed that Navy Yards in other cities did not require designation of race on the badges worn by their employes. 5-22-44

Numerous complaints were filed with the FEPC by labor unions, citizens groups and the Negro employes themselves charging that the badge designation made for discriminatory employment practices within the Yard. The complaint on badges was only one among many charging discrimination at the Yard.

Meanwhile, Edward Lawson, Director of the New York Regional FEPC office, announced that considerable progress was being made in adjusting more than 50 charges of discriminatory employment practices which have been filed with the FEPC. Of the complaints handled recently, Lawson said, four were found warranted and two were dismissed.

The four warranted complaints resulted in the promotion of four Negro employes, who had charged that they were being denied promotions apparently because of their race.

Parliamentary Triumph May Save Life of FEPC

PM-New York, N.Y.
5-26-44

By NATHAN RORERTSON
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, May 26.—The FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee) has a good chance today to win another year of life from Congress as the result of a major parliamentary triumph yesterday in the House over the die-hard Southern poll taxers.

The Southerners, enraged by the Appropriations Committee's approval of a $500,000 fund for the FEPC, tried desperately to win the right to kill the appropriation by a point of order. They were beaten in a series of parliamentary maneuvers which left them only the slim chance of killing the appropriation by a direct vote.

The FEPC item was included by the Appropriations Committee in the big war agencies' appropriation bill which was approved in a form indicating that Committee members had taken notice of recent ...busses, or in other public places ...Labor Board—and its jurisdiction was confined to ...discrimination in employment in war industries and Government.

...members were urged to ...testimony of Chairman Malcolm Ross, which the Committee described as "a clear, fair, dispassionate discussion of a democratic policy of national scope and importance."

The parliamentary battle on the House floor was of tremendous importance to the FEPC, because the agency has never been authorized by law and was in a precarious position. The Southerners have been continuation, planning to use that technicality to block the appropriations.

But they suddenly found that Chairman Clarence Cannon (D., Mo.), had obtained unanimous consent in the House Tuesday to waive all points of order on the bill, which blocked the point of order whatsoever they had planned to make against the FEPC appropriations.

Speaker Sam Rayburn upheld the Agencies Praised

In the past year or two the House Committee has missed few opportunities on bills of this kind to crack down on the agencies it didn't like, such as OWI. This time all of the major agencies came through without serious cuts, and most of them, including OWI, won praises on the back in the Committee's report.

Here is what some of the major agencies got, as compared with what the budget asked for them:

¶ OWI—Requested $64,390,000; approved $58,625,367.

¶ FEPC—Requested $500,000.

¶ Committee for Congested Production Areas—Requested $669,000; approved $1,139,000.

¶ Office of Civilian Defense—Requested $57,000,000; approved $1,-000,000.

¶ Coordinator of Inter-Americanever over social problems affairs—Requested $19,174,000;

One Agency Cut

The only program abolished by the Committee was the Committee for Congested Production Areas, which has been a trouble-shooting agency designed to straighten out problems in the crowded war areas which threatened war production. The War and Navy Depts. strongly recommended its continuation, but the Committee turned it down.

In reporting on the FEPC appropriation, the Committee said there had been "much misunderstanding in the House Tuesday to what the budget asked for them: duction Areas—Requested $669,-ers" of the agency. It said the FEPC had "no jurisdiction whatsoever over social problems such as discrimination in restaurants, unanimous consent order, but Rep. Francis Case (R., S. D.), quickly appealed to the House to overrule the Speaker.

Most of the Southerners rallied behind Case, but were beaten 175-54. Cannon, under fire from the Southerners, asked unanimous consent to set aside Tuesday's order so far as it applied to the FEPC item. Up to this point, neither Cannon nor his critics had mentioned FEPC by name. They were trying to cover up the issue. 5-26-44

Marcantonio Steps In

But Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP., N. Y.), brought it out into the open, objecting to Cannon's request on the ground that "all this maneuvering is to make it possible to strike out the FEPC." Speaker Rayburn ruled that Marcantonio's objection settled the question.

Rep. John Rankin (D., Miss.), sputtered and fumed at the outcome of the battle. He shouted that it was "the beginning of the end of parliamentary government."

Later in the debate Rep. William M. Colmer (D., Miss.), protested that the FEPC's objective was "to see that a certain race is given preference over all other races" and suggested that it should be directed to "protect the white people from discrimination."

Rep. John Taber (R., N. Y.), agreed that the FEPC must "guard against" such preference to a single race. Marcantonio quickly objected that there was "no evidence" that the FEPC was "giving preference to anyone."

The Appropriations Committee report emphasized the value of OWI's propaganda work which has been under bitter attack from House Republicans.

"The Office of War Information," it said, "is the instrumentality of the United States, the 'Voice of America,' to tell to the people of the world the truth about this war, our part in it, the power of the Unted States, to convince the German and Japanese people that their defeat is certain, to encourage the people in occupied countries to continue their resistance, and to convince enemy soldiers through leaflets and otherwise that continued resistance is futile, and to induce them to surrender."

RAILROAD JIM CROW

Age - New York, N.Y. 1-8-44

THE MOST popular political pastime today is planning a new post-war world.

But, before the United States can take any great part in such a world, it will have to set its own house in order.

And there is plenty that the United States will have to do in order to set its own house in order. Typical of the many problems is the one just placed in the lap of President Roosevelt by the FEPC which on December 27th unanimously certified the cases of fourteen railroad and terminal companies, and seven unions — all charged with employment discrimination against Negroes.

The FEPC's action in the cases followed the receipt on December 13, of a joint reply from 14 Southeastern railroad companies in which the railway firms informed the committee that they would not comply with the FEPC directive regarding the hiring and promoting of Negro raiload workers. Since then three of the unions involved have also informed the FEPC that they would not obey its directives. Four other unions failed to reply. 1-8-44

The FEPC's action came at the same time that President Roosevelt, by executive order, directed the Secretary of War to take over the nation's railroads which had been threatened with a strike. The strike threat has passed, but the government still has the railroads under management to prevent any interruption of service so essential to the war effort.

Asked about his plans in connection with the complaint of the FEPC against the railroads, the President, at a press conference, explained he would probably appoint some kind of a committee of the unions and the carriers, from the South and the North, to see what they could do about the whole problem. He added that the objective would be steady progress, and maintained that, while distinct advances had been made in the last ten years in the problem of discrimination, he did not believe the millennium could be brought about right away.

The millennium will never be reached if the President feels that it cannot be reached or brought about right away. The President's attitude in the railroad jim crow case is rather puzzling. On the one hand, his own creation, the FEPC holds public hearings, issues directives, receives a defy, is challenged in its authority, and finally certifies the case to the President for final action. On the other hand, the President pussyfoots on the proposition and says he will probably appoint some kind of a committee of the unions and the carriers to see what they could do about it.

If the President appoints a committee, he will be merely postponing the day of final reckoning because we can see no reason for any other committee being set up except for the purpose of ignoring the findings of his FEPC. 1-8-44

The President can move quickly when he is so disposed and the best evidence of it is that he moved to take over the railroads several days before the strike deadline. There is a feeling that the strike threat was merely a bluff and would not have come to pass, several of the unions involved having already decided against such a move. The President, however, did not wait and explained that he couldn't "wait until the last moment to take action to see that the supplies to our fighting men are not interrupted."

The President can move just as quickly, if he wants to, in the matter of railroad jim crow employment practices. Just as he ordered the unions not to strike, so can he order them to cease discriminatory practices because the government is now the operator of the railroads.

All the high-sounding pronouncements on Democracy and the extension of the Four Freedoms to the whole world will go for naught if Negroes cannot enjoy Democracy and the Four Freedoms right here at home. Before the U. S. can take any great part in planning a new post-war world, it will have to set its own house in order. It must start by doing something honestly for its most loyal and its largest minority, the Negro. It can be done by a single stroke of the President's pen. It is his responsibility.

THE FEPC—Ever since President Roosevelt first set up the Fair Employment Practice Committee to stop the threatened March on Washington, Negroes have seen a consistent battle waged on two fronts; first, there has been the fight of the committee itself to continue as an agency; second, there has been the fight of home-grown fascists to throttle the agency and prevent it from doing an effective job.

In the midst of all this fighting, Negroes, generally, have lost sight of the fact that the aims and aspirations of the FEPC, even if they became an actuality, would hardly solve all the problems of the race. There is still the issue of dis-treated as citizens; they are given the position of second class citizens and are treated as such. 1-22-44

We have fought so consistently and so vigorously for the continuance of FEPC, for proper personnel, for adequate funds for the committee, that we have merely scratched the surface. And in scratching the surface we have temporarily forgotten the other issues which are just as important as the right to work without discrimination.

There is still the issue of the denial of the national administration has shown that under duress it will move. Under duress it created the FEPC, but since that time it has said in effect to Negroes: we have created an agency to fight your battles. That agency is empowered to do certain things for your interest, so just take what we've given you and be satisfied.

There is still the issue of the denial of the right to Negroes to live decently according to their ability to buy homes of their choice in the nation's railroads without being jim crowed and insulted.

There are many more issues, but all of them can be summed up by the statement that Negroes are not yet looked upon as the right to Negroes now that the FEPC is just another sop, just another medium around which to center the feeling is general among Negroes now that the FEPC was a good political gesture — but just a gesture.

The Question Of The Week

Informer—Houston, Texas

Would a Legal and Permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee Solve the Major Labor Troubles of Negroes in the South?

YEA 3-11-44

If you are implying that the Government can do little to insure the Negro against discrimination in hiring, pay and upgrading, I think that you are wrong. Teeth can be put into labor legislation that will serve to improve the labor situation very much. Some employers would like to work their people more than 40 hours per week but they do not dare do so in light of present day requirements. Now discounting all the evasions that the South could make, I believe that a legal FEPC would help us very much.

Harry Ward,
Tulsa, Oklahoma.

A review of the work of the FEPC without legal status is a small indication of its possibilities. Just airing crass injustices accomplishes something. Then too, when a person is called upon to explain business policy which he has a perfect right to have, he has scruples (if he has any sense) about the way his policy sounds to others. Even the great railroads must be conscious of how feebly convincing their explanations were during the recent hearings.

A. J. Simon.

—3-11-44

I think that it would. All of these people who holler so much about not wanting the Government to bother the rights of labor, etc., know that it is hard to hide mean actions when a place is subject to investigations. It was just like me on my insulicient gas stove hose which I changed to a sufficient one, before the inspector came again. If the FEPC had nothing more than legal power to air, that would help matters a great deal. criminate like horse thieves, and all one can do is fuss and feel sorry.

NAY

Although I think that a legal and permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee would not hurt the labor situation in the South, I do not feel that it would be a cure-all for our labor ills in these parts. When you consider that the Constitution is the most legal document that America has, and yet there are sections of the country in which citizens are denied the rights that it exists to guarantee—you can see what could happen to a legal FEPC. No matter how legal anything is, there are politicians who are rigid states-rights adherents, who find ways of ignoring some of the most justly legalized provisions for any organization. There are some fine individuals among white people, who would carry out the provisions such committee might make.

Daniel V. Sawyer, District Manager
Universal Life Insurance Co.,
New Orleans, La. 3-11-44

By the time states-rights would be injected into the interpretation of a legal FEPC, the labor situation would be only slightly altered. We need an educational program to show that Negroes as humans, and as Americans have a right to equal opportunity to earn a livelihood. Our most workable solutions will come by education rather than by laws-making.

FEPC Wins 50 Race Bias

Daily Worker—New York, N. Y.

Shipping Cases With CIO Aid

7-19-44

Discriminatory employment practices of more than 50 shipping companies have been corrected through intervention of the New York Regional Office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, according to Edward Lawson, regional director.

As a result of 10 months of special attention to complaints of discrimination involving the maritime industry and unions, the majority of operators and labor organizations are now hiring qualified seamen without regard to their race, creed, color or national origin, Lawson said. A public hearing against major holdouts to the government's non-discrimination policy is contemplated for the early fall.

During the past year the FEPC regional office has received more than 100 complaints involving the maritime industry. Of 43 cases where discrimination was clearly established by investigation, 38 have been adjusted, with the operating companies agreeing to hire seamen they had previously rejected. Ninety-seven per cent of the cases handled alleged discrimination against Negroes. The remainder involved Chinese, Japanese-American, Honduran and Jamaican workers. 7-19-44

AFL UNIONS INVOLVED

However, Lawson reported that some of the most important recent gains of Negroes in the industry were won through the efforts of other unions, several of which have made refusal of members to ship out with Negroes the basis for disciplinary action. The National Maritime Union has an outstanding record in this regard and other CIO unions are also known to have cooperated.

Typical of the accomplishments of the FEPC in dealing with bias in the maritime industry is the adjustment of a complaint made last fall against the Army Transport Service, Brooklyn. The complainant, a Negro graduate of a government maritime training school, heard a call over the school's amplifying system for 12 seamen. He applied but was advised by a recruiting officer that he could not be sent to the job because of his race. A subsequent FEPC investigation substantiated his charge. When the Federal policy of nondiscrimination was brought to the attention of the commanding officer of the Army Transport Service, he agreed to the immediate employment of the complainant. Since, more than 300 qualified Negro seamen have been hired by the ATS. 7-19-44

NMU AIDS ADJUSTMENTS

A somewhat similar case of discrimination, called to the attention of the FEPC by the NMU, involved 30 Negro graduate seamen who had completed courses at government training stations operated by the War Shipping Administration. Although their training qualified them for engine and deck work, they had not been referred to such jobs by the schools because of the repeated rejection by the industry of colored workers for other than stewards' jobs. When investigation showed that the complaint was justified, negotiations with the employment office of the WSA resulted in the immediate referral of all the graduates, and their placement on ships within 11 days.

In a third case, a company operating merchant tankers for the U. S. Government rejected three Negro workers—one a quartermaster, one a wiper and one an able-bodied seamen—on the grounds that the crew objected to sailing with Negroes. An on-the-spot investigation verified that racial discrimination had occurred. A representative of the FEPC boarded the vessel and conferred with the master, who said that the three seamen had been rejected by his chief officer, his chief engineer and his first assistant engineer, respectively, in violation of the rules of his company.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—President Roosevelt's appointment of the Stacy Committee to adjust the "impasse" between the Southern railroads and FEPC (President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice) was a White House admission that FEPC had exceeded its lenged FEPC's legal status and authority, Sidney S. Alderman, counsel for the Southern Railway Company, told the Smith Committee in hearing here, last Thursday. Alderman, representing ten and scope of the hearings; Southern carriers who have chal-

TWO-WAY ATTACK

(WSA) filed by the Seafarers International Union.

At this hearing, WSA Atlantic Coast regional representative Craig Vincent came under merciless fire as the House probers sought to pin a "subversive" label on him after he had openly admitted he believed personally in social equality. 3-11-44

Repeated attempts were made by questioners of Vincent, WSA Assistant Deputy Adminstrator Marshall E. Dimok and Vincent's New York assistant, Frank Pollatsek, to blame FEPC for the alleged "checker-boarding" of merchant marine crews. (Checker-boarding is used to denote mixing of Negroes and whites in one crew with resultant intermingling in bunks, and at meals asea.)

Charges by SIU Vice-President John Hawks that mixing of the races in ship crews provoked trouble aboard ship and thus impeded the war effort were countered by a statement by the National Maritime Union revealing several instances of mixed crews operating ships with no trouble of any kind.

Adjourned unfinished late Wednesday, the SIU hearing was deferred Thursday morning in favor of the railroad's charges against FEPC. Alderman was the first witness, testified through the luncheon recess and for the first hour of the afternoon session.

He contended that FEPC is nothing more than a fact-finding body, has no legal status and absolutely no authority to issue directives. Publicizing of the Southern railroads' cases, he said, had "sectionalized" the matter and FEPC had seized upon Southern attitudes and customs to stir up feeling against them, despite the fact that figures showed a much higher percentage of Negro employment on Southern roads than on Northern ones. 3-11-44

In support of his attack on FEPC's authority, he cited the failure of the White House to take legal steps toward immediate enforcement when the cases were certified to the President—even after the railroads had been taken over by the War Department during the strike threat.

President Roosevelt, said Alderman, had clearly indicated agreement with the railroads when in his letter of appointment to Stacy Committee members, he "ignored the sweeping demands of FEPC" covering all classes and crafts and had cited just five categories of jobs, apparently leaving the rest "out the window." 3-11-44

The promise that there would be no directives, Alderman stated, was made to Mulholland by FEPC Special Counsel Bartley C. Crum shortly before the hearings in September here. Mulholland, following Alderman on the stand, confirmed this statement, adding that during the hearings he sought and obtained verbal reassurance on the point from Crum in the presence of, though perhaps not within earshot of Bishop Francis J. Haas (then Monsignor and FEPC Chairman).

At the original conference which brought the promise, Mulholland also revealed, he was assured that it was the FEPC Chairman's desire that such a promise be extended.

The railroads' counsel also assailed Chairman Ross who, he said, attempted to "cloud the issue" in speeches and statements, and even to disclaim responsibility for the directives on the grounds that he was not chairman when the hearings were held. 3-11-44

FEPC member Milton P. Webster, international vice-president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, was also attacked as one of the sponsors in a large paid ad which appeared in several of the biggest dailies, hailing the FEPC decision and, Alderman felt, assailing the railroads.

Attorney Houston appeared representing the International Association of Railway Employees and the Association of Colored Railroad Trainmen and Locomotive Firemen. One of FEPC's special counsel during the railroad hearings, he blasted Alderman's assertion that the directives "don't help the Negro," and declared that the charges of FEPC's illegality probably originated from the fact that the language of the directives had apparently made "somebody" sore.

He reviewed the situation on Southern carriers where, by agreements with the brotherhoods, the roads had reduced Negro employees almost to the vanishing point and declared that, by their own testimony and records, the railroads and unions had indicated clearly an almost unbelievable undemocratic defiance of the government itself.

Another Laurel For The FEPC

World — Memphis, Tenn.

In its strident march toward victorious and triumphant democracy for all American citizens, the Fair Employment Practice Committee emerged with another laurel to its long chain last week, when an attempt to discharge 85 Negro women employes by the Pinaud Cosmetic Company was foiled by the Cosmetic, Soap and Perfumery Workers Union. 7-18-44

Benjamin Pross, Business Manager of the local A. F. of L., said of the attempted walk-out: "All workers, whether they be Jew or Gentile, Negro or white, receive the same protection from the Union. As far as the union is concerned, said Mr. Pross, a union member is a union member and will be treated on an equal basis." The white and colored women returned willingly to their jobs and all things are now satisfactorily settled.

The proud record of FEPC in this story can be duplicated throughout the country. In the western area over the past three months it has handled with reasonable success 193 cases growing out of discrimination. Two important railroads, the Pennsylvania and the Chicago and Northwestern have agreed to upgrade Negro employes from waiter to steward, thus flicking another scale from the long preserved occupational caste-wall in Philadelphia, the Office of War Manpower Commission announced that 68,436 Negro men and women were employed in the local Camden Market. This figure is considerably higher than the 17,602 Negroes employed during the entire 6-month period from July to December, 1943. The Chicago and Northwestern Railway has promoted Negro car cleaners to carmen's helpers and dining car waiters to steward. Thus the barriers against the employment of Negro workers, male and female, are breaking down rapidly under the double impact of a severe manpower crisis and the FEPC.

Despite this impressive record, the fight from certain quarters continues. Senator Russell of Georgia, together with Senator George, Congressmen Ramspeck and Gibson have pledged and actually are, fighting it in any "way they can". The recent hearing before the Senate saved the agency by the narrowest possible margin, due to the bitter and prolonged opposition from some southern Democrats and reactionary Republicans. Occasionally, a southern newspaper takes an editorial stand against the work and existence of FEPC, which turns out to be both shameful and shocking. 7-18-44

But to quote from the opening statement of Bartley C. Crum before the Railroads Hearings: "I submit, that in the emergency of the war, it is imperative that Negroes be allowed full and equal participation in all phases of the war program. We cannot measure the detrimental effect of race discrimination on the war program merely in terms of man-hours lost but by our own failure to use the loyalty and skills of Negro workers. This loss is compounded by an active undercurrent of bitterness among Negroes and other minorities."

We believe that the work of the FEPC will be continued, We believe that there will be a permanent FEPC. For as great as may be the impact of the war, the stress and strain of unemployment after the war will be more disastrous to Negro workers unless there is a government agency such as FEPC. This agency must not be killed or rendered impotent and Negroes north and south must look with suspicion on those who would rob them of this economic protection.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The White House has announced the appointment of Charles Houston of Washington and Charles L. Horn, of St. Paul, Minnesota, to fill vacancies on the Fair Employment Practice committee occasioned by the withdrawal of P. B. Young and Samuel Zemurray. Houston is the noted constitutional lawyer and special counsel for the NAACP and Horn is president of the Federal Cartridge corporation.

Houston has long distinguished himself in the cases involving civil rights which he has championed before the United States Supreme court for the NAACP.

On many occasions he has appeared before congressional committees to testify on various pieces of legislation. He made a particularly good impression last spring when, in the course of a hearing on the Austin-Wadsworth national service act before the senate military committee, he was asked in Horn is a newcomer to race relations. He did not strike the headlines when he spoke before the annual conference of the National Urban league in Chicago last October, but he contributed much to Horn's "new thinking" on the management-labor problem. "No clear-thinking westerner. Horn, incidentally, is a staunch Republican whereas Houston is a Democrat.

Southern Press Got Anti-FEPC Text of Dewey Talk

PM – New York

Wallace Cites 2 Versions of Seattle Speech

10-30-44

Vice President Henry A. Wallace charged at Chicago yesterday that Gov. Thomas E. Dewey and his associates sent a garbled text of his Seattle speech to Southern newspapers putting the Republican candidate for President on record, for Southern readers, as opposed to the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

Omitted from the Southern text, said Wallace, was a brief paragraph in which Dewey, for Northern readers and his radio audience, pledged himself to the establishment of a permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee.

Addressing a Negro audience in Chicago's Savoy Ballroom, Wallace told how Dewey had discarded legislation for an FEPC in New York State, proceeding to give his example of "Dewey double talk."

10-30-44

Two Texts

"The Republican candidate for President," he said, "made a speech in Seattle a few weeks ago (Sept. 18). I have the full text of that speecl. as printed in the Memphis, Tenn., Press Scimitar, and in the St. Petersburg, Fla., Times.

"In these two southern papers the Republican candidate lists the Fair Employment Practices Committee as one of the bureaus which has smothered our labor relations right down the line.

"The Chicago Tribune, the New York Times and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch which carried the text of the same Seattle speech—wonder of wonders—did not list FEPC as one of the bureaus smothering our labor relations, but the speech as printed in Chicago, New York and St. Louis said, 'We shall establish the Fair Employment Practices Committee as a permanent function authorized by law.'

10-30-44

Not for South

"The good people of Memphis and St. Petersburg did not read that sentence favoring FEPC because it was not in the speech sent to Tennessee and Florida.

"Let us not judge the Governor of New York too harshly. Perhaps this is part of his States rights theory—but it is double talk nonetheless."

Wallace told his audience that President Roosevelt was pledged to a permanent FEPC, to federal aid to education, to abolition of the poll tax, to more and better housing, to provide jobs at fair wages regardless of race, creed or religion.

Wallace reminded his audience that the FEPC was created by President Roosevelt who had pledged himself to a permanent FEPC, and cited the recent Philadelphia transit strike to show how "the right of Negro men to their jobs was safeguarded by the President" with "no double talk and no double dealing."

10-30-44

Wallace said the future would bring more Federal aid to education, abolition of the poll tax, more and better housing, jobs extension of social security to include millions of Americans now unprotected, jobs at fair wages regardless of race, creed or religion.

"I believe," said Wallace, "that we should judge a man not as a Jew, or a Gentile or a white man or a black man—but as a person—as a free citizen of the United States . . .

10-30-44

"It well may be that when our boys have captured Berlin and Tokyo that business, seeing through a glass darkly, will not put its foot upon the gas promptly enough to guarantee full employment.

"If that happens—we must throw our full resources into the construction of school houses, hospitals, parks and other instruments of human welfare. The proposition is jobs—training – and more jobs. Roosevelt stands for all this. Roosevelt knows that men are more precious than dollars and that dollars must be made the servants of men. The President believes in the people—all the people—Negro and white alike—and the future of the United States and the world belong to the people. The people are still on the march."

Is This for What We Fight?

Tribune – Washington, D.C.

The following attack on the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee, made by Rep. John S. Gibson (Dem., Ga.) is typical of the deluge of race-baiting speeches being made in the halls of the Senate and the House by Southern Congressmen. Senator Richard Russell of Georgia, recently offered legislation to "wipe out the FECP." The committee is now seeking an appropriation of $585,000 to continue its work against job discrimination. Gibson's remarks made on Friday, which follow in major part are self-explanatory:

4-22-44

I have been very deeply concerned over the purposes and activities of the organization here in Washington known as the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

It is common knowledge that such an organization could have no proper functions in this democracy. It has been my opinion that it was born of the fertile mind of someone in this commonwealth of communistic philosophy and based on its activities I am convinced that my convictions were founded on truth and fact. The Communists some months ago came out with the statement that the South was the black man's country and in substance that they expected to put him in possession of the property of the South and in control of its destiny and people.

I have recently procured factual information on the personnel of this committee, which I think will and should be of vital interest to the membership of this body and for that matter to every taxpayer in the United States. It is, of course, known that Malcolm Ross is chairman of the committee, whose function is no discrimination in employment account of race or color in this country. It is noteworthy in the organization of his committee this principal is most flagrantly violated.

4-22-44

Over all, there are 106 paid employees—61 Negroes and 45 whites. Compare that with the percentage of Negroes against the percentage of whites in this country. I am a great believer in letting the people know the facts and that with such knowledge they will correct any wrong.

When the people are called upon to favor increased taxes I hope you will remember this committee which is not only totally useless, but a vicious bureau that breeds disunity and costs the people each 12 months $317,160 or approximately one billion dollars every 3 years.

The 45 white employees draw $143,600 per annum and the 61 Negroes draw $173,560 per annum. The employees of this bureau are the highest paid of any bureau or department of the Federal Government, on a per capita basis.

In the central office where all the policies are made and enforced here in Washington there are 13 white employees and 35 Negro employees, the whites drawing $48,540 per annum and the Negroes $94,220.

The chairman is white, his associate fair-practice examiner is a Negro. The office of the chairman is staffed by 2 other whites and 3 Negroes. His administrative office is staffed by 11 Negroes and no whites. His Operations Section is staffed with 7 Negroes and 6 whites, his Review and Analysis Section has 7 Negroes and 3 whites. His Legal Division 2 Negroes only. Hearing examiners, 1 white and 5 Negroes. The Director of Review and Analysis is a Negro.

4-22-44

In fact, the whole set-up is strictly Negro dominated with just enough whites to give a slight diversity of color. This is the gang that goes into the South and sets up offices with Negroes and whites working together; to Detroit and sets up an office with one Edward M. Swann, a Negro man, as fair-practice examiner, at a salary of $3,800 per year, with a white lady for his secretary at $1,620 per year, the 2 constituting the entire office force. This is the same gang that has told the management of southern railroads they must use Negro engineers and conductors, and union officials that they must accept Negroes in their organizations.

4-22-44

In the capital of my State, Atlanta, Ga., this same gang of Washington Negroes, by the authority of this Committee, set up an office with Bruce Hunt, a white man, as senior fair-practice examiner, at $5,400 per year; John Hope, Jr., a Negro, as associate fair-practice examiner, at $3,800 per year; James H. Tipton, white, associate fair-practice examiner, at $3,200 per year; Myra Bunting, white, clerk-stenographer, at $1,800 per annum; and Thelma Horton, Negro, whose classification and salary was either intentionally or inadvertently omitted.

Please note that Hope, the Negro, and Tipton, the white, have exactly the same classification, the only distinction being color, and the Negro gets $3,800 and the white $3,200 for the same duties and in the same office, and yet this infernal Committee is designated the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

They were liberal enough to let the regional offices in the deep South have a slight advantage in number of white personnel. In New York, however, the regional office has a personnel of nine, six of whom are Negroes and three whites.

4-22-44

The big boss, head of the office, with the classification of regional director, is a Negro at $5,600 per year, and the highest paid white in the office is designated "associate field examiner" at $3,200. His white lady assistant clerk-stenographer gets only $1,620, while her Negro boss draws approximately three and one-half times this amount.

There are four regional directors in the entire United States, one Negro at $5,600 per year and one Negro at $4,600 and two whites at $4,600 per year.

ment by the Communists of this country, and let them bury beside the heroes who made the air free for Old Glory to fly, the Stars and Stripes that has stood all that has made our Nation great, and sleep through the vigil over their tombs through the years of freedom and progress this Nation has enjoyed.

I am wondering if our people have become so spineless—and so weak and faint of heart that they will see perish before their eyes all that has made our Nation great, and sleep through the vigil over their tombs through the years of freedom and progress this Nation has enjoyed.

have reached the great divide in the path of civilization and have started down the slope to the sunset of the same. I wonder if our democratic system of government being performed on the operation of democratic system of government by the people. The greatest responsibility placed on mankind is to keep his race pure; the greatest destroyer of civilization and Christianity is the mongrelization of races. 4-22-44

If this bunch of moral lepers is not stopped the depth to which they will bring our citizenry is unpredictable. God made his people as he would have them be, and if you doubt that the full plan and chart of these communistic rats call for a full race adulteration watch the years that are to follow soon, and your complacency so abundantly enjoyed now will stand before you an ugly skeleton of condemnation. 4-22-44

I have in the past and expect to in the future warn my people of these dangers and fight these Communist enemies of America as long as I am able to speak.

I hope it will be borne in mind that the Congress had no part in establishing this Committee, nor was this body consulted with regard to the advisability of its establishment; nor has the Congress ever appropriated one dime for the operation of this Committee, the money for its operation being taken from the President's emergency fund.

Wins Sum Back By 14-6 Vote

WASHINGTON —(NNPA WIRE) — The long and hard struggle to save the President's Fair Employment Pracitces Committee was a step nearer victory Monday when by a vote of 14 to 6 $500,000 for the agency was restored to the War Agencies Appropriation Bill which was approved by the Senate appropriations committee.

Says FEPC Progress in Middle West a 'Success'

By Stander — Des Moines, Iowa 9-14-44

Chicago — The work of the FEPC in the Middle West has been a success, declared Elmer W. Henderson, Chicago Regional Director of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice in a statement released this week. The Chicago office covers the states of Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa. North Dakota and South Dakota.

"This does not mean that all employment discrimination has been eliminated or that all war industries are living up to the spirit of the Executive order. We have in this region employers who still defy our orders and refuse to lower their racial barriers," Henderson warned.

"One of the most flagrant cases of discrimination yet unresolved is that of an ammunition company in southern Illinois which has employed up to 15,000 workers but refuses to hire one single Negro. This company is located in a town which boasts of allowing no Negroes to live or work there.

"Racial and religious barriers in industry have been broken to the extent that members of minority groups have been able to play a tremendous role in winning the battle of production and today the great output of our plants is not being retarded by the discrimination which was so evident in the early months of the war.

"Although in some sections of the country opposition to our work has been violent, employers in the Middle West have accepted the policy of non-discrmination with decreasing resistance. Many have worked cooperatively with us and practical demonstration have shown their good faith. 9-14-44

"The success of our program could never have been achieved had it not been for the excellent work in public education and employer education expertly done by such organiaztions as the Urban Leagues in various cities, the Bureau of Jewish Employment Problems, the local branches of the NAACP, the friendly Press, other Government agencies, and the many other organizations and individuals who have worked with us.

Best Work

"Needless to say, our best results were obtained in those plants with enlightened trade unions represented in the CIO and some branches of the A. F. of L. 9-14-44

"There has been some loose talk in certain quarters about FEPC being dictatorial, removing contracts, creating labor disturbances and provoking strikes. This is, of course, pure nonsense and I believe a canvass of employers and union officials in our region will indicate that our approach has been on a practical basis.

"The man problems before us are those of upgrading and layoffs. Many employers still refuse to upgrade Negroes and other minorities on the basis of their ability and experience. An excuse frequently given is that since many Negroes are concentrated in the unskilled labor field and the great demand is now for common laborers, Negroes cannot be upgraded because it is difficult to find other workers to take their places in these lowest rung jobs. FEPC is combatting this wherever it is called to our attention. 9-14-44

"As the war approaches its climax, the problem of layoffs becomes more acute. The Executive Order applies to layoffs also and FEPC will be alert to see that no discrimination occurs," Mr. Henderson said.

Transit Company To Comply With FEPC's Directive On Jobs

AFC — New York, N.Y.

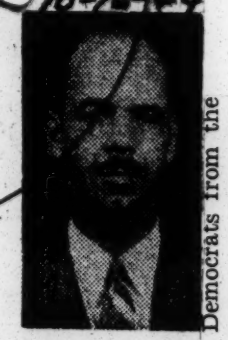
PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—The Philadelphia Transportation Company indicated on Saturday that it had accepted a directive of the FEPC on the hiring and upgrading of Negroes as operational employes with the posting of notices in car barns stating that all qualified applicants for employment will be accepted "without regard to the applicant's race, creed, color or national origin."

The notice stated that the new hiring plan has been made retroactive to July 1, and added that the company would receive applications for transfer to better positions from all qualified employes now on its lists.

Toward Freedom

Daily Worker — New York 10-16-44

REPUBLICAN efforts to dress Gov. Dewey up as the noble champion of a permanent FEPC is characteristic of the cynical demagogy with which their entire campaign is being conducted. But if they are wise they will soft-pedal this issue because President Roosevelt holds all the cards—and the people know it. Just look at the President's record on FEPC.



When it was apparent that special steps must be taken to enable Negro workers to share in the expanding war industry, President Roosevelt (summer, 1941) issued the famous Executive Order 8802, barring racial discrimination in employment and creating the Committee on Fair Employment Practices to enforce the order. Never before in history had a special agency of the federal government been set up to break down racial discrimination. 10-16-44

When War Manpower Commissioner McNutt cancelled FEPC's scheduled southern railroad hearings during the President's absence from the country (spring, 1942), it was commonly predicted that FEPC would soon die. But the President reconstituted FEPC on a firmer basis and ordered the southern railroad hearings to proceed.

FDR's Record on FEPC Compared With Dewey's

By Doxey Wilkerson

WHEN Comptroller General Warren ruled in the Southeastern Bell Telephone Co. case that FEPC directives were merely "advisory" and need not be followed (fall, 1943), the President promptly reversed this ruling and made it perfectly clear that FEPC directives are "orders" which must be obeyed.

When Sen. Russell of Georgia introduced his amendment to kill FEPC as a non-statutory agency without authorization by Congress (spring, 1944), the President recommended a congressional appropriation of $500,000 for FEPC and fought hard to win its approval.

And, finally, when FEPC faced its greatest crisis in the recent Philadelphia transit strike (fall, 1944), the President, then in the South Pacific, demonstrated to the entire country just how far he was ready to go to defend this anti-discrimination agency. He called out the Army, the ultimate authority of the United States, to enforce FEPC's order for the upgrading of eight Negro workers.

Contrast this with the Dewey-Republican record on FEPC. 10-16-44

WHEN the FEPC appropriation was before Congress, House Republicans joined up with reactionary poll-tax Democrats from the South and were on the point of killing the appropriation until Representative Marcantonio forced a record vote. Then they ran for cover and allowed the appropriation to pass.

When the Philadelphia race-hate strike tied up war production for nearly a week, the Republican mayor of that city and the Republican governor of the state said not one word of condemnation. Gov. Dewey and two dozen Republican governors, then meeting in St. Louis to draw up their platform of "states' rights," completely ignored the transit strike. not even issuing a statement in support of FEPC or against the strike's instigation to racial violence.

When the Governor's own anti-discrimina-tion committee introduced bills for a New York state FEPC (spring, 1944), Dewey deliberately killed the bills for fear that their passage might cause southern delegates to the Republican national convention to vote against his nomination as the GOP presidential candidate. 10-16-44

When candidate Dewey and his GOP backers now say (as Dewey did in his Seattle speech), "We shall establish the Fair Employment Practices Committee as a permanent function and authorized by law," the Negro people are unimpressed. They remember the single word about his support for the continuance of FEPC. The Negro people are already profoundly impressed by his deeds. And on Nov. 7 they will remember the record.

But President Roosevelt need not say a

FEPC SAVED

FOLLOWING several days of explosive debate, the Senate on Tuesday passed the $1,030,000,000 War Agencies Appropriation Bill, allowing $500,000 for continuing the FEPC but setting up restrictions which might materially limit the functions and authority of the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

In the face of bitter and outspoken denunciation of the FEPC and opposition to its continuance by Southern members, the Senate voted 39 to 21 to let it have the $500,000 in operating funds for the fiscal year, thus following the example of the House and giving first formal recognition to the agency whose existence has been the constant source of Senate controversy.

The FEPC got its directly appropriated operating funds (formerly supplied from the President's emergency fund) through the defeat by a vote of 39 to 21 of an amendment offered by Senator Richard B. Russell (Dem., Ga.) which would have stricken the item from the bill which the Appropriations Committee had reported to the Senate.

Senator Russell and Senator Burnet R. Maybank (Dem., S. C.) offered seven amendments proposing that Congress prescribe limitations for its operations. The Senate adopted three of them. Under the first amendment, passed by a voice vote, the right of appeal to the President would be given to all individuals or companies cited by FEPC, and subjected to Government contract cancellations in cases ruled by the committee and its local representatives to involve discrimination. The second amendment, adopted by a vote of 27 to 25, prescribed that the Government could seize and operate no plants on the basis of findings of employment discrimination by the FEPC. The third amendment, adopted by a voice vote, provided that no decision by the FEPC could amend or modify any act of Congress, a provision which was regarded by some as the most significant of the three restrictions.

These amendments will go to conference with the House, which allowed the $500,000 appropriation without providing limitations on FEPC functions.

During the controversial debates over the fate of FEPC, many of the Negro-baiting Senators from the South resorted to their usual tactics of dragging the old issue of social equality into the picture. Senator Theodore G. Bilbo, (Dem., Miss.) spoke of his plan to send Negroes back to Africa and declared that he had noted that it had been criticized by Mrs. Roosevelt.

"Of course, Bilbo said," she did not understand my ultimate plan. If I can succeed eventually in resettling the great majority of Negroes in West Africa, I might entertain the proposition of making her queen of that Greater Liberia."

Then again, there was the anti-Negro Senator Walter F. George (Dem., Ga.) who added this to the debate: "The FEPC that has haunted these gallories like vultures to watch our action and to compel our votes to give them a half-million dollars has done nothing on earth to promote better relations between the white and the black people. Its main purpose is to attempt to establish something like social equality, that is all."

On the positive side, there were many Senators who in defending the FEPC against attack held like Senator Chavez, of New Mexico that: "As Americans who believe in the Constitution and love our Government and want it to continue as it was created, how can we justify within our own country such practices as now prevail, although not under the law of the Constitution, when we condemn with the President those responsible for the sufferings of strangers?.... How can liberty be assured to ourselves and our posterity if one class of people have economic liberty and all the people have political liberty, but another class of people have economic slavery?.... How can the common defense be provided for, unless every citizen of the Nation is treated equally under the law and is accorded the same equality of opportunity? Is the general welfare promoted when Jim Jones, doing a piece of work in an industry engaged in the war effort or in everyday life, but who happens to be of a certain color—I am referring to actual work; I am not talking about social equality; I am talking about sweat and blood and suffering and the creation of wealth—is paid one wage while Tom Brown, doing the same class of work, laboring the same hours, creating the same wealth for these United States, is paid more than Jim Jones is paid? Is that one of the things for which the people of the Colonies revolted against England? Is that what they enunciated in the Declaration of Independence? I think not, although I may be mistaken."

Fears previously expressed that FEPC was nearing the end of its rope now appear allayed for another year at least. In the meantime, the bill for a Permanent FEPC is before Congress and so there is still hope that the bill may become a permanent government agency by legislation, rather than by appropriation.

THE F. E. P. C. SAFE

Several weeks ago the lower branch of Congress approved the appropriation for a continuance of the Fair Employment Practice Committee. The prediction was made that the senate would be antagonistic. The Southerners made a vigorous fight against it, but on Tuesday it was approved by a large margin. As usual the Southerners injected racial element, not based upon fairness. High toned statesmen would never resort to the harsh terms of Senator George of Georgia, Bilbo of Mississippi and Eastland of the same state. It is refreshing to note such expressions as made by Mrs. Dorothy O. Rainey of this state in a letter to the chairman of the Democratic State Executive Committee relative to denying the Negro participation in the State Democratic primary. Mrs. Rainey stated:

"I am aware that the course of action suggested by the committee is dictated not by fear of the Negro, but by fear of a certain group of our white Southerners . . .whose thinking is steeped in poverty, in ignorance, and in prejudice.

"I know of no white Southerners of intelligence and high character who do not wish to encourage our Negro fellow Southerners to lives of thrift, responsibility and integrity—that is, to lives of good citizenship.

"To say to a Negro that, no matter what his competence and no matter what his personal worth, he is not to be permitted to have a part in the processes of citizenship seems to me a cruel and a shameful thing. For my part I am not willing to insult him in this fashion and to challenge his just resentment."

Ala. Gov. Hits FEPC, Defends Segregation

AUBURN, Ala.—(ANP)—The F.E.P.C. was attacked as "hostile to the genius of government" and segregation and the poll tax defended as necessary safeguards to southern economy by Gov. Chauncey M. Sparks speaking Tuesday before the 26th annual convention of Alabama Kiwanians.

Hostile

He described the FEPC as a 'thing as hostile to the genius of American government as anything that has been brought up and put into practice within its whole history."

Racial segregation, he declared, is necessary to preserve the integrity of both the white and Negro races, and he said that "constant agitation, both through army regulations and through insistence of political preachers and vote seekers," has resulted in a spirit of suspension on the part of Negroes.

On the poll tax question, Sparks asserted that "one point of attack which is often made by the politican and office seeker particularly in the north, is what is called the disenfranchising poll tax of the south. Our northern advisers have not discovered that registration laws, not poll taxes, are the real barriers to Negro votes.

"This poll tax business is a tempest in a teapot, and I think the south . . . should maintain its guard until the storm blows over and until the two races can agree themselves."

Discussing racial relations, the governor asserted that "much of the difficulty we encounter comes from misguided preachers and teachers, writers and pseudo-uplifters . . . It (theracial problem) can not be resolved in emotionalism."

FEPC Hearing Shows Anti-Negro Bias by AFL Seafarers Union

By EUGENE GORDON

The President's Fair Employment Practice Committee yesterday examined complaints of discrimination against Negroes by the Seafarers International Union (AFL). The hearing, on charges that SIU violated Executive Order 8802 and 9346, were held in the Bar Association Bldg., 42 W. 44 St. Malcolm Ross, FEPC national chairman, presided.

Emanuel Block, trial attorney for FEPC and a member of the agency legal staff, alleged that:

1. SIU, "because of a firm policy of designating certain jobs for Negroes and certain others for white men, has discriminated against Negroes and whites alike in referring and placing unlicensed crew

2. SIU's action "is in direct violation of the merchant marine ... outraging "every tenet of fair play in that it denies equal opportunities to men who daily risk their lives and make the supreme sacrifice" in transporting war materials to the war fronts.

3. This policy "has impeded the efficient operation of the merchant marine and interfered with the full utilization of manpower in the war effort."

John Hawk, first vice-president of SIU, through Richard M. Cantor, counsel, presented a statement ridiculing the procedure of the hearing and attacking FEPC's jurisdiction.

The only direct denial of FEPC's charge of discrimination was this statement by Hawk: "The charges are absurd on their face, because they allege discrimination against both races. The most casual inquiry would have satisfied this committee that in none of the instances set forth as charged has the war effort been adversely affected."

Having presented its protest, SIU counsel declared that "we cannot expect justice from your committee under the conditions that now prevail," and formally declined to participate further. 10-11-44

FEPC, however, continued to present witnesses and documents to prove its charges. These charges seemed to be definitely proved when eight witnesses had testified from personal experience and scores of documents—embracing sworn statements by Negro seamen who had been discriminated against—had been read into the record.

Results of the hearing will be announced.

Opposition Alarms Bill's Supporters

Daily World—Atlanta, Ga.
11-11-44

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA) — Congressional action to establish a permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee is endangered by American Federation of Labor opposition to the proposed prohibition against discrimination by labor unions, according to a report appearing in the newspaper PM last week.

The bill for a permanent FEPC has the wholehearted support of many labor, religious and liberal organizations including the CIO and several AFL unions. Supporters of the measure are alarmed by the AFL's attitude.

The story says AFL hostility to the pending legislation in its present form was disclosed by publication of the Senate hearings on the bill, which included a statement by the Federation ducking any commitment on the measure and opposing any government control of unions.

QUOTE REPORT

The statement, which was filed with the Senate Committee by W. C. Hushing, legislative representative of the AFL, quoted the report by the Executive Council of the AFL at its 1943 convention.

This report opposed racial discrimination in employment, but added: "The Executive Council does not believe, however, that imposition of any policy, no matter how salutary, through compulsory government control of freely constituted associations of workers, accords with the basic right of freedom of association among the American people."

11-11-44

Questioned about the statement, Hushing told PM the pending bill "does not conform" to the AFL convention action. He said the Federation might try to have the bill modified and probably would discuss the question at its convention this month.

SHISKIN WARNS

First open hint of AFL opposition, says PM, came during the Howard University conference on Posatwar Industrial outlook for Negroes, when Boris Shiskin, AFL member of the present FEPC warned that labor would oppose any regulation of unions, even to prevent discrimination.

Shiskin told the conference that legislation prohibiting racial and religious discrimination — the purpose of the permanent FEPC bill — by unions would open the door to much broader regulation of unions and labor spokesmen could not support it. His views were attacked from the floor of the conference during the discussion period following his speech by Judge William Hastie and others.

'Serious Trouble' Seen If FEPC Bill Is Delayed

PM New York N.Y.

Rep. Norton Echoes Fears of Labor Spokesman

11-17-44

By CHARLES A. MICHIE
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—Witnesses before the House Labor Committee warned yesterday that unless a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee is established before the war ends, serious trouble will result during the reconversion period.

After a brief half-day hearing, Chairman Mary Norton (D., N. J.) said the Committee would go into executive session Wednesday to consider amendments and would probably report the FEPC measure out before Dec. 30, when the 78th Congress is scheduled to adjourn.

Mrs. Frances Saylor, of the United Electrical and Radio Workers, CIO, declared that, lacking a permanent FEPC, there would be many attempts to break unions by segregation of Negroes and white workers. 11-17-44

Foresees Trouble

Rep. Norton echoed her sentiments and said positively that if they fail to get passage of the bill this session the effort will be renewed immediately after the 79th Congress reconvenes. She added that trouble was bound to come if employment opportunities were denied to minority groups who are now overseas fighting for our freedom.

Mrs. Saylor in her testimony said it was the opinion of officials of her union that had it not been for employment of Negroes in skilled and semi-skilled jobs we would never have been able to meet our commitments to the men in the armed services.

She outlined in detail the steps taken to break down discriminatory practice—with considerable success in St. Louis and Baltimore, she said.

Rep. O. C. Fisher (D., Tex.) suggested to Mrs. Saylor that her recital of the union's success in handling discrimination could be construed as an argument that a permanent FEPC was unnecessary. She denied it hotly.

"Without the assistance of the FEPC we couldn't have accomplished anything," she declared. "We would hardly have made a dent in a bad situation."

Helped War Effort

She said that in the opinion of her union the procedures set up in the permanent FEPC bills is adequate and a guarantee that the ...m will be fairly met. She added in answer to a question from Chairman Norton that without the President's Executive Order creating the agency the country would have been unable to meet its quotas of arms and supplies for our Army and Navy.

The present FEPC, created by Executive Order, is due to expire June 30, 1945, but there is a possibility that if it is not made permanent by legislation that President Roosevelt will renew the order.

Proponents of the bill are not sanguine about the chances of getting it onto the House floor for determination before adjournment. It isn't on the list of "must" legislation and there are other obstacles.

After the executive session of the Labor Committee next week the measure must go to the Rules Committee. The time is very short for all the fumadiddles which must accompany the movement of a bill from the Committee hearings to a vote.

Meanwhile, a bill, similar in all particulars to that being considered by the Norton Committee, is already on the calendar in the Senate. Rep. Norton said she pinned any hopes she has of action this session on the fact that both political parties pledged themselves to stand behind permanent FEPC legislation in their campaign platforms.

FEPC STUDIES PLANT CASES

Argus—St. Louis, Mo.
8-11-44

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 9 — (Special) — Complaints of discriminatory employment practices against eight war plants in the St. Louis area were examined by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice in two days of public hearings in St. Louis August 1 and 2.

After completion of the sessions, FEPC Chairman Malcolm Ross announced that a study of the full record would be made before the committee's findings are announced. The complaints alleged refusal to hire Negro women and refusal to upgrade Negro male workers in violation of Executive Order 9346.

The firms involved in the hearings, all of whom appeared in their defense, include: Amertorp Corporation, Bussman Manufacturing Company, Carter Carburetor, Wagner Electric Corporation, McDonnell Aircraft Corporation, St. Louis Shipbuilding and Steel Corporation, United States Cartridge Company and McQuay-Norris Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Ross presided at the hearings. Other FEPC members who sat were Boris Shishkin, Milton P. Webster, Miss Sara Southall, Charles H. Houston and John Brophy. Ernest G. Trimble and Frank D. Reeves, of the Legal Division, served as counsel for the committee. 8-11-44

Complaints of more than 50 individuals were heard during the sessions, with about 40 witnesses offering testimony to support the charges. Denials of discriminatory employment practices were entered by each of the companies, FEPC said.

FEPC Protects Our Right to Work; Its Biggest Job Will Come With Peace

Call Heroes Every Day
8-25-44

"THE RIGHT TO FIGHT IS . . . THE RIGHT TO LIVE"

The National Council for a Permanent Fair Employment Practice committee has issued a report on the meaning, effect and need of the FEPC. Because of the nation-wide interest in the FEPC, THE CALL is presenting the report in installments. Here is the first:

Of all the appropriations in the federal war budget before congress this spring, the smallest item created the greatest furore—$500,000 requested to continue for one more year the emergency-created Committee on Fair Employment Practices.

The winning of the fight for this appropriation—despite a bitter, misleading campaign by a minority to whom the maintenance of "white supremacy" was more important than winning the war—was a signal victory which helped turn the tide in favor of a Permanent FEPC.

From the beginning, the National Council for a Permanent FEPC knew that to win broad support for a Permanent FEPC, with adequate funds and authority, required the achievement of majority acceptance of the principle of federal action to prevent discrimination in employment.

Thus all our forces were thrown into the fight when this principle faced its first and crucial test in the House and Senate vote appropriation in June. For it was then that the present FEPC came up for congressional approval for the first time in its three years of operation.

OPPORTUNITY TO ABOLISH FEPC 8-25-44

And it was then that the southern advocates of "white supremacy" and their northern collaborationists in Congress saw their first opportunity—and they grabbed at it—to abolish FEPC. That many of them considered it more important to kill FEPC than to defeat Hitler and Tojo was demonstrated in the vote on the omnibus War Agencies bill in the House of Representatives. FEPC was included, with 17 other emergency agencies of the federal government, $1,030,937,242. Although each agency was discussed and acted upon separately, final clearance required a vote on the War Agencies bill as a whole. Enraged at the defeat of their amendment to strike FEPC out of the bill, 52 southerners recorded themselves as voting against passage of the War Agencies bill.

Southerners who had never before voted against an important war measure voted to kill the War Production board, the War Labor board, the Office of War Information, the War Shipping administration, the Smaller War Plants Corporation, the Selective Service system, and the rest—only because FEPC had been included, even though by majority vote of Congress.

But FEPC cleared the House by a margin of only four votes. The people had not made their desires sufficiently known. Much remained to be done to ensure passage in the Senate by a vote substantial enough to indicate unquestionably broad and non-partisan support

WANT NEW KIND OF FEPC 8-25-44

And when, scarcely three weeks later, the FEPC appropriation reached the floor of the senate, it was approved by a vote of 38 to 21. The job had been done. A substantial majority in the senate had become convinced that the people wanted FEPC continued (in spite of the fact that the southern opposition reached new lows in deceit and viciousness during a three-day senate filibuster).

Meanwhile, the eyes of the nation—and of Congress—were on the House Labor committee where, during those same crucial three weeks, hearings were being held on the Scanlon-Dawson-LaFollette bill for a Permanent FEPC. Here was the sounding-board of public opinion, and here spokesmen of civic, religious, and labor organizations, comprising millions of voters, were telling the House committee what kind of FEPC they wanted.

Unanimously they urged that they wanted more than continuation of the present FEPC. They wanted a new kind of FEPC. One with funds enough and power enough to do the job. They wanted an FEPC with "teeth."

It was almost inevitable, therefore, that, sensing the temper of America, in its convention a week later the Republican party inserted in its platform a plank calling for the establishment of a Permanent FEPC. And it follows that the Democratic party, under whose administration the FEPC was originated, will naturally include such a plank in its platform at its convention.

The mere establishment of the principle is only an opening wedge in the campaign for a Permanent FEPC with "teeth." We have only established the beachhead . . . 8-25-44

WHAT THE HOUSE HEARINGS REVEALED

A saga of frustration and insecurity haunting millions of minority-group Americans was dramatically unfolded in the House Labor committee hearings—June 1 through June 16—on the Permanent FEPC bill.

FEPC Chairman Malcolm Ross, however, warned the House Labor committee that the Negro is not yet secure in his new gains. "The Negro,' 'he said, "has made practically no advance in any industry which is basic to the peacetime industries."

For Negroes particularly the FEPC has become a vital symbol of democracy in action. Striking evidence of the gains made in Negro employment was contained in a War Manpower commission report that there were 7.2 per cent non-whites employed in war industry in January 1944 in contrast to only 3 per cent in 1941. FEPC helped make this possible.

Even now, though, as all proponents of the bill pointed out—despite the manpower shortage and the efforts of FEPC—discrimination persists because FEPC does not have enough funds to more than scratch the surface, and because FEPC does not have the power to enforce its orders.

DISCRIMINATORY CUTBACKS BEGIN

Already the cutbacks have begun and the handwriting on the wall has become a living reality for Negro workers. As in the past, they were the last hired. And now again they find themselves the first to go. 8-25-44

Several examples which illustrate the trend were related by a Detroit witness, Mrs. Beulah T. Whitby, assistant director of the City of Detroit Interracial commission. We have lifted only one example from her testimony, but is typical: "L. A. Young operates three plants. Plant No. 1 had been manned entirely by colored workers. When they were ready to lay off by seniority they transferred white workers with longer seniority to Plant No. 1 and then began the layoff. By the use of this process all of the layoffs were of Negro workers."

DISCRIMINATION PREVENTS ADVANCEMENT

ing and firing tat discrimination exists. and firing that discrimination exists. Data were submitted to show that Negroes and other minorities—the Mexican-Americans particularly — are often denied training and upgrading opportunities, and equal pay for equal work. Striking examples of such discrimination were included in the testimony of Ernesto Galarza, Chief of the Labor division of the Pan-American union.

Mexicans, as well as Negroes, are restricted to the most menial jobs. "It is not an uncommon experience for Mexican workers," Mr. Galarza told the Labor committee, "to see younger and less experienced men move into the better jobs in spite of the principle of seniority. I have noted cases of Mexicans in oil refineries who receive ten cents an hour less than Anglo-Americans doing the same kind of work." 8-25-44

Mr. Galarza also urged consideration of the international implications of discrimination within this country. The status of people of Mexican origin in this country, he declared, "is the most sensitive test of good neighborly relations between the two countries."

Strong evidence of Mexico's awareness of the situation, and its deep concern, was the recent establishment by the Mexican Chamber of Deputies of a special committee to investigate discrimination against Mexicans in the United States.

South and Central American countries, Mr. Galarza added, "are equally sensitive to the discrimination suffered by the 2,500,000 U. S. citizens of Latin-American descent, "which Axis agents are constantly stressing . . . as a means of stirring up ill feeling on the part of the peoples of Latin-America towards the United States."

The danger of international repercussions was also analyzed by other proponents of the bill, among them Clarence E. Pickett, executive secretary of the American Friends Service committee. Study of Axis propaganda showed, Mr. Pickett reported, that "over and over again, and in hundreds of ways, the Japanese propagandists have said that there is no basis for hope for colored peoples as far as the United States is concerned; that they can expect no justice from us." 8-25-44

They have gone so far, Mr. Pickett added, as to declare that minority Americans who are serving on the battlefields today may, when they come back, have to fight within this country for the rights they fought to establish throughout the world.

The Chinese, too, are sensitive to the discrimination in this country, Mr. Pickett said. Quakers who have been doing relief work in China report that "the treatment of people of color, not just Negroes but orientals as well, in this country, is a matter of profound concern to the Chinese."

ATLANTA—(ANP)—Dr. Alva W. Taylor, Nashville, public panel member of the fourth regional War Labor board and a public member of industry panels in the wage and hour division of the department of labor, has been appointed to the staff of the FEPC as consultant, it was announced by Bruce A. Hunt, regional FEPC director.

This appointment brings to four the number of professional appointees in the office, the other three being John Hope, 2d, and James H. Tipton, fair practice examiners, and Mr. Hunt. Dr. Taylor is a graduate of Drake university and the University of Chicago. He was formerly professor of social ethics in the schools of religion at the University of Missouri and Vanderbilt university. He has written numerous books and pamphlets on interracial and industrial subjects.

CIO AUTO UNION JOINS DISCRIMINATION FIGHT

Times — New York, N.Y.
9-4-44

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3 (AP)—The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices and the War Policy Division of the United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers (CIO) have signed a working agreement designed to speed "the elimination of un-American discrimination."

The agreement, announced today by Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, and R. J. Thomas, UAW-CIO president, is the first negotiated between the committee and any union.

Under the agreement, the union will cooperate in the settlement of "bona fide complaints of discrimination involving any UAW-CIO officer or a plant in which the union has a local." 9-4-44

The agreement, Messrs. Ross and Thomas said, was expected to be of great benefit to both parties "by speeding the elimination of un-American discrimination which is undeniably harmful to the war effort and to the labor movement."

The War Policy Division of the union will cooperate with FEPC's regional offices in investigations, issue instructions to all UAW-CIO personnel that may be necessary for the observance of the agreement, and confer with FEPC representatives in an effort to adjust satisfactorily all cases brought to the division's attention.

Mr. Ross called the agreement "a great step forward in the American trade union movement which shows an ever growing realization that preservation of the right to work for all men regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin is the keystone to its future healthy existence."

Publisher Finds He Cannot Serve FEPC Further

Daily World — Atlanta, Ga.

Was An Original Member Appointed On July 1, 1943

By HARRY S. McALPIN
(Washington Bureau of Atlanta Daily WORLD And NNPA)

The resignation of P. B. Young from membership on the Fair Employment Practice Committee was announced Monday by Malcolm Ross, chairman of the committee. Mr. Young is president and editor-in-chief of the Norfolk Journal-Guide.

In informing the committee that he had sent his resignation to the president, Mr. Young said it was contrary to his wishes and very much to his regret. He stated that demands of the armed forces and the war effort had drawn so heavily upon irreplaceable members of his staff that he would no longer be able to find the time and energy to devote himself to the work of the committee.

Mr. Young became a member of the FEPC on July 1, 1943, as one of the original seven members appointed by the president under Executive Order 9346. In a letter to Mr. Young, Chairman Ross said "The committee at its last meeting learned with deep regret that your added responsibilities make it necessary for you to resign. Knowing the difficulties of running a newspaper during war time, we are doubly appreciative of the thoroughness and care with which you have devoted yourself to the problems of the committee. Your offer of continued help to the committee is readily accepted.

Difficulties of travel from Norfolk to Washington are known to have been an additional factor in Mr. Young's decision to resign. Only a few weeks ago, on an intended trip to a committee meeting, he was severely injured when his car skidded on a slippery road. He was unable to make the meeting, and as result of his injuries was hospitalized several days. Train travel to and from Norfolk is uncomfortably slow, requiring longer absences from his office at committee meeting times, and plane priorities of sufficient prestige are impossible to obtain for non-military persons. 2-22-44

It is rumored that another committee resignation may soon be announced.. On good authority, it is understood that Samuel Zemurray, president of the United Fruit Company of New Orleans is seriously contemplating resigning or already has submitted his resignation.

Among names prominently mentioned as successor to Mr. Young are those of P. L. Prattis, executive editor of the Pittsburgh Courier; Carter Wesley, Publisher of the Houston Informer and other papers in Texas and Louisiana; and Archie Alexander, noted builder.

Add Two To FEPC

Courier—Pittsburgh, Pa.

3-4-44

WASHINGTON—Attorney Chas. H. Houston, who was special counsel for the FEPC in the railroad hearings, and Charles Horn, president of the Twin-City Ordnance company, of Minnesota, have been selected by President Roosevelt to fill membership vacancies on the FEPC, created by the recent resignations of B. B. Young, Sr., and Samuel Zemurray, usually well informed sources here indicated this week.

Meanwhile, the Stacy committee, chosen by the President to recommend to him ways for securing substantial compliance of the railroads with FEPC directives against discrimination, met here last week with representatives of the carriers, the railway labor unions and FEPC officials, to canvass the situation presented by the refusal of the railroads and the unions to obey FEPC orders. 3-4-44

Following three days of negotiations with the parties concerned, Judge Walter P. Stacy, in a statement for the committee of which he is the chairman, declared: "The committee is of the opinion that progress has been made up to the present time and is hopeful that a solution may be reached that will be acceptable to all parties concerned."

The Future Of The FEPC

Courier—Pittsburgh, Pa.

Whether the war ends this year or next year, it is certain that it will end some time. 8-26-44

When the war ends, the Fair Employment Practices Committee which deals with war industries and businesses related to the war will also end, because war contracts will end and the national emergency requiring tremendous war production will also terminate.

This means that business will no longer be required to give Negro workers employment or promotion, and we shall return to the situation obtaining before the President issued Executive Order 8802.

Whether or not there will be a post-war FEPC thus depends upon whether a law is passed making this agency a permanent Governmental fixture.

Bills to this end have been introduced in the U. S. Senate and the House of Representatives.

As now drafted, these bills apply to any employer having more than five workers in his employ, who is engaged in interstate or foreign commerce; or under contract with the United States or any of its agencies; or performing work under sub-contract or otherwise, called for by a contract to which the United States or any agency thereof is a party. It should apply also to labor unions which have five or more members in the employ of one or more employers covered by the preceding points. A commission would be set up to enforce this, and to prevent unfair employment practices. 8-26-44

If such a law should be passed, it would obviously cover all of the important private employers in the United States and all of the labor unions.

Those who are interested in having such a law passed should wire or write to Mrs. Mary T. Norton of the House Labor Committee, Washington, D. C., to speed up the hearings on this bill for a permanent FEPC; while similar appeals should be made to Sen. Dennis Chavez of New Mexico, to hurry up with hearings in the Senate.

Now is the time to fight for the passage of a permanent FEPC law, if it is ever going to be passed.

There will be little chance of passage after the war is over, or even after the November election is over.

In its platform, the Democratic party passes over the question of a permanent FEPC with suspicious silence, the assumption being permitted that President Roosevelt, will "do the right thing"; but how can we be sure?

While the Republican party platform specifically backs a permanent FEPC and promises to work for it, one can never be sure that a party will not go back on its platform promises once it is in office.

Both sides are now desperately wooing the Negro voters because they hold the balance of power, so now is the time for us to press for the passage of a law making the FEPC permanent. 8-26-44

There is not a single minute to lose.

No matter what party wins the election, if the end of the war finds us without a law making the FEPC permanent, we will never get one.

Action, FEPC, Action!

Tribune—Washington, D.C.

One of the chief factors in bringing the Philadelphia Transit Company's Fascist strike to a showdown was immediate, positive action. 8-26-44

This action had its strength in the fact that it emanated from the forthright and uncompromising positon taken by the local FEPC and War Manpower offices, and was backed up by a Presidential order for seizure which brought in the Army under Maj. Gen. Philip Hayes.

Unstinted praise was heaped upon the FEPC and WMC officials for their ethics in refusing to entertain the overtures of Dr. A. A. Mitten, top PTC official, that the Government directive requiring the company to upgrade eight colored workers be withdrawn in the interest of industrial peace.

Following the Philadelphia case, the FEPC went into action with the Los Angeles Railway Company. After a 1-day hearing, the FEPC broke down the company's discrimination policies. Action again.

Now, it would seem, that the scene should shift to Washington. Although WMC Director Eugene V. Connolly, of this area, gave the CTC authority to write its own ticket in employing personnel without referrals of the USES, he must have known that the variety of tricks, double talk, and deception resorted to by the company to avoid working Negroes as busdrivers and motormen did not indicate that the company intended to comply with the nondiscrimination provisions of Section 13 of the Manpower Control Act.

Last week, however, Harry MacAlpin reported that Alexandria Sapiro, CTC personnel director, said (with reservation) that there had been no change in the company policy "during the past year and a half since we last tried to qualify a Negro."

With respect to the company's known policy of discrimination, MacAlpin also disclosed that the WMC has assured "the National Negro Publishers Association that a perodic check will be made to see that the company complies with ceiling and nondiscriminatory provisions, but that until " 'we have some experience, there is nothing we can do but take the company's word.' " 8-26-44

Much as we dislike to say it, it appears that the FEPC is permitting the WMC to pull the wool over its eyes. The namby-pamby tactics of Connolly and the regional WMC office appear to be nothing more than defeatist collaboration with the jimcrow of the CTC.

No new "experience" is needed.

The FEPC can start out here with a clearcut charge of discriminatory discharge. Mrs. Sarah Grayson filed the charge last January when the company fired her on learning she was colored.

It is our belief that the people of Washington want this muddle cleared up with the same kind of forthright action that has characterized the settlement of the Philadelphia and Los Angeles cases. Action, FEPC, action.

251 Cases Are Closed By FEPC

Daily World—Atlanta

10-3-44

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(S N S) Operational statistics for the Committee on Fair Employment Practice docket-satisfactory adjustments of complaints, in proportion to the total number of cases closed, increased from 10 in September to 22 in August to 22 in September. Of the 283 new cases, 240, or 85 per cent in August to 201 of the 283 new cases, or 71 per cent in September.

Alleged discrimination in hiring because of race, creed or national origin jumped from 8 in August to 21 during September.

Malcolm Ross, FEPC Chairman, announced Saturday that the increased number of cases closed for cause of discrimination rose from 33.4 per cent in August to 35.5 per cent in September.

The number of cases involving charges of employment discrimination because of race, creed or national origin during the month of September, 1944, and closed 251 cases, the 283 new cases, a slight decrease from the 89.3 per cent for the preceding month. Cases charging discrimination on the basis of creed increased from 14 in August to 22 in September.

Alleged discrimination in hiring because of national origin jumped from 8 in August to 21 during September.

As of October 1, 1944, the Committee had an increase of 41 over the total for September 1, 1944.

Make the FEPC Permanent

The Nation- 7-15-44

Dear Sirs: To those of us who were deeply involved in the struggle to insure continuance of the Fair Employment Practices Committee through Congressional approval of its appropriation for the next fiscal year it is clearly apparent that much of the credit for the favorable Senate vote of last week belongs to the many liberal forces throughout the nation which raised their voices in support of that agency. We know we speak for the millions of minority Americans when we say that by your splendid outspoken editorial of June 10 you contributed greatly to the cause of true democracy.

The FEPC has been granted its appropriation by Congress and has thereby received sanction and backing, but the fact remains that it is still handicapped by its lack of power to enforce its orders. Unless legislation is enacted to make it permanent, it will be abolished when the war ends and the problem of discrimination in employment becomes even more critical. 7-15-44

Awareness of the need for a permanent FEPC was indicated by the fact that even while the Senate was debating the advisability of continuing the present FEPC, the House Labor Committee was holding hearings on the Scanlon-Dawson-La Follette bill to give the FEPC permanent status and authority. Frustration and insecurity, it was demonstrated in these hearings, still haunt millions of minority-group Americans, for although they have made tremendous gains through employment in war industry, they have made practically no advance in any industry which is basic to the peace-time economy. Even when they are now employed, minority Americans, particularly Negroes and Latin Americans, are often denied full union rights, upgrading opportunities, and equal pay for equal work. Walter White, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who had just returned from a tour of the war fronts, told the committee: "Wherever I went the question most frequently asked by Negro soldiers . . . was whether or not Negroes on returning home will continue to be confined to bootblack jobs." And in this country Negroes are already finding themselves the first to go as the cutbacks begin.

As the hearings progress and the people generally become aware of the issues involved in the proposed bill for a permanent FEPC, we hope for clarification of many existing misunderstandings. To the people of North, West, and Midwest one fact, which has already been brought out in the committee investigation, is highly significant. That is the fact that only 10 per cent of the closed cases reported by the present FEPC originated in the eight states of the deep South.

What will the post-war reconversion period mean to the industrial centers of the North, West, and Midwest, where 90 per cent of the cases handled by the present FEPC originated? Gunnar Myrdal in his "An American Dilemma" recalls that "after the [First World] war the homecoming Negro soldier met the suspicion and fears of the Southern whites. In the North their new footholds in industry were contested by anxious white job-seekers in the post-war depression. A wave of lynchings swept the South, and even more bloody race riots swept the North." 7-15-44

Dare we neglect to take every possible precaution to prevent a repetition after this war?

Already representatives of most of the outstanding national civic, church, and union organizations have appeared before the House Labor Committee to urge approval of the Scanlon-Dawson-La Follette bill; and on June 23 an identical bill was introduced in the Senate by a group of six Republican and Democratic Senators. This would indicate that we are justified in our belief that the overwhelming majority of Americans are conscious of the dangers of the post-war period and are looking to their government for leadership in protecting the economic rights of minorities.

Washington, D. C., July 3

Teeth of FEPC Pulled, Southern Solons Aver

Constitution—Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—(AP) Restrictive amendments to legislation providing $500,000 for the fair employment practices committee will "severely curtail" its activities, southern Democrats who led the recent congressional fight against the agency declared today.

"The far-reaching effects of the amendments written into the measure by Senator Russell, Democrat, Georgia, were not immediately apparent," Representative Hendricks, Democrat, Florida, said. "But careful study shows they will seriously restrict the FEPC'S operations." 6-28-44

"We may have lost out in denying FEPC funds," House Majority Whip Ramspeck, Democrat, Georgia, told a reporter. "But it looks like we really won our fight by sharply limiting its power and authority."

The amendments were added to the independent offices appropriation bill, which was adopted by congress last week and is now awaiting President Roosevelt's expected signature.

RUSSELL'S EXPLANATION

Senator Russell said his legislation "will not prevent FEPC from making investigations and recommendations, but it specifically prohibits the agency from taking any affirmative or directive action to compel obeyance of its orders."

One provision, the Georgian pointed out, states "no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be used to pay any person employed by FEPC who issues or attempts to enforce any rule, regulations or order which repeals, amends or modifies any law enacted by congress." 6-28-44

Russell said this would require the comptroller general to deny salaries to FEPC workers "if they attempted any action not authorized by congress, such as superimposing in any war contract some requirements of their own regarding proportions of employes." The southerners have contended FEPC has forced employers to accept certain numbers of Negroes in specific positions by requiring adoption of contract clauses providing for such actions. 6-28-44

AMENDMENT DESCRIBED

Another Russell amendment specifies that "no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the compensation of any person to initiate, investigate or prosecute and proceeding against any person, firm or corporation which may result in the seizure or operation of any plant or other properties of such pesons, firm or corporation." 6-28-44

Russell said this provision "prohibits the government from taking over any firms, such as the railroads, just because they decline to abide by an FEPC order." The southerners have claimed the FEPC threatened to have the President seize 14 southern railroads if they failed to follow its orders regarding employment of Negroes.

Victory for Negroes' Rights in Philadelphia Gives FEPC Lever for Fighting Race Bias

PM's Bureau 7-16-44

By John T. Montoux

WASHINGTON, July 15.—The movement to end race discrimination in this country has won a big battle as a result of Philadelphia Transportation Co.'s capitulation to a directive issued last Nov. 15 by the FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) giving Negro employes an opportunity to become motormen, conductors, and drivers on Philadelphia's street cars and buses. 7-16-44

The victory is expected by FEPC officials to have an important bearing on similar situations that have already arisen or which are certain to rise in other cities, including Los Angeles and the Nation's capital itself.

Besides strengthening the hand of the FEPC, the happy ending to the Philadelphia story serves to show up the bogus nature of the opposition and to encourage bona fide labor unions to take a firm stand against discrimination.

Complaints Come In

This Philadelphia case has all those angles, plus a slap at Rep. Howard Smith (D., Va.) for good measure.

The FEPC first became interested in the case about a year ago when it began getting complaints from Negro employes of the Philadelphia Transportation Co. charging that "chaos" and impairment of the city's transportation would result from enforcing that the company refused to upgrade them to motormen or conductors.

But the FEPC chairman, Malcolm Ross, went to Philadelphia to investigate. It issued a final order, advising the company that its contract clause on manpower shortage and expressed a willingness to upgrade without discrimination, but it pointed out that its contract with a so-called independent union, Philadelphia Rapid Transit Employes' Union, provided that "prevailing customs" should remain in effect. The contract had been in effect since 1937. The so-called union explained that it had not been the custom to upgrade Negroes to motormen and conductors, and to change that custom would involve violation of the contract. Both the union and the company made it appear that this was their main concern.

Malcolm Ross

FEPC took the position that the President's Executive Order prohibiting racial discrimination in the filling of war jobs took precedence over the company-union interpretation of the contract. It issued a tentative directive providing for the upgrading of Negroes.

At a hearing in Philadelphia on the proposed order, union officers cried "chaos" and impairment of the city's transportation would result from enforcement of the directive.

While this was going on, the independent union was involved in a

FEPC was unimpressed. final order, advising the company that its contract clause on union representation contest with the CIO Transport Workers Union and the AFL Amalgamated Assn. of Street Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employes. In an election, the independent union based its campaign on "we've kept Negroes off the platforms of Philadelphia transportation."

The AFL union took no public stand. The CIO union favored nondiscrimination. 7-16-44

Final Chapter

Despite the fact that the independent union had twice before won Labor Board elections and despite its claim to a membership of some 6000 of the company's 10,000 employes, it was overwhelmingly defeated by the CIO union, polling only 1815 votes as against the Transport Workers' 4410. The AFL union got about the same number of votes as the independent union.

The election put an end to the independent union's defiance of the FEPC directive and its threats of strikes and chaos.

The final chapter in this story of the fight against race discrimination was written this week when the company posted notices in car barns to the effect that it will accept for employment "all qualified applicants without regard to the applicant's race, creed, color or national origin."

As a face-saver, the company notice explained that its action was taken in compliance with War Manpower's recent order requiring employers to accept qualified applicants referred to them by the U. S. Employment Service.

Ten Railroads For Fascism

Courier - Pittsburgh, Pa.

Now we know definitely that ten of the 14 American railroads cited by the Fair Employment Practices Committee for racial discrimination have not the slightest intention of complying with mandatory orders to hire Negroes as firemen, train conductors and yard foremen.

The attorney for the ten railroads, one Sidney Alderman, publicly so stated last week, and Frank Mulholland, counsel for many organizations of railroad workers, concurred. 3-11-44

Worse, these attorneys took occasion to threaten their Government with predictions of strikes, terrorism and sabotage if the railroads were compelled to comply with the FEPC mandate.

Since the FEPC has no legal power to force these ten railroads to introduce democratic methods of employment and promotion, the whole matter would seem to rest there, and the color caste system in the railroad industry will continue through collusion of management and labor.

The system of industrial caste based on color is simply fascism which the American people are offering tens of thousands of lives and spending hundreds of billions of dollars to destroy.

In view of the admitted and obvious shortage of national manpower in a world struggle for survival, the attitude of the ten railroads and the railroad unions is nothing short of sabotage of the war effort, a crime for which hundreds of people have been properly sent to prison for long terms since Pearl Harbor. The FBI, however, will scarcely act in this case.

As we have said many times before, the FEPC is helpless without a strong Federal law to invoke against fascist-minded employers and unions, and such a bill has been introduced in Congress. 3-11-44

All of our efforts should now be devoted to dredging that bill out of committee and forcing a vote upon it as soon as possible.

Twelve additional members of the House of Representatives, among them ten from New York City, this week informed the National Negro Congress that they have signed the petition to bring H.R. 1732, the Marcantonio Bill for a permanent Committee on Fair Employment Practice, up for debate and vote.

The total number of signatures now on the petition is not known, since under the rules of the House, no member is permitted to divulge which other members have signed. Among those known to have signed, however, are all the Representatives who have themselves introduced similar measures.

The announcement of Representatives that they have signed the petition came in response to letters to all members of the House from Mrs. Dorothy Funn, legislative representative of the National Negro Congress, urging action.

First Twelve Signers

The first twelve Representatives to inform the Congress that they have signed Petition 18 are:

Charles L. Labollette and Louis Ludlow, Indiana; Emanuel Celler, James Fitzpatrick, Arthur G. Klein, Louis J. Capozzoli, Charles A. Buckley, Walter A. Lynch, Joseph L. Pfeifer, Thomas L. Burchill, Samuel Dickstein, and James J. Heffernan, New York. 3-11-44

Others known through previous announcement to have signed include: John Coffee and Warren Magnusson, Washington; George Bender, Ohio; William Dawson and William Rowan, Illinois; Thomas Scanlon, Pennsylvania; James Fay and Donald O'Toole, New York.

Smith Hears Railroad Challenge FEPC Power

Tribune - Washington, D.C.

3-11-44

Slapped back on their haunches by the "I believe in social equality" declaration of Craig Vincent, War Shipping Board director, in a hearing last week on charges that he forced racial intermingling among ship crews, members of Howard Smith's special House Investigating Committee chose for more agreeable personality on the following day for their diversion—a witness who speaks their own language, Sidney S. Alderman, spokesman for fourteen Southern railroads, challenging authority of the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

Alderman called the FEPC an impudent tribunal and asserted that some higher power than the FEPC would have to tell the carriers how to upgrade Negro train workers. Near close of 1943, the FEPC ordered the Southern lines to give Negroes equal employment opportunities with whites.

Alderman stated also that the President's naming of a special three-man board to study the issue raised by the refusal of the lines to obey the order, indicates that he does not deem the FEPC directive as binding.

The railroads' counsel also accused Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, of beclouding the situation by his public utterances.

To refreshen memories, here's how the railroads recently evaded the real issue, as well as an illustration of how Mr. Ross put his finger on their evasion:

Railroads Evasive

"It is wholly impracticable, and indeed impossible, for these railroads to put into effect your committee's directives addressed against them.

"Any attempt on their part to comply with those directives, for instance, to promote Negroes to locomotive engineers or train conductors, would inevitably disrupt their present peaceful and co-operative relations with their employees, would antagonize the traveling and shipping public served by them, would substitute conditions of chaos for the present condition of harmony, would result in stoppages of transportation and would gravely and irreparably impair the whole war effort of the country.

"These railroads cannot assume the responsibility for precipitating such disastrous results. . . 3-11-44

"These railroads are ready at any time to confere with their employees of various crafts and classes to ascertain whether, under the orderly and controlling procedures of the Railway Labor Act, any more generally satisfactory solution of the racial problem of employment can be worked out by mutual agreement."

(In other words, the railroads said to the nation, "Would you like to have black conductors and engineers?" They deliberately ignored FEPC's real complaint that the railroads were trying to get rid of Negro firemen whom they had been hiring for more than a half century. Even Alderman stated at the hearings: "I certainly do not mean to contend that anything in the South would interfere with the employment of Negroes as fire men on locomotives.")

Chairman Ross Replied

"The question of preventing Negro railroad workers from being used by the carriers at their top skills is a war problem of the first order.

"Evidence at the FEPC hearing showed a shortage of 850 firemen on American railroads, this at a time when trained and experienced Negro firemen were unemployed and the carriers were preferring to take on green hands, simply because there has been for years a sometimes tacit and sometimes formal agreement between the railroads and the railroad unions to decrease the number of Negro firemen and give the jobs to white men.

"Racial prejudice is not at issue here. White Southern engineers have for decades had decent working relationships with Negro firemen. 3-11-44

"The firemen problem, and the problems of up-grading, job assignments and seniority rights of Negroes in the operating divisions and shops were the subject of four days of FEPC hearings in September.

"The railroad unions chose to ignore the hearings. The carriers made a perfunctory appearance. Their letter now makes a bid for public disapproval of FEPC by viewing with alarm alleged pretensions of Negroes to be engineers and conductors . . . The carriers complain that its directives were too broad, branding them as "impossible and impracticable." Yet no carriers' move to remedy discrimination was made until these matters were publicly examined. The chance to talk this dilemma through has been present ever since the hearing."

FEPC

Tribune - Washington, D.C.

The President's Fair Employment Practices Committee was created by executive order and financed out of presidential funds. Congress has never given it either an authorization or an appropriation. Presumably, it would cease to exist, therefore, if Congress enacts the Russell amendment forbidding executive transfer of funds to agencies a year or more old unless they have been specifically authorized by Congress. Indeed, this consequence appears to be one of Senator Russell's purposes. We have already expressed editorial approval of the general reform proposed by the Senator. But elimination of the FEPC seems to us an exceedingly unfortunate by-product.

The FEPC was established in the summer of 1941 at a time when Negroes felt keenly resentful of discrimination against their race in war industries. Some of them had projected a "march on Washington" as a form of protest. This explosive demonstration was called off when the President set up the FEPC, which was generally accepted by Negroes as evidence that the Federal Government recognized the justice of their grievances and would take effective steps to remedy them. It cannot be said that the FEPC has been more than moderately effective. Working in an area of deeply entrenched prejudices, it sought patiently to open job opportunities for Negroes. Our manpower shortage and the need for all-out production strengthened the clear logic of its efforts. It did not solve the problem of employment discrimination in the United States; but at least it satisfied Negroes that a solution was being sought. 3-11-44

A year ago the FEPC was rejuvenated and given additional powers. Under the chairmanship of Malcolm Ross it has pressed, still patiently but with fresh vigor, to utilize the skills and energies of Negroes in the war effort. Not long ago it called a number of the country's railroads and certain labor unions to account for their flagrantly discriminatory practices. No doubt this is what has brought down upon the agency the wrath of some Southern Congressmen. From the point of view of the national welfare, indeed from any democratic point of view, it is a wholly misguided wrath. The FEPC is simply trying to bring about a fuller mobilization of the Nation's manpower for war and a fuller realization of the principle of human equality on which the Nation is founded. 3-11-44

It would be genuinely tragic if race prejudice caused the liquidation of this agency. To American Negroes whose loyalty to the United States and devotion to democracy has remained steadfast in the face of bitter deprivations, the FEPC is a vital symbol. To renounce it would be to slam a door upon the legitimate hopes which our American litany has engendered and encouraged.

MAKE FEPC LEGAL

Many of those who have believed that the office of President of the United States carries with it authority equal to that of an absolute monarch are now getting wise to the fact that presidential authority, actually, is held within bounds, just as we were told in the old text books on Civil Government.

Globe + Independent —

It is unfortunate that many of our leaders who allow emotionalism to sweep them off their feet, were not able to calm themselves long enough to read the Constitution. It would have prevented them from by-passing Congress when they sought to put this government on record effectively against racial discrimination in all industries under contract to do war work.

Nashville, Tenn.

Instead of taking the logical and legal step toward eliminating racial discrimination in war industries, colored leaders romped off to Washington and got a Presidential Executive Ortion to foster a Fair Employment Practice Committee. To our emotional leaders it appeared that a Presidential Executive Order was capable of wiping out discrimination. The FEPC, they thought, n e e d e d only to go up and down the country and get facts showing what industries were violating the terms of their government contracts and the President's Executive Order and report them to the President. The FEPC did a good job of investigating and reporting. The fact is, it appears to have been "too good." 3-10-44

The job was so good that congressmen and senators from the backward states, always prepared to invoke the Constitution when doing so enables them to escape just penalties for the rascality of their predatory clients, are pointing out that Presidential Executive Orders are trespassing upon the rights of Congress. They will not, however, make a law outlawing Presidential Executive Orders but will refuse to appropriate money to pay the board and keep of Presidential "leg men" who go about investigating those who disobey these orders. Specifically, the congressmen would destroy FEPC by depriving it of expense money. 3-10-44

Congressmen who realize the ridiculous position the United States is in from its many undemocratic practices should press for the passage of the bill to establish a permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee. That would be a bureau that most certainly would deserve existence if Congress continues to spend the taxpayers' money to support the vaudeville show that Martin Dies has on the road.

The Dangerous FEPC

Journal - Atlanta, Ga.

THE SO-CALLED Fair Employment Practice Committee was created by President Roosevelt as a wartime agency with the avowed purpose of promoting full use of the country's manpower and of preventing unjust discrimination, as the Executive order put it, "in the employment of any person in war industries or in government by reason of race, creed, color or national origin." If the FEPC followed these fair professions and thereby served to expedite war production, it would merit hearty praise. If it confined its activities to lawful or reasonable aims and joined common justice with common sense in its procedure, it would not deserve the condemnation of thoughtful Americans. But the FEPC is so misguided that it confuses instead of clarifying the manpower problem, hinders instead of helping war production, and tends to break down instead of upbuilding good relations between the races. 7-12-44

We shall not recount here the long list of the FEPC's unwarranted and sometimes inflammatory acts, but the interested reader can find them set down in the record of Congressional hearings and summarized in a clear and dispassionate speech delivered in the United States Senate on June 16 last by Senator Richard B. Russell, of Georgia. Senator Russell indulged in no unsupported generalities, played upon no sectional prejudices. Calmly he cited the evidence to show that this Executive agency, with the creation of which Congress had nothing to do, "has constituted itself as a quasi court," with the combined functions of prosecutor, jury and judge. It has assumed the power "to dictate the policies of manufacturing concerns, railroads, labor unions and individual citizens." It has asserted the authority "to abrogate a solemn contract entered into between the Government and one of its citizens, if the citizen is not willing to permit the agency to take over his employment policies and direct whom he shall hire and what employes shall or shall not be promoted in his plant."

Senator Russell went at length into the Maryland case, where the FEPC is said to have precipitated a costly strike in a war-production plant by insisting that the same washroom and related conveniences be used by white and colored employes. It appears that the colored people were quite content to have separate facilities equally as good as those provided for the whites, and on this basis the issue could have been promptly and happily settled. But the FEPC ruled thus:

> The Committee takes the position that in the circumstances of this case, where there are frequent and temporary transfers of workers from department to department, such installing of segregated duplicate facilities cannot but lead to discriminatory employment practice. 7-12-44

The Senator also put into the Record a letter from John Hawk, secretary-treasurer and vice president of the Seafarers International Union of North America. It was addressed to the chairman of the special committee of the House to investigate Executive agencies and read in part as follows:

> I consider it an urgent obligation to direct the attention of your committee to a situation which is fast developing to a point where it may hamper the delivery of the cargoes so desperately needed by our fighting forces. I have reference to the arbitrary, dangerous and unrealistic interpretation being applied to the President's Executive order establishing the Fair Employment Practice Committee by a pair of starry-eyed fellow travelers heading the Atlantic Coast division of the recruitment and manning organization of the War Shipping Administration. . . . They are trying to compel the union to abandon a sound and tested policy which has resulted in harmonious relationships between Negro and white members over a period of many years. This policy, which is supported by the more than 2,000 Negroes in our membership, provides for a rotary hiring-hall system, fair and equitable in every way, which enables whites to share ships' quarters with whites and Negroes with Negroes. The Negro members of our union receive the same wages and voting privileges and enjoy precisely the same working conditions as our white members. It is this particular section of the President's order which is being twisted and distorted . . . to conform to certain social reformist theories which they are seeking to experiment with at the expense of the American seamen and the war effort, and in defiance of the sober judgment of practical men who have spent the greater part of their lives in the maritime industry.

Whoever cares for more evidence along the same line will find it in the Congressional Record of June 16, 1944, pages 6103-6120. The cases cited by Senator Russell and his careful dissection of the so-called Fair Employment Practice Committee should be enough to cause any thoughtful American to ponder deeply. The Journal goes farther and respectfully submits that they should be enough to cause the President himself serious concern, for there is no authority except the President's to which this committee is accountable. Though it assumes to exercise legislative and judicial powers, it is apparently beyond the control of Congress and the courts. To whom, then, can we turn for justice against an executive agency which complicates the manpower problem, impedes war production and retards interracial good will, if not to the nation's Chief Executive? This is the President's responsibility. 7-12-44

The peculiar pity of the FEPC's abuse of power is that it hurts most the very people it is supposed to help. The sanest and best minds in the South, with the co-operation of the best and sanest elements among our Negro citizens are moving patiently toward a solution of their common problems. But when a clique of heady doctrinaires, "most ignorant of what they are most assured," strike out for an impossible revolution and propose to burn down the house in order to exploit their social theories and fry their political fat, the South and The Journal say, No.

Whites Demanded Better Conditions For Race Workers

World — Memphis, Tenn.

7-14-44

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (SNS) — Quick settlement of a strike involving 500 workers at an Eastern war plant was one of the outstanding adjustments achieved by FEPC during the month of May, Chairman Malcolm Ross revealed today.

The settlement was one of 127 satisfactory adjustments reached during the period May 1 to 31 throughout the country. As of May 31, 1944, the Committee had 2,188 cases pending in its files, an increase of 39 over the April 30 total.

REACH AGREEMENT

The strike settlement, the work of FEPC Field examiners whose aid was requested by the U. S. Conciliation Service, averted a threat of disrupted production caused when some 500 white workers walked out demanding improved opportunities and working conditions for their Negro co-workers. Through conferences with the management, the union and the strikers, the FEPC representatives obtained promises of remedy for most of the complaints and agreement to submit unsettled points to the War Labor Board.

During the month of May the Committee docketed 401 cases and closed 362. In addition to the satisfactory adjustments, 18 cases were withdrawn by complainants, 17 were dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, 42 were closed because of insufficient evidence and 93 were disposed of for various other reasons.

7-14-44

Fourteen of the 401 cases docketed were of origin earlier than the May period, but were reopened and docketed during the month under the FEPC policy of reconsidering complaints when sufficient additional evidence is presented to warrant further action.

MOST INVOLVE RACE

Of the 367 cases docketed during May, 342 involved alleged discrimination because of race. Religious discrimination was featured in 23 cases and national origin bias in a similar number. 7-14-44

Discriminatory refusal to hire was charged in 151 cases. In 54 others refusal to upgrade in violation of teh Executive Order was involved, and 47 complaints alleged discriminatory working conditions.

Most of the adjustments were obtained through direct contact work in the field, Ross said. In a number of cases problems of war production stemming from threatened shortages of labor have been quickly eliminated through the cooperation of all parties concerned in conforming to the non-discrimination policy in employment.

CITE CASES

A few typical adjustments were cited by Ross:

In an iron works on the West Coast, complaints of discriminatory working conditions by Negroes were settled when FEPC representatives conferred with the management and the latter agreed to eliminate the objectionable practices.

The alleged discriminatory firing of two West Coast ship yard workers, referred to FEPC, was settled satisfactorily when the company reinstated the men, after some negotiation.

In the Midwestern refinery, the discharge of a dozen Negro workers, alleged through the device of a written examination on subjects unrelated to their specific jobs was brought to the Committee's attention. Conferences with company representatives resulted in agreement to rehire all of the workers in their former jobs.

7-14-44

A West Coast packing plant's failure to hire two qualified Negro women applicants although in need of such workers formed the basis of another complaint. During conferences with FEPC the company admitted no previous experience with colored women workers and a consequent fear of "trouble." Further conferences which also included the workers at the plant eventually resulted in clearing up of all difficulties and the company has proceeded to hire without regard to race ever since.

FEPC CONSIDERS POLICY ON LAYOFFS OF NEGROES

Daily World — Atlanta, Ga.

Agency Keenly Aware Because Race Last Hired, First Fired

7-23-44

WASHINGTON—(A N P) —Exploratory conversations were begun at the offices of the FEPC last week looking to the establishment of a policy to be pursued toward restraining disproportionate lay-offs among Negro war workers due to cutbacks and the introduction of reconversion programs.

These informal talks, it is learned unofficially, have not yet gone outside of the agency, but ultimately will be extended to include the viewpoints of other agencies which might conceivably have a finger in the matter, notably the War Manpower commission, the war and navy departments, and perhaps the U. . Maritime commission. 7-23-44

FEPC is keenly aware of the saying that the Negro is generally the last hired and the first fired. Because this happens to be the demonstrated case in their own experience, the agency would like some way of altering this tradition and thereby aid Negroes in retaining some of the industrial gains which have been made in the period of the war.

DIFFICULT PROBLEM

One of the ideas advanced at the initial discussions was one which would call upon employers to observe certain agreed quotas in the matter of lay-offs. For example, whereas Negroes may have come into the employ relatively late and so have little seniority, some basis might be found for retaining a number of these workers irrespective of seniority.

Obviously this is an approach which would have to have the sanction of labor unions, which in many instances contol or "police" hirings and firings of all workers. 7-23-44

The problem was also recognized that under such a quota arrangement, other "interest" groups might use the plan as a precedent and push their own claims for "special treatment." Further, because general quotas for the hiring of Negroes were originally deplored and frowned upon, it might well be cause for wonder as to how FEPC could reconcile its acceptance of a quota basis in one instance and reject it in another.

CONSIDER "REABSORPTION"

An unofficial spokesman for the committee also pointed out that the War Production board might well play an important part even now. The suggestion was made that WPB might take into account, when it is about to force employment cutbacks due to contract cancellations, the "reabsorption" qualities of the workes layed off as a factor in determining the final action. 7-23-44

Specifically, where it is fairly obvious that Negroes in a given area are holding jobs won at great expenditure of effort are to be the chief victims of a cut-back because of the reluctance, and in cases the opposition, of other employers to obsorb them, such cutbacks ought not be made except as a final alternative.

The observation was also made that labor turnover may prove an important factor. Whereas turnover among whites has been relatively high, Negroes who have gotten war jobs have held onto them. The result is that their seniority has become higher due to replacements which have come in behind them.

THE POINT OF VIEW

Courier-Journal — Louisville, Ky.
Soldier of Camp Barkley, Texas, appeals for abolition of discrimination in employment
7-8-44

A Call for Fair Treatment

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal.

Let us prevent further discrimination in employment relations subject to the control by the federal government. Providing privileges and immunities and the right to work without discrimination should be declared a constitutional privilege not to be abridged by any state.

Employers should be forbidden by law to discriminate against any person because of his race, creed, color, national origin or ancestry with respect to the hire, tenure, or terms and conditions of his employment. Labor unions should be forbidden to refuse membership and otherwise to discriminate against any person because of race.

Our Congress is now considering legislation to give permanence to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices. If this action is successful, the government's policy to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color, or national origin will continue into the postwar period.

I think it is the solemn duty of every Democratic Senator and Congressman immediately without hesitancy to back this plan 100 per cent. The question is vital to the postwar period and to what we are fighting for.

Don't abuse our constitutional right or blacken it with race riots or our own Bloody Monday. Avoid all this by passing this grand bill of our great leaders. Let us abolish discrimination now and in the future and let brotherly love prevail throughout our nation. Whether Republicans or Democrats.

Restore $500,000 FEPC Item To Bill

Call—Kansas City, Mo

Southern Senators Defeated

Georgia's Russell Fails in Attempt To Kill Committee

6-16-44

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — Senator Russell of Georgia tried trickery Saturday, June 10, to remove the FEPC's $500,000 from the War Agencies Appropriation bill but he was out-maneuvered Monday and the item was restored to the budget.

The senate appropriations committee voted 14 to 6 Monday to give the FEPC a half-million dollars on which to operate for a year. The bill now goes to the senate floor where Russell says he will continue his fight to eliminate all funds for the FEPC and thus kill the agency.

Meeting of Committee

Here is the way Senator Russell attempted to eliminate the FEPC from the picture:

On Saturday with the permission of Senator McKellar of Tennessee, acting chairman of the appropriations committee, Russell called a meeting of the sub-committee considering the War Agencies bill. Having had no notice that the sub-committee would meet most of the senators were out of the city. Only two friends of the FEPC were present, Senators Thomas of Oklahoma and Gurney of South Dakota.

Therefore, three Southern senators, Russell, Bankhead of Alabama and Overton of Louisiana were able to eliminate the FEPC item by vote of 3 to 2. Thomas and Gurney voting against the elimination. 6-16-44

Learning of this brazen trickery, the N.A.A.C.P.'s Washington bureau immediately wired 19 non-southern members of the committee pointing out that three opponents of the FEPC had outvoted 10 senators known to favor it. Describing the action of the sub-committee as a "travesty on democratic processes," the wire told the senators that it was imperative that the majority favoring the appropriation attend the meeting of the full appropriations committee Monday and restore the FEPC item to the budget.

Senators Voting

"Whoever fails to vote for the appropriation," the N.A.A.C.P. wire continued, "in person or by proxy declares himself to be an enemy of economic justice for American minorities."

Before the appropriations committee met Monday morning, Leslie Perry of the N.A.A.C.P. bureau, talked with 16 committee members or their secretaries urging that the senators vote for restoration of the FEPC appropriation. 6-16-44

Senator Brooks who was in Illinois immediately wired his proxy favoring the $500,000 appropriation. The motion to override Saturday's action of the sub-committee was carried 14 to 6.

Senators voting to restore the FEPC item were:

Voting against the FEPC were: McKeller of Tennessee, Russell of Georgia, Bankhead of Alabama, Overton of Louisiana (proxy), Maybank of South Carolina and Holman of Oregon.

Senators not voting were Bridges, Glass, Nye, Truman and White.

An amendment was passed reducing the salary of the FEPC chairman from $10,000 to $8,000. Russell offered an amendment limiting Negro employes to 25 per cent of the FEPC payroll. When the amendment was defeated, Russell announced bitterly that he would continue his fight against the agency when the bill reaches the senate floor.

Groups Review 1943 Gains in Employment

People's Voice—New York, N. Y.

5-6-44

The second annual report of the Metropolitan Council on Fair Employment Practices, held last Thursday at the American Common, 40 E 40 st, revealed not only current trends in the fight against employment discrimination, but disclosed the unified effort of millions of Americans of many faiths and races engaged in a daily task of combatting one of the most basic and serious evils that endanger American democracy — that of denying minority peoples the right to work.

Although the reports indicated improvement in employment opportunities for Negroes and other minorities, they nevertheless pointed out that there is still a big job to be done in bringing about the fullest utilization of our nation's manpower in time of war.

POOL EXPERIENCE

Ten of the 33 inter-faith and interracial organizations comprising the Metropolitan Council on Fair Employment Practices reported on their work and achievements during the previous year. These reports will be the basis for the May 5th and 6th Conference at which similar organizations from other sections of the country will pool experiences and make plans meeting the national un-American problem of discrimination even more effectively.

5-6-44

Edward Lawson of the FEPC reported that "Negroes are making an increasingly important contribution to the industrial phase of the war effort." He says the WMC records show an increase in the employment of Negroes in war industries from the 1942 estimate of 3% to 7.2% of the 15,000,000 in the United States engaged in the production of ships, planes and guns. Refusal to hire and to upgrade as in the past make up the bulk of reported discriminations to his office. 5-6-44

GAINS IN INDUSTRY

Mr. Lawson's analysis of these unions which still bar Negroes from membership and therefore from vital war work showed that they are relatively few. Out of approximately 200 unions in the United States, 13 bar by constitutional provision, 5 by tacit consent of membership and officers, and 1 by ritual. Nine, according to Mr. Lawson, afford only segregated auxiliary status to Negroes. He pointed out that overcoming these practices is a major task. Mr. Lawson's report showed that major gains in minority groups employment have been in the maritime and railroad industries, in government employment and such essential service activities as hospitals and transportation. Pennsylvania RR will now have Negro dining car stewards, and the B&O will upgrade certain types of workers. Other railroads are making similar agreements. The FEPC report showed 12.5 of the 2,000,000 Federal workers. In 1938 Negroes composed 8.4. Mr. Lawson pointed out that up to a few months ago all but a few hospitals in N.Y.C. employed only white nurses. Today, the report states, 38 hospitals employ Negro nurses, or have signified a willingness to do so. Mr. Lawson's report offsets current fears of serious layoffs in war production. He said this was true only in a few plants.

[EDITORIAL]

[NOTE: Dr. Channing Tobias's sensational revelations at last week's register-to-vote rally for Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt in Harlem, emphasize the stake of the Fair Employment Practice Committee in the coming elections. (See page 21). For the guidance of voters, we summarize below the highlights in the hectic career of this hard-fought federal agency. From the following record, it is perfectly clear who are the true friends and the real enemies of FEPC.—Editors.]

SUMMER 1941

The Situation: Negroes were being barred from newly opened jobs in war production.

What Roosevelt Did: President Roosevelt issued Executive Order 8802 creating FEPC, and financed it out of his own budget. This was the first time in history a federal agency was set up to combat racial discrimination in employment.

What Dewey-Republicans Did: Nothing. 10-21-44

FALL 1943

The Situation: Comptroller General Warren ruled that FEPC was not a "war agency" which need not be followed.

What Roosevelt Did: President (Ga.) introduced an amendment to kill FEPC as a non-statutory agency unauthorized by Congress. Roosevelt reversed Warren's ruling, and declared that FEPC agency unauthorized by Congress. directives were mere "advisory opinions" which must be obeyed.

What Dewey-Republicans Did: Nothing. 10-21-44

What Dewey-Republicans Did: House Republicans joined hands with anti-Roosevelt southern Democrats to defeat the FEPC appropriation — until Representative Marcantonio forced a record vote, causing the Republicans to run for cover. . . . Governor Dewey killed the Wicks bills for a New York State "FEPC."

FALL 1944

The Situation: The Philadelphia transit strike threatened to block FEPC's order for the upgrading of eight Negro workers, and thus to destroy the authority of the Committee (while the President was again out of the country).

What Roosevelt Did: From way out in the Pacific, President Roosevelt ordered the U.S. Army to enter Philadelphia and enforce FEPC's directive. The strike was broken, and the Negro motormen and conductors held their new jobs.

What Dewey-Republicans Did: The Republican Mayor of Philadelphia said or did nothing to stop this race-hate, anti-war transit strike. . . . The Republican Governor of Pennsylvania said or did nothing. . . . Governor Dewey and all other GOP governors, then meeting in St. Louis, said not one word in support of FEPC or against the strike

A PERMANENT FEPC

Both Presidential candidates have expressed themselves recently on the issue of a permanent Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

● President Roosevelt, in conference with Negro leaders at the White House, recalled that he "invented" FEPC and had fought hard to keep operating. He made clear his determination to make FEPC permanent;

● Governor Dewey, speaking in Seattle, said he was in favor of a permanent FEPC—but care was taken to leave this statement out of the press releases the Republicans sent to southern newspapers.

We agree with Dr. Channing Tobias, who declared: "I say we cannot trust this man (Dewey) to administer a permanent FEPC law if it is passed."

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S "DEEDS" MEAN MUCH MORE FOR A PERMANENT FEPC THAN DO CANDIDATE DEWEY'S DOUBLE-TALKING (for use in the North only) "WORDS."

Hearings on State FEPC Drawing Wide Interest

Unusual interest is being demonstrated in the hearings on proposed state legislation against bias in employment, to be held by the New York State Commission against Discrimination in New York City Dec. 4, 5 and 6, the Daily Worker learned yesterday.

More than 250 representatives of religious and racial, trade union social, fraternal and good-will groups will be present at the Bar Association, 42 W. 44th St., to plead the case against bias in jobs.

Outstanding response is also reported to hearings to be held in four major upstate cities, beginning Monday in Albany in the Assembly Chambers in the State Capitol. Other hearings will be held in Syracuse, Rochester and Buffalo.

PROPOSSED LAW OUTLINED

The proposed legislation provides for a Discrimination Division—a State FEPC—as an executive department under the Governor.

It would make it illegal:

1. For an employer to discriminate in employment or in conditions of employment because of race, color or national origin.

2. For a labor organization to exclude or expel from membership or discriminate in any other way against anyone.

3. For an employer or employment agency to discriminate against anyone who files a complaint or testifies concerning discrimination.

A full-time commission of five members empowered to investigate complaints and order corrections of illegal bias, is provided for in the measure. If the discrimination continues, the commission may go to the Supreme Court for an order compelling compliance. The commission is also empowered to set up community advisory councils to study bias problems in "all or specific fields of human relationships."

The present measure, considerably watered down, differs from the Wicks proposals in two important respects. The first measure carried a specific penalty for violation of the Commission's order of a $5,000 fine or a year in jail. The present measure fails to do so. The Wicks measure likewise banned bias in all fields, whereas the current measure is confined to jobs only.

Hearing Schedule On FEPC for State

Hearings on proposed legislation against discrimination in employment will be held by the New York State Commission Against Discrimination on:

Nov. 27 — Albany, Assembly Chambers, State Capitol.

Nov. 28 — Syracuse, Council Chambers, City Hall.

Nov. 29 — Rochester, Council Chambers, City Hall.

Nov. 30 — Buffalo, Council Chambers, City Hall.

Dec. 4, 5, 6 — New York City, Bar Association, 42 W. 44 St. All hearings will open at 10 a. m.

FEPC Measure Gets Hearing But Early Passage Doubtful

PM's

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—The House Committee on Labor, headed by Rep. Mary Norton (D., N. J.) today continues hearings on a bill establishing a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission.

Mary Norton

Asserting that "no opponents of the bill have asked to be heard," Committee spokesmen disclosed that today's witnesses include Robert S. Beach of the National Assn. of Building Owners and Managers, as well as spokesmen for the United Electrical and Radio Workers, and the United Canning, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers, both CIO.

Legislation for a permanent FEPC was rushed out by the Senate Education and Labor Committee and placed in line on the Senate calendar just before the pre-election recess. The Senate measure, authored by Sen. Dennis Chavez (D., N. M.) probably will not be acted on in this session, however. Chavez is not expected to return to Washington until Dec. 1. Chairman Elbert Thomas, whose Committee reported the bill, will not be at the Capital until next week. If the measure dies with this Congress, it must go through processing in committee and eventually take its place on the calendar of the 79th Congress.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Norton expressed the hope that if her Committee completes hearings on the bill this week, the House will take action before Dec. 10—the date on which the present Congress hopes to clean up and go home.

Both Houses of Congress will have to act, however, if the bill is to become law in this session.

A Permanent FEPC

THE House Labor Committee has approved the La Follette-Scanlon-Dawson Bill giving permanent statutory basis to the President's Committee of Fair Employment Practices. In a dramatic session the City Council of New York unanimously endorsed a resolution asking Congress to support a permanent FEPC. This resolution was identical with the resolution originally introduced by Councilman Benjamin J. Davis, Jr. In Syracuse New York ALP and CIO spokesmen joined with other groups in urging strengthening of two state anti-discrimination bills.

These are important steps in the right direction. They must be backed by all labor and progressive forces and people's organizations. The hearings on the New York bills must be participated in because there are powerful forces who showed during the election that they will block every such measure designed to strengthen national unity.

Taking Nothing From Nothing

By Cliff Mackay

THE POLL TAX SENATORS, though losing their bitter and demagogic fight to kill the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice by denying it funds, nevertheless are clapping their hands with glee over the successful insertion in the appropriations measure of three amendments. But their applause might be slightly premature.

These amendments were introduced by Georgia's Richard B. Russell, whose arguments revealed his belief that it is perfectly proper and just for Negroes to fight and die for America, and still be denied the chance to work for America. They were what was left out of six cleverly-worded phrases designed to completely emasculate the FEPC, just in case the battle to get rid of the agency once and for all was lost.

MACKAY

THREE REMAIN

The amendments held that (1) Persons found guilty of discrimination under the President's Executive Order were to be given the right to appeal to the President before the FEPC order to cease and desist from discrimination is binding upon them; (2) The committee is prevented from violating any act of Congress; and (3) The committee is prohibited from engaging in any activity which might result in plant seizure for failure of a defendant to abide by FEPC orders.

Russell and his poll-tax cohorts, Bilbo of Mississippi, McKellar of Tennessee and McClellan of Arkansas are patting each other on the back for having been successful in getting these tacked on the bill, and Georgia's junior senator last week went so far as to release to the press a statement virtually boasting that the FEPC would no longer be effective in interfering with the South's sacred traditions.

But a careful study of the President's Executive Order which created the committee discloses that Mr. Russell was actually erecting a straw man with which to do battle. In truth, the FEPC has never enjoyed any of the powers which the Georgia senator worked so hard to remove. His amendments are akin to trying to remove teeth from an already toothless lion. A third grade child knows that nothing from nothing leaves the inevitable nothing, event if Mr. Russell, so blinded by prejudice and intolerance, can't see it.

WASTED MOTION

The first amendment granting to discriminating employers the right to appeal to the President before obeying the FEPC order merely reaffirms a right they already enjoyed. Congressional action to affirm it was just so much wasted motion. Of all the thousands of cases acted upon by the FEPC since its creation in 1941 only two have been referred to the President. One was the Boilermakers' case on the West coast, the other came as a result of the railroad hearings. 7-2-44

Neither of these two defendants were denied the right to appeal to the President. In fact they did so, with the Boilermakers seeking to circumvent the directive by setting up auxiliary unions and the railroads having their case turned over to another committee, thus further delaying compliance.

Certainly this amendment will take nothing from the FEPC and should cause not a ripple of concern among those whose duty it is to enforce the executive order.

The second amendment dealing with "amending or modifying any act of Congress" is supposed to remove from war contracts stipulations that certain percentages of the contractor's employees must be Negroes. Again this fails to effect the FEPC which has no such powers. The agency issuing the contract, seeking to carry out the spirit of the administration's non-discrimination policy makes this stipulation. So amendment number two adds up to nothing.

MEANINGLESS GESTURE

The third, prohibiting the committee from "engaging in any activity which might result in plant seizure is another meaningless amendment which could have been written only by a person ignorant of the history of the FEPC or who choses to place a twisted interpretation on the work it is attempting to do.

The FEPC from its inception has not depended upon force to bring about compliance with its directives. It, instead, has depended solely on an enlightened public opinion exerting the necessary pressure to see that justice is done. Its investigations and examiners have gathered the facts, presented the evidence and relied upon an America fighting a global war for justice and democracy to see the dire necessity of making real these two war objectives to all Americans

Certainly Mr. Russell's amendments, no matter how evil were his intentions in introducing them, fail to interfere with this noble FEPC endeavor. 7-2-44

MUST GET BUSY

But the progressive forces in America and in Congress who made FEPC possible and who have just saved it from a premature death, have no time to sit back and congratulate themselves. The senate's 38-21 vote merely gave the agency a twelve months' breathing spell. Next year the reactionaries will be more determined and will again gang up in their unholy alliance to completely destroy this agency seeking to make economic opportunity more than mere words.

The bitter fight the agency has just gone through, should serve full notice to all who truly believe in, not merely give lip service to all America stands for, that immediate and unequivocable support must be given the Scanlon-Dawson-La-Follette bill and its senate companion, the Chavez bill creating a permanent FEPC.

Only by enactment of these bills can America promising freedom from want to the rest of the world, make it a living fact for thirteen millions of her own citizens.

Forum Of The People

Age-Herald-Birmingham, Ala.
FOR A PERMANENT FEPC

To Editor The Age-Herald:

To those of us who were deeply involved in the struggle to insure continuance of FEPC through congressional approval of its appropriation for the next fiscal year, it is clearly apparent that much of the credit for the favorable Senate vote of last week belongs to the many liberal forces throughout the nation who raised their voices in support of the principle of governmental action to protect minorities against discrimination in war employment. 7-1-44

We know we speak for the millions of minority Americans when we say that by expressing your awareness that "the general purpose underlying it (FEPC) is sound," in your editorial of May 26, you contributed greatly to the cause of true democracy.

FEPC has been granted its appropriation by Congress, and has thereby received congressional authority and backing, but the fact remains that it still is handicapped by its lack of power to enforce its orders, and unless legislation is enacted to make it permanent, it will be abolished when the war ends and the problem of discrimination in employment becomes even more critical.

Awareness of the need for a permanent FEPC was indicated by the fact that even while the Senate was debating the advisability of continuing the present FEPC, the House labor committee was holding hearings on the Scanlon-Dawson- La Follette bill to give FEPC permanent status and authority. Frustration and insecurity, it was demonstrated in these hearings, still taunt millions of minority group Americans, for although they have made tremendous gains through employment in war industry, they have made practically no advance in any industry which is basic to the peacetime economy. Even where they are not employed, minority Americans, particularly Negroes and Latin-Americans, are often denied full union rights, upgrading opportunities and equal pay for equal work. And already minorities are finding themselves the first to go as the cutbacks begin.

As the hearings progress and the people generally become aware of the issues involved in the proposed bill for a permanent FEPC we hope for clarification of many existing misunderstandings. Primarily it should be understood that governmental action to prevent discrimination in employment no more involves social relationships than does the wages and hours law, or the national labor relations act. 7-1-44

To the people of the South one fact which has already been brought out in the committee investigation is highly significant. That is the fact that only 10 per cent of the closed cases reported by the present FEPC originated in the eight states of the Deep South. The Negro is the traditional worker of the South, and it is not surprising that FEPC has not had many complaints of actual denial of war employment to him there. Nevertheless, there are problems of training and placement in skilled jobs which still remain to be solved, and as for the postwar period, we know that many Southerners believe that in the interest of the future industrial good health of the South, some means should be found to raise the general level of consumer prosperity. One effective way would be to insure the fullest possible use of all the craft skills the region owns. 7-1-44

Already representatives of most of the outstanding national civic, church and union organizations have appeared before the House labor committee to urge approval of the Scanlon-Dawson-La Follette bill; and on June 23 an identical bill was introduced in the Senate by a group of Republican and Democratic senators. This would indicate that we are justified in our belief that the overwhelming majority of Americans are convinced that race, color, creed or national origin should not be a barrier to employment and to fullest utilization of the skills of the individual.

We believe that, by calling these facts to the attention of your readers, you will be performing another great service in the cause of economic democracy.

Saved By Narrow Margin

Daily World — Atlanta, Ga.

The narrow margin by which the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices was saved last Tuesday in the United States Senate, serves to emphasize the severe opposition it has and must continue to encounter from the forces of reaction and intense economic greed in the nation. 6-25-44.

Refusing to go alone with Senator Richard B. Russell of Georgia, arch foe of the agency, the Senate voted 38 to 21 to save the FEPC by giving to it an official status as part of the regular war agencies appropriation bill with the vital half-million dollars necessary for its continued operation. The Senate, however, did support and uphold three crippling amendments by Senator Russell which would (1) prohibit use of the $500,000 appropriation to pay the salaries of any person on any staff who "initates, investigates or otherwise work on any complaint where the person accused of discriminating does not have the right to appeal any ruling to the president; (2) violate any act of Congress by orders of directives or recommendations of the FEPC;(3) work on any case which might result in seizure of the plant by federal authorities."

Whether the joint Committee of the House and Senate will accept Russell's amendments or just what effects they will have upon the effective operation of the FEPC, we are unable to know at this time. Nevertheless, Negroes and other minorities in the nation may be comforted in part by the fact that the agency was at least retained, in spite of the shocking and shameful opposition which has come to the measure from men who should never need to be told of their indispensable and clear duty to see to it that all groups in our nation should be given the right to work and be compensated for their work regardless to their racial or religious affiliations. 6-25-44

It is in the first instance a sad commentary upon the nation that the creation of such an agency was ever necessary in order to secure and safeguard minority groups from industrial exploitation and discrimination. But the plain fact is that minority groups have and continue to be denied their proper and honest place in our economic scheme. The practice of the railroads and their bland admission of gross discrimination against Negroes and other minorities, proves the point. There are hundreds upon hundreds of other examples. And the great pity is that they are permitted to defy their government and continue their customs of treating workers as they choose. Maybe yet the government must bring itself around to the matter of getting tough enough at least to serve notice on all such recalcitrants that it means to enforce its directives and that no son will ever get so big and powerful as to ignore his father's orders.

Urging Support for Fair Employment Committee.

By Alfred Baker Lewis. 6-13-44

A measure which is very important for the morale of our Negro fellow citizens is the appropriation of $500,000 for the Fair Employment Practice Committee, the government agency set up by President Roosevelt to prevent discrimination on the grounds of race, color, or religion, in the employment policies of war industries. 6-13-44

The appropriation, tiny though it is compared with the total war expenditures, is being fought by some of the anti-New Deal forces among the southern Democrats, in alliance, I am sorry to say, with some northern Republicans. The measure is now before the Senate Appropriations Committee. If the efforts to knock it out of the Appropriations bill now before that committee prove successful, Negro morale will suffer a severe blow.

Progressive persons should also give support to the bi-partisan measure now under consideration by the House Labor Committee for a permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee to stop discrimination in job opportunities as a permanent peacetime policy.

Such a measure is necessary unless we are willing to continue giving the lie to our boast that our country is a land of equal opportunity.

The Battle of Washington, III

Fight on FEPC Shaping Up

PM — New York, N.Y. 7-9-44

By NATHAN ROBERTSON
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 8.—One of the major legislative battles shaping up for the return of Congress is over the creation of a permanent FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee.)

Regardless of what the Democrats do about this issue in their national platform they will not be able to escape facing it because hearings already are scheduled to resume on the permanent FEPC bill as soon as Congress returns. A nationwide drive is now under way to line up support for the measure and the Republican platform has endorsed it.

The campaign for the bill is headed by a National Council for a Permanent FEPC, with Sens. Arthur Capper (R., Kans.) and Robert F. Wagner (D., N. Y.) as honorary chairmen.

A report just issued by the National Council hailed the action of Congress in voting funds for the temporary FEPC as a "signal victory" for "the principle of Federal action to prevent discrimination in employment." But the Council added:

"We want a permanent FEPC with 'teeth.' That means we now enter the most significant and important phase of our campaign.

The bill for a permanent FEPC was introduced in the House by Reps. Thomas E. Scanlon (D., Pa.), William L. Dawson (D., Ill.), and Charles LaFollette (R., Ind.). It was introduced in the Senate by Sens. Dennis Chavez (D., N. M.), Sheridan Downey (D., Calif.), James E. Murray (D., Mont.), William Langer (R., N. D.), and Wagner and Capper.

Before Congress adjourned the House Labor Committee held three weeks of hearings on the measure at which it was supported by civic, religious and labor groups.

Capper

Fight For FEPC Funds

The Fair Employment Practices Committee is applying for $585,000 to carry on its work, and because it is the one Federal agency making an effort to eliminate America's curse of the color bar in employment, every American who loves his country and loves fair play will do everything he can to block any effort on the part of Negrophobes and reactionaries in Washington to hold up this FEPC budget.

All of us are distressingly aware that the FEPC has fallen short of being a success, but those acquainted with the numerous handicaps under which it started and has continued its work will be the first to concede that the committee has had a wholesome effect on general industrial employment practice, even though it was able to wield only moral force.

That certain elements in our Government regard the work of the FEPC as dangerous precedent is seen in the many attempts made to kill it off, the latest of which is headed by Senator Russell of (of course!) Georgia, who wants to "wipe out the Fair Employment Practices Committee" through his amendment to the Independent Offices Bill.

This danger will always be present as long as there are people like Senator Russell in this country and especially having authority in Washington.

To guard against the efforts of this element, lovers of fairplay must not only fight for the FEPC budget, but go much farther and work for the passage of a Federal law punishing severely those discriminating against citizens because of color, creed or nationality . . . thus giving the FEPC a real cudgel to work with instead of mere moral force.

There is a certain element in this country which has no intention of playing fair where the Negro and the Jew are concerned, and the only thing that element respects is force.

FRIDAY MOR ING, S. TEMBER 22,

FEPC LIMITATIONS

Globe Independent

This newspaper belongs to that small minority of realists who have never worked up an unnecessary amount of confidence in the wonders that can be performed for the Negro race with a Fair Employment Practices Committee. We have contended all along that all that has been accomplished in getting jobs for Negroes in industries operating under government contracts could have been accomplished just as effectively by the U. S. Department of Justice, thus making it unnecessary to add any more tax-eaters to the Federal payroll.

Industrialists who signed Government contracts, which stipulated they were not to practice race discrimination in hiring workers to do Government work, would have paid more attention to policing done by the FBI, we hold, than to any policing done by the traveling delegates of the FEPC.

We, however, are strong for a Federally-enacted FEPC because that is the way to have an agency with power and authority. Also, such an agency would very logically begin its work right in Washington, among departments and bureaus there. There is plenty race discrimination going on at the Nation's Capital. As long as it continues, industrialists will have a good excuse to follow the example of Uncle Sam and indulge to their heart's satisfaction in employing workers with due regard for their "race, color, religion and national origin."

We hope some of the FEPC enthusiasts will get wise to the fact that even a Federal statute, setting up such an agency, will not have authority to regulate the employment of persons in private industry. That is, if the American system of "free enterprise" accidentally survives the attack being made upon it by the totaliarians now seeking to move in and take over the American government.

We have many business enterprises operated by Negroes. The owners of these concerns—even those who yell loud for an FEPC—would invoke the Constitution, the Bill of Rights, the Golden Rule and what not, if any Government snooper came around and told them they did not have any white workers, or Chinese workers on the premises and they must hire some or go to jail.

Assuming that "free enterprise" is likely to remain with us in the post-war period, it would behoove Negroes religiously to make good on the jobs they now have—perform all the tasks they have so efficiently, so punctually and with such a show of good manners as to make themselves the most desirable workers obtainable in that period, so to come, when the supply of workers be far greater than the demand.

Move Pushed for Permanent FEPC

PHILADELPHIA. — The creation of a Pennsylvania Fair Employment Practices C[illegible]ion is being proposed to the legislature by the Ten[illegible] Commission on the Conditions of the Urban Colored Population. This is an official body, set up and financed by the legislature, and authorized to submit proposals for laws to it.

The public meeting in Philadelphia last Thursday to consider the proposed FEPC, and 28 other legislative recommendations, is one of a number of similar meetings to be held in other cities to win public support for the Commission's program. (It will be sent on request to the Commission's office at 524 South 16 St.) It includes, under Housing, the enactment of a uniform statewide housing and sanitation code, and proposals for low-cost public housing. Under Health, extension of state-owned medical facilities to provide medical care on a basis of need. Under Education, withdrawals of textbooks which misrepresent any racial, national, cultural, or religious group. We have selected these few examples out of the 29 proposed laws to indicate the new world that the passage of this entire program would allow to emerge in Pennsylvania.

WIDE COVERAGE

The state FEPC is naturally the spearhead of the proposed laws; along with it goes the outlawing of discrimination, not only in jobs, but in schools, recreation, hospitals, and many other fields. Ant the outlawing applies to religious and foreign-born discrimination as well as to Negroes.

It is clear that while developed ness men should understand that this is not a Negro program, but an American program for all the people. Not only because the proposed laws will affect all the people, but the opportunity of working to obtain public support for its passage.

PASTOR TAKES JOB OF BRUCE ON FEPC

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9—(AP)—Malcolm Ross, chairman of the president's committee on fair employment practices, announced Thursday that Southeastern Regional Director A. Bruce Hunt is being promoted to fill a newly-created position as western counsel to the committee.

Bruce will be succeeded as regional director by Dr. Witherspoon Dodge, who has been serving as field representative of the Office of Labor Production of WPB in Jacksonville, Fla., and Birmingham, Ala.

Dr. Dodge was formerly southern representative of the Textile Workers Union of America (CIO). A native of Jacksonville, he is a graduate of Davidson College in North Carolina and of Union Theological Seminary in Richmond, Va. He has served several pastorates in Presbyterian and Congregational churches in South Carolina and Georgia.

PRESS COMMENT

To Safeguard Negro Gains

Weekly — New Orleans, La.
8-19-44

An Editorial in New York Tribune, July 25, 1944

THE Negro's participation in war production has grown steadily, according to statistics of the War Manpower Commission. Since the fall of 1942 the percentage of non-whites employed in munitions industries, such as shipbuilding and aircraft production, has risen 4.6 per cent to the present 7.3 per cent. However, several factors are causing concern among Negroes regarding the prospect of maintaining these gains in the post-war period. Their employment progress in industries less concerned with war has not been so rapid: only 3.5 per cent of employees in textile mills are non-whites, 3.1 per cent in utilities and 1.1 per cent in communications. They recognize that such progress as has been made is, in great part, due to manpower shortages, and that a period of less than full employment, such as the cancellation of war plants will doubtless bring, usually means a disproportionate number of Negroes unemployed.

To help secure the gains, the Republican platform calls for the establishment by Federal legislation of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee. Negroes value the aid which the President's committee, backed by an anti-discrimintaion clause in government contracts, has been able to give them. For their hope is that once the Negro is accepted in industrial organizations he may, by proving his worth, gradually overcome prejudices which have long hampered his porgress. Therefore, a cogent reason for their concern over future prospects is the fact that everything about the present F. E. P. C. is temporary and indefinite. It is an executive agency never legally constituted by Congress. Its powers rest solely on the President's vague war-time powers, subject to court interpretation in some distant day. It was at first financed out of the President's emergency funds, but in June of this year, after bitter debate over limitation of powers Congress had never attempted to define, Congress included an appropriation for it in the national war agencies bill. 8-19-44

The point we would make here is that grudging countenance given by Congress to a temporary executive agency does not provide an effective means for securing a greater measure of economic justice for Negroes. Congress should itself establish an agency to safeguard the Negro's opportunity to prove himself, now when manpower is in demand. In view of the intransigeance of Southern opposition, probably only a Republican Congress will be able to do that.

The Railroads And Fair Employment Practice

Journal & Guide
Norfolk, Va.

THE U. S. railroads, despite labor and employment shortages, have performed well a herculean task in advancing the war effort. In this performance the Southeastern railroads have shared.

3-18-44

But the Southeastern railroads — through their spokesmen — rendered a disservice to democracy and did violence to a long-established custom, when in 1941, they entered into an agreement with the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen to discontinue the employment of Negroes as firemen. Similar agreements entered into barred by gradual elimination the employment of Negro brakemen.

At the peak of the war effort the railroads were found — by their own figures — to be short 850 locomotive firemen. So acute was the shortage that Defense Transportation Administrator Eastman, advised the use of war prisoners and women.

Then the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice entered the picture to hear complaints against the railroads which had been filed by discharged Negro firemen and brakemen. The interest of the FEPC was in the fullest possible utilization of the Nation's available manpower in the war effort, as its discretion is limited to workers in war industries.

3-18-44

Following hearings which lasted four days the FEPC found that both the railroads and the Brotherhoods discriminated against Negro firemen and brakemen through the device of an amazingly worded agreement which stipulated that "only promotable men" could be employed by the railroads as firemen and brakemen, and defining a promotable firemen or brakeman as a "white man."

This agreement the FEPC attacked by issuing a directive (a recommendation) that the agreement be revoked and re-negotiated in the interest of the war effort.

The unions, or brotherhoods, remained silent. They ignored the hearings. But the railroads were represented at the hearings by counsel. At the conclusion of the hearings, Mr. Sidney Aulderman, of Washington, speaking as leading counsel for the railroads, arose and stated that the railroads admitted the discrimination, were powerless to prevent it, and thanked the FEPC for the "high plane on which the hearings were conducted."

3-18-44

Then followed chapter two of the drama. Upon receipt of the findings and directives of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, the railroads, still speaking through counsel, bluntly stated that they would not obey the directives, and proceeded to raise the question of social equality, based upon the alleged intention of FEPC to direct (or recommend) the employment of Negroes as locomotive engineers and conductors, logical promotions from the jobs of firemen and brakemen, but promotions made under strict control of the railroads and the unions. The railroads, through their attorneys, dodged 98 per cent of the real issue — which was the re-employment of discharged Negro firemen and brakemen — and seized upon and exploited the fictitious issue involving the possible employment of engineers and conductors, an issue which had been dormant for 75 years, and which FEPC had no intention of raising as a condition to the employment of Negroes as firemen and brakemen.

3-18-44

Contrary to the position taken by some southern newspapers, which stated editorially that someone had "educated the President in the realities" of the issues involved, the FEPC itself asked the President to appoint the Stacy Committee to arbitrate the matter with the railroads, and the brotherhoods, even recommending the Stacy committee personnel.

3-18-44

There is not now and there never has been any question of social equality involved, except as it was projected in the agreement by the unions, or brotherhoods, and exploited by counsel for the railroads. The railway unions, or brotherhoods, which exclude Negro railway workers from membership but retain power to represent them in establishing their status as workers as well as in fixing their wages, shrewdly inserted in their working agreement with the railroads — an agreement which the railroads signed — a clause eliminating Negroes as firemen and brakemen — jobs they had held since the railroads were established.

3-18-44

The railroads would have much fairer and would have themselves in a much sounder position before the enlightened public opinion of the world if they had stated their real dilemma: That the agreement with the railroads, or brotherhoods, forced and drew a red-herring across the trail.

3-18-44

The railroads would have been brotherhoods did, they (the railroads) were now powerless to continue the employment of Negro firemen and brakemen. Instead of doing this the railroads took the rap of this fact, and in further view of they had held since the railroads sizing their business, and that in view were established.

House Group OKays Permanent FEPC Bill

11-29-44

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—The House Labor Committee today approved by 9 to 5 vote the LaFollette-Scanlon-Dawson bill giving permanent statutory basis to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices.

11-29-44

Rep. Mary Norton, Democrat, who heads the committee, made it clear that a determined drive to pass the FEPC bill will be made in the final weeks of the 78th Congress.

A formal report on the measure will be submitted to the House on Thursday, and an immediate request for clearing the bill to the floor will then be made to the House Rules Committee.

PETITION CONTEMPLATED

If the committee, dominated by die-hard poll taxers and Republicans, refuses to act, it is expected that a petition will be circulated to bring the bill up on the floor.

The only difficulty with this strategy is the short time remaining. The 78th Congress may adjourn by the middle of December.

But the Labor Committee members felt that in any event they had helped pave the way for final action by the Congress next session making FEPC permanent.

11-29-44

The Labor Committee action highlighted developments on important legislation assuring civil rights to minority groups and to the disfranchised people of the South.

The National Committee to Abolish the Poll Tax was expected to make plans for a big push to pass the anti-polltax bill early next session at an executive board meeting next month.

Committee spokesmen were encouraged by resolutions supporting the anti-polltax bill in the last few days passed by both the CIO and AFL conventions.

ASSAULT BILL STALLED

The AFL convention went on record reaffirming its opposition to the polltax and supporting the legislation for its adoption.

In similar resolution, the CIO pledged "to continue its determined effort to have Congress enact legislation eliminating the poll tax requirement which now prevail in eight of our states."

11-29-44

Still stymied in the House Judiciary Committee, headed by Rep. Hatton Sumners of Texas, is the G. I. Assault Bill to facilitate federal prosecution of persons in the South and elsewhere who assault Negro servicemen.

The Senate passed the bill on June 11, 1943, and a House Judiciary subcommittee approved it May 17, 1944. But, with time rapidly running out, the full committee is still sitting on the bill and has refused to take any action on it.

Racial Bias Still Bars Employment

Afro American
Baltimore, Md.

NEW YORK. — Reports that employers continue to reject applicants because of race, creed or color in spite of manpower shortages were made at the second annual meeting of the Metropolitan Council of Fair Employment Practices, April 27.

Edward Lawson, regional director of the FEPC office here, disclosed that discrimination because of race accounted for eighty per cent of the complaints received by his organization from July 1, 1943, to March 31, adding that most of them involved colored workers.

4 Per Cent Increase

He pointed out, however, that colored workers today comprise about 7.2 per cent of the 15,000,000 persons employed in war industries as against 3 per cent in 1942.

5-6-44

Other speakers at the meeting, attended by representatives of thirty-three social welfare agencies, were Marvin M. Jager, secretary of the council; Charles C. Berkley of the State committee on discrimination, and Lorenzo F. Davis, Brooklyn Urban League official.

Irked Because Negro Gets More Pay Than White

Defender—Chicago, Ill.
4-29-44

ATLANTA. — (ANP) — Attempting to explain the difference in salaries paid workers in the southeastern regional FEPC office. A. Bruce Hunt, regional director, asserted Tuesday that "it was all a matter of classification."

The explanation came after the bitterly vicious attack made upon the federal agency by Georgia Rep. John Gibson in a speech on the house floor, in which he accused the FEPC of violating its own purpose of non-discrimination.

Gibson was particularly irked by the fact that John Hope II, a Negro, was receiving a higher salary than James H. Tipton, a white man, in the Atlanta office, a situation which he said was "wholly incompatible with the practice and traditions of the South."

"I am classified as a senior fair practice examiner and act as regional director," Hunt wrote Congressman Gibson. "John Hope II is classified as a fair practice examiner and James H. Tipton is classified as an associate fair practice examiner. The different salaries which we earn are explained by the different titles of our positions.

The fourth and part-time male employe is Dr. Alva W. Taylor of Nashville, who has the title of consultant and who is also on the staffs of other government agencies. Dr. Taylor earns the same annual rate of salary as does Hope.

"The FEPC's war job is to aid in securing maximum utilization of manpower so that the goods of war may be produced in the shortest possible time, thereby hastening the day of victory and saving the lives of American soldiers. Here in the south, where war plants advertise daily for workers, the only reservoir of unemployed labor is the Negro.

"In view of the large number of complaints which have been filed with the FEPC alleging discrimination in employment against Negroes, it is not surprising that members of this group should be useful workers in this field."

Make the FEPC Permanent

The Nation—New York

Dear Sirs: To those of us who were deeply involved in the struggle to insure continuance of the Fair Employment Practices Committee through Congressional approval of its appropriation for the next fiscal year it is clearly apparent that much of the credit for the favorable Senate vote of last week belongs to the many liberal forces throughout the nation which raised their voices in support of that agency. We know we speak for the millions of minority Americans when we say that by your splendid outspoken editorial of June 10 you contributed greatly to the cause of true democracy.

7-15-44

The FEPC has been granted its appropriation by Congress and has thereby received sanction and backing, but the fact remains that it is still handicapped by its lack of power to enforce its orders. Unless legislation is enacted to make it permanent, it will be abolished when the war ends and the problem of discrimination in employment becomes even more critical.

Awareness of the need for a permanent FEPC was indicated by the fact that even while the Senate was debating the advisability of continuing the present FEPC, the House Labor Committee was holding hearings on the Scanlon-Dawson-La Follette bill to give the FEPC permanent status and authority. Frustration and insecurity, it was demonstrated in these hearings, still haunt millions of minority-group Americans, for although they have made tremendous gains through employment in war industry, they have made practically no advance in any industry which is basic to the peace-time economy. Even when they are now employed, minority Americans, particularly Negroes and Latin Americans, are often denied full union rights, upgrading opportunities, and equal pay for equal work. Walter White, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who had just returned from a tour of the war fronts, told the committee: "Wherever I went the question most frequently asked

As the hearings progress and the people generally become aware of the issues involved in the proposed bill for a permanent FEPC, we hope for clarification of many existing misunderstandings. To the people of North, West, and Midwest one fact, which has already been brought out in the committee investigation, is highly significant. That is the fact that only 10 per cent of the closed cases reported by the present FEPC originated in the eight states of the deep South.

7-15-44

What will the post-war reconversion period mean to the industrial centers of the North, West, and Midwest, where 90 per cent of the cases handled by the present FEPC originated? Gunnar Myrdal in his "An American Dilemma" recalls that "after the [First World] war the homecoming Negro soldier met the suspicion and fears of the Southern whites. In the North their new footholds in industry were contested by anxious white job-seekers in the post-war depression. A wave of lynchings swept the South, and even more bloody race riots swept the North."

Dare we neglect to take every possible precaution to prevent a repetition after this war?

7-15-44

Already representatives of most of the outstanding national civic, church, and union organizations have appeared before the House Labor Committee to urge approval of the Scanlon-Dawson-La Follette bill; and on June 23 an identical bill was introduced in the Senate by a group of six Republican and Democratic Senators. This would indicate that we are justified in our belief that the overwhelming majority of Americans are conscious of the dangers of the post-war period and are looking to their government for leadership in protecting the economic rights of minorities.

South Must Prepare To Fight Monopolistic Trend, Says Sparks

News—Birmingham, Ala.
10-11-44

AUBURN, Ala. — A postwar monopolistic trend in the South was predicted Tuesday by Gov. Sparks in an address before the Alabama Kiwanians 26th annual convention in which he warned that the South must "guard" small industries and provide others through "our own personal and natural resources."

Gov. Sparks attacked the Fair Employment Practices Committee (FEPC) as "a thing as hostile to white and Negro rates and blamed "right "a tempest in a teapot." The genius of American government through Army regulations real barrier to Negro votes, he ments as anything that has been added, is not poll taxes, but registration laws, but the "Northern adbrought up and put into practice through "insistence of political ers and vote seekers for a within its whole history." He visers," he observed, have not discup-spirit of suspicion on the part of covered this. held racial segregation as necessary to preserve the integrity of both the Negroes."

First, Carey Buffington, Tuscaloosa; second, Ray Wheeler, Anniston; third, E. V. Smith, Auburn; fourth, Irwin A. Harman, Troy.

Gov. Sparks, who spoke at a luncheon concluding the convention, blamed "misguided preachers and teachers, writers and pseudo-uplifters" for much of the difficulty over racial relations, and pointed out that the racial problem cannot be resolved in emotionalism.

On the subject of the development of small industries, the governor declared the South has been demanding for too long the transfer of industry down South and refusing to use its own financial resources to develop the kind and character of industry the South needs." 10-11-44

"In the matter of reconversion, we have an opportunity to show our courage, our ability, our foresight and our initiative," he declared.

EXPECT DIXIE FIGHT ON FEPC.

Washington- Bitter opposition led by Southern legislators is expected to the passage of the bill to make the Fair Employment Practice committee permanent.

Despite the fact that the House labor committee took the bill up in executive session last week and is considering it again this week, little hope is held for its passage before the expiration of the 78th Congress.

Senator Russell (D.,Ga.) one of the foremost opponents of the law which would minimize racial and religious job discrimination, predicted that the bill "would only be passed after the most terrific fight waged in Congress in a long, long time." "In fact," he added , "I do not think it can be passed."

"I don't think that after the issue is understood the opposition will by any means be confined to the South."

The Georgia Senator contends that a permanent FEPC wouldn't necessarily work entirely to the advantage of the American Negro. He said, for instance that it would compel a Negro druggist in Harlem to a hire a Japanese-American pharmacist, whether he wanted to or not. 12-2-44

Representative Fisher of Texas is reported to be making attempts to emasculate the bill by adding amendments during the House committee sessions. However, Chairman Mary Norton(D.,N.J.), is said to be desirous of having the bill reported "as is".

The bill would then be t threatened by amendments from the floor which can only be stopped by the rules committee. A spokesman for the National Council for the Permanent FEPC said this week that enough commitments from Republican members of the rules committee had been obtained to prevent its sabotage by amendments.

Wiping Out Employment Barrier

Telegraph — Macon

Dispatches from Washington tell us that months before any action is due, legislation to make permanent the Fair Employment Practices Committee is starting along a rocky road already strewn with the wreckage of anti-lynching and poll tax measures.

A measure to set up a permanent agency charged with trying to minimize racial and religious discrimination in employment has not even emerged from a Senate or House committee, but Southern members are vigorously opposed to it and the Associated Press tells us that Senator Russell, of Georgia, may be the spearhead of the fight.

He is quoted as saying that it will be passed only after the "most terrific fight waged in congress in a long time," and in fact he does not think it will be passed at all.

It will be remembered that Senator Russell offered strong opposition when Congress was asked a few months ago to provide temporary funds for the Fair Employment Practices Committee, which Mr. Roosevelt had set up by executive order. He let it be know then that he would combat the creation of a permanent agency even more strongly.

We all know perfectly well that this mischievous organization, which brought about the strike and the bloody rioting in Philadelphia, is not designed in terms of economics, but is merely a device by which New Deal crackpots seek to win the Negro vote in the North for their fantastic ventures into national socialism.

Senator Russell points out that something more than racial relations are involved in this measure. He says frankly that it would go further towards nationalizing American industry than anything else. If it were enacted, it would give a government agency absolute control over all relations heretofore left to private industry and that, indeed, private industry would be dead.

There is still enough strength in both houses of Congress strongly lined up against this abomination to bring about a filibuster such as has so often killed off the anti-lynching bills and if necessary the same tactics should be pursued in this instance. In the meantime the people of Georgia extend their congratulations and warmest support to Senator Russell for his gallant stand.

Dixie Daily Hits Jim Crow Argument Against FEPC Bill

DURHAM, N. C.—A strong editorial in the Durham MORNING HERALD, September 11, pulled no punches in striking at the favorite argument against creation of a permanent FEPC. Declaring such theories as this, unfair, undemocratic, and un-American, the editorial pointed out that "Equal opportunity has nothing whatever to do with social equality —whatever those words mean. Equal opportunity means just what it says —a chance for every one according to his character and abilities, plus equal pay for equal work. This and no more, is what the Fair Employment Practices Committee has stood for and does stand for.

"Now a strong fight is ahead if a permanent FEPC is not to be blocked. Hearings in the House and Senate committee rooms show that the Negro is still being discriminated against. He still does not get the same pay for the same work. to campaign eloquence. We, therefore, urge your and members of your party to resist any efforts to mob violence will be very receptive white man gets for the first to go when there is still the Philadelphia legislation is enacted."

Americans facing the stark realities of unemployment and cutbacks. And the strike showed that the blame for the deep into the ranks of union men and women who ought to know better.

"There are no new arguments against discrimination. There are just the old ones. It is unfair. It is undemocratic. It is un-American. Or, if such an appeal falls on deaf ears, we may add that plan to cut war production in half the day Hitler surrenders, which we pray is not far off, will mean drastic reduction in employment. Without a permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee, minorities will become the chief and first targets of such unemployment. We submit that members of the Congress seeking re-election can win far more support by staying in Washington to enact legislation of this character than they can by innumerable speeches however

Union Tries to Laugh Off Discrimination Hearing

PM—New York, N.Y. 10-11-44

SIU Refuses to Take Part and Calls FEPC a 'Secret' Organization

The Seafarers International Union (AFL) yesterday refused to participate in an FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) hearing on complaints that the union has discriminated against Negroes.

The hearing, called after six months of investigation into charges of discrimination in the hiring of Negro seamen, was held in the Bar Assn. Bldg., 22 W. 44th St. Malcolm Ross, FEPC Chairman, presided.

Richard Cantor, attorney for the SIU, presented a union statement calling the complaints "silly" and "absurd," and the FEPC a "secret" organization. The statement said the union would not participate in the hearing. Nonetheless, Cantor, John Hawk, first vice president and secretary-treasurer of the SIU, and an SIU stenographer, sat through the entire proceedings. 10-11-44

FEPC to Study Case

Ross said after the hearing that, despite the union's defiance, the FEPC would follow its usual procedure in studying the case, and that he hopes "to reach an agreement with the union shortly." If the union refuses to recognize the FEPC's authority, the case can be referred to President Roosevelt for action.

Samuel Block, FEPC attorney, said:

"The SIU calls upon the War Shipping Administration for workers. It insists that from among those qualified men that are available certain ones be selected or eliminated on the basis of their race. This disrupts the orderly and efficient use of the already short supply of manpower available to the industry." 10-11-44

Block called six merchant seamen as witnesses. They testified they had been refused jobs on ships because they were Negroes. The men said the practice of the SIU was to ship out all-white staffs, or all-Negro staffs, and that the staffs were never mixed. The only jobs available to Negroes, they said, were steward, cook, messman or

Ship Delayed 5 Hours

Mrs. Eveilyn Cooper, also an FEPC attorney, presented evidence showing that in one instance the steward staff was mixed, but then only after the ship, loaded with coal last February for Massachusetts, was delayed five hours.

Other evidence presented was a photostatic copy of an assignment slip presented to the SIU by a Negro seaman recruited by the WSA. On it the SIU dispatcher had written: "We do not mix."

The SIU, which claims it does not discriminate, but only "segregates," has separate hiring halls for Negro and white seamen. 10-11-44

Sitting with Ross, as FEPC members, were Boris Shishkin, AFL research director; Milton Webster, vice president of the Brotherhood of Porters, AFL, and Charles Houston, Washington attorney.

AFL Hostility Grave Threat To the FEPC

PM—New York, N.Y. 10-29-44

1943 Convention Report Opposes Any 'Compulsory' Action

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—Congressional action to establish a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee is endangered by American Federation of Labor opposition to the proposed prohibition against discrimination by labor unions.

AFL hostility to the pending legislation in its present form was disclosed by publication of the Senate hearings on the bill, which included a statement by the Federation ducking any commitment on the measure and opposing any Government control of unions.

The statement, which was filed with the Senate Committee by W. C. Hushing, Legislative representative of the AFL, quoted the report by the Executive Council of the AFL at its 1943 convention.

10-29-44

Oppose Bias

This report opposed racial discrimination in employment, "I added:

"The Executive Council does not believe, however, that imposition of any policy, no matter how salutary, through compulsory government control of freely constituted associations of workers, accords with the basic right of freedom of association among the American people."

Questioned about the statement, Hushing told PM the pending bill "does not conform" to the AFL Convention action. He said the Federation might try to have the bill modified, and probably would discuss the question at its convention next month. 10-29-44

First open hint of AFL opposition came last week at a Howard University conference on postwar job opportunities for Negroes, when Boris Shiskin, AFL member of the temporary FEPC, warned that labor would oppose any regulation of unions, even to prevent discrimination.

Opening Wedge

Shiskin told the conference that legislation prohibiting racial and religious discrimination—the purpose of the permanent FEPC bill—by unions would open the door to much broader regulation of unions and labor spokesmen could not support it. 10-29-44

The bill has the wholehearted support of many labor, religious, and liberal organizations including the CIO and several AFL unions. Supporters of the measure are alarmed, however, by the AFL's attitude

FEPC-CIO agreement signed

Tribune—Los Angeles, Calif. 9-11-44

WASHINGTON — The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice and the War Policy Division of the United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers of America (CIO) have signed a working agreement aimed at promoting union cooperation in the settlement of bona fide complaints of discrimination involving any UAW-CIO officer or a plant in which the union has a local, Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, and R. J. Thomas, UAW-CIO president, announced. The agreement, which is the first negotiated between FEPC and any union, is expected, Mr. Ross and Mr. Thomas said, to be of great benefit to both parties, "by speeding the elimination of un-American discrimination which is undeniably harmful to the war effort and to the labor movement."

The agreement provides that the War Policy Division of the union cooperate with FEPC's regional offices in investigations, issue written instructions to all UAW-CIO personnel that may be necessary for the strict observance of the agreement, and confer whenever necessary with FEPC representatives in an effort to adjust satisfactorily, "in accordance with FEPC and UAW-CIO policy" all cases that are brought to the division's attention. 9-11-44

The committee, under the agreement, will report all cases involving any UAW-CIO local or officer or plant where a UAW-CIO local exists, to the War Policy Division, together with a request for "any desired investigatory action by UAW-CIO thereon."

Describing the pact as "a great step forward in the American trade union movement which shows an ever growing realization that preservation of the right to work for all men regardless of race, color, creed, or national origin is the keystone to its future healthy existence," Mr. Ross said that the committee is willing to sit down at any time and discuss similar cooperative understandings with any other organizations concerned in "the vital problem with which FEPC deals." 9-11-44

Dawson Defends Bill In Debate

Courier—Pittsburgh, Pa. 6-3-44

WASHINGTON — Observers of the House fight over FEPC last Friday saw two pieces of trickery that will bear recording here.

This is the background necessary to understand the tricks. In order to force an individual roll-call vote showing how each Congressman stands on a measure, it is necessary for one-fifth of those present to stand and call for an "aye and nay" vote. Congressman Marcantonio called for the "ayes and nays." Speaker Rayburn of Texas, whose desire to be the next Vice-President is common gossip here, declared that only 51 members had stood up, and that this was not enough to force a record vote. His ruling would have meant that there were at least 256 members on the floor. Yet the fact is that on the very next vote—a tellers' vote—there were only 242 Representatives voting, so that the 51 who did stand up were enough to have forced a record vote, which Rayburn refused.

The other trick was equally obvious. Many Republicans who gave lip-service to the FEPC secretly tried to knife it. They knew that if there was a roll-call they would have to vote against the Tarver Amendment, killing FEPC; hence, they stayed in their seats with the poll-taxers when Marcantonio called for the "ayes and nays." One such double-talk Republican was none other than Congressman William Hess of Cincinnati, Ohio. More than 10,000 Negro voters are in his district. 6-3-44

Begin Hearing on FEPC

WASHINGTON — Hearings on bills to establish a permanent FEPC will begin before the House Labor committee Wednesday of this week, Congresswoman Mary Norton, chairman of the committee, had announced. 6-3-44

It is expected that Under Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson will be the first witness favoring the adoption of the legislation.

WASHINGTON—By a slim majority of four votes in the House of Representatives last Friday the FEPC was saved from certain death, after a revolt by Southern Congressmen succeeded temporarily in wiping out every penny of a five hundred thousand dollar appropriation for the committee. A teller vote of 123 to 119 defeated the amendment of Representative Malcolm Tarver (D.-Ga.) which would have eliminated all funds for FEPC, after the amendment had passed in an earlier vote by 141 to 103.

Only the leadership of Congressman William L. Dawson (D.-Ill.) and Vito Marcantonio (ALP-N.Y.) saved FEPC from a parliamentary lynching-bee attempted by Southern Democrats and reactionary Republicans.

DIXIE SOLONS ISSUE THREATS 6-3-44

In a two-day debate packed with tense drama the fate of the committee teetered up and down through a maze of tricky parliamentary maneuvers, which left half a hundred FEPC staff members whose jobs depended on the outcome, breathless with excitement.

Final passage of the National

War Agencies Bill, containing the FEPC appropriation, was by a vote of 247 to 58, with Southern Congressmen refusing to vote for its passage solely because it included funds for FEPC. The bill now goes to the Senate where it is headed for bitter opposition from Southern Senators.

In the course of bitter debate Representative Gibson of Georgia declared that if the South could poll taxers again, of which only five hundred thousand dollars, or one-fifth of the FEPC's share was only sand.

Declared Marcantonio, in a biting reply to the Southerners: "The real reason you will not support FEPC is because you want to perpetuate Hitlerite concept of race supremacy in this country."

On the first vote upon the Tarver amendment a number of Republicans, knowing that there would be no individual record of how they voted, supported the amendment. Later, however, under the prodding of Representative Hughe Scott of Pennsylvania, George Bender of Ohio, and other Republicans, many who voted for the Tarver amendment reversed themselves. 6-3-44

After failing to secure an "aye and nay" record vote on the Tarver amendment, Marcantonio moved for a teller vote which resulted in the four vote victory for FEPC. Earlier he had objected to unanimous consent to withdraw a waiver of points of order against the measure, thus blocking efforts of the poll-taxers to kill the bill by merely raising a point of order without a vote.

FEPC "Trouble-Shooter" Halts Strike in Smoky City Mill

Tribune — Washington, D.C.

5-6-44 (By NNPA)

Settlement of a work stoppage in the Pittsburgh plant of the Jones-Laughlin Corporation by the Fair Employment Practice Committee (FEPC) was cited this week by that agency as further evidence of the fallacy in the arguments of Congressman Gibson, Georgia Democrat, who recently charged that the FEPC was disrupting the war effort.

Fifty-three Negro workers in a by-products plant of the company refused to work when the company officials failed to carry out an agreement for up-grading the colored employees to vacancies occurring in the plant. A new white worker was brought in when a white pusher became ill and a vacancy occurred.

The men refused even to discuss the matter until the FEPC sent a representative. The industrial relations manager of the corporation, W. H. Harvey, and the commissioner of the U.S. Conciliation Service for the Pittsburgh area appealed to the FEPC to send a representative.

Ask for "Trouble-Shooter"

They asked for Milo Manley, a Negro attached to the regional office in Philadelphia, who had been so useful in settling the Carnegie Steel Strike in Pittsburgh in February. He has become known as a valuable "trouble-shooter." 5-6-44

As soon as the workers were assured Mr. Manley was en route, they sent enough workers into the plant to keep the coke ovens burning. Immediately upon his arrival, the strike was called off. Manley is now negotiating with the union and the company to straighten out the details of the up-grading agreement. Ten miles of steel works, which would have shut down if the men at Jones-Laughlin had remained away from work, are operating now in full war production.

Discrimination Called Unprofitable

PM New York N.Y. 12-7-44

Discrimination in employment because of race, color, creed or national origin is unprofitable to the business which practices it, a spokesman for the trustees of the Associated Gas & Electric Corp. testified yesterday at the closing hearing of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination.

The Commission held three hearings in New York City and four upstate on proposals to establish a State FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Commission). After the two proposed measures have been revised, they will be introduced in the Legislature.

Associated Gas & Electric is in reorganization in Federal Court with Denis J. Driscoll and Willard L. Throp as trustees. The firm and subsidiaries employ about 5700 persons in New York State. Clarice F. Brows, AG&E counsel on industrial relations, said in a statement:

"As men of long and varied experience in business, the (AG&E) trustees are convinced that discrimination in employment is unprofitable to business. They believe it is economically unsound because ultimately it raises the cost of production." 12-7-44

Production costs go up, Miss Brows explained, because discrimination limits the field from which workers can be chosen.

"The capacity of the employe to do the job becomes secondary," she pointed out.

Rabbi J. X. Cohen, chairman of the Commission on Economic Discrimination of the American Jewish Congress, told of the 15 years of work of his group on the job discrimination problem. Special Sessions Judge Nathan D. Perlman, chairman of the Congress's Commission on Law and Legislation, made an analysis of the proposed measures and suggested revisions.

Legislation, such as that proposed, Cohen said, would aid private voluntary organizations working for tolerance. General knowledge that there is a law against job discrimination will, he said, reduce actual instances of discrimination.

The American Jewish Congress, he emphasized, gave "wholehearted" approval to that section of the proposed law which would aid educational efforts. He also commended the Commission for recommending that labor unions be forbidden to discriminate in admitting workers to membership. PM

In support of his contention that legislation is needed in addition to education, Cohen said his group had studied 13,000 ads for workers in New York papers and found 30 percent of them discriminatory. Efforts to get the newspapers to bar such ads were fruitless. But, he said, in 1942, after municipal legislation was enacted barring employment agencies from calling for information on race, creed or color, such discriminatory ads disappeared.

In contrast to the stand of the almost all other witnesses was the testimony of Merwin K. Hart, president of the reactionary and private National Economic Council, Inc. Hart drew sharp rebukes from Irving M. Ives, Commission Chairman and Assembly Majority Leader, and laughter from the audience of about 200. Hart said he opposed the legislation "both in principle and in most of its details."

He described it variously as "Communist-inspired" and "in Hitler's best style." He testified that enactment would bring "turmoil and probably bloodshed." Charles H. Tuttle, Commission counsel, smiled and told Hart the Commission had spent two weeks traveling about the state holding hearings and failed to see any signs of impending revolution, bloodshed or turmoil. At another point, Ives said:

"I'm trying to follow your reasoning, if that's possible."

About 200 witnesses were heard by the Commission during the seven days of hearings. Tuttle and some lawyer members of the Commission will now draft revisions of the two bills on which the hearings were held and the Commission will meet later this month to consider the revisions and agree on the language in measures to be introduced in the Assembly.

FEPC To Hear Shell Case At Houston, Texas

A Bruce Hunt To Be Trial Head Dec. 27

WASHINGTON —(ANP)— The FEPC will hear evidence in a discrimination case involving the Sheell Oil company of Houston, Local 367 of the Oil Workers International union (CIO) and curtain Latin-American workers on Dec. 27 at Houston, it was announced here Wednesday. A Bruce formerly regional director at Atlanta, will represent the committee.

The stagement of charges served on the company and the union alleges that the labor agreement at the plant confines Latin-American and Negro workers to common labor jobs and "dead-ends," their upgrading to jobs as janitors and gardeners, despite individual qualifications for jobs of higher skill. 12-23-44

The union was joined as a party to the proceedings because it is a party to an agreement with the company which sets out the discriminatory upgrading procedures. The complaint insists the practice hinders the war effort by restricting the full use of manpower.

How to Defend FEPC

Daily Worker-
New York, N.Y.

By Doxey Wilkerson

The best defense of FEPC is an offensive against the wreckers who would destroy its valuable wartime service to the nation.

Let labor and the Negro people hasten to the support of FEPC in the present crisis. But let them do more. Let them demand legislative action for a permanent FEPC — through passage of H.R. 1732. 1-20-44

The reactionary Smith Committee's smear "investigation" of FEPC is—and is intended to be—an attack upon the progressive policies of the Roosevelt Administration, an attempt to block the growing trend toward equal employment opportunities for the Negro people, and a direct blow at the war effort. The flaunting of FEPC's directive in the southern railroads case has much the same effect.

Both are serious threats to the wartime interests of the country. They must be met through vigorous counter-offensive by the progressive forces of the nation. Congressman Vito Marcantonio's proposed "Fair Employment Practices Act" is a sound and attainable objective around which the democratic win-the-war coalition can rally.

H.R. 1732 declares it to be "the policy of the United States to repudiate and prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, color, creed, religion, national origin, or citizenship by employers" providing goods or services for any agency of the Federal Government.

The bill not only "prohibits" such discrimination. It requires that every Federal contract include certain specified "fair employment practices provisions." It sets stiff penalties for violations. And it vests FEPC with investigatory authority similar to that of the National Labor Relations Board, and with effective powers of enforcement.

Discharge Petition No. 18 has been filed to dislodge H.R. 1732 from the House Judiciary Committee. It has already gained quite a number of signatures. With a vigorous and unified campaign by labor and the Negro people, this bill can be brought to the floor of the House and passed. 1-20-44

But let there be unity in the campaign for a permanent FEPC. H.R. 1732 is a good bill around which the entire win-the-war camp should now rally. Let there be no division within the ranks of the progressives through the proposal of "rival" bills.

House passage of the Anti-Poll Tax Bill was once jeopardized through petty conflicts by groups eager to press their "own" separate bills. Keep the campaign for a permanent FEPC free from this menace. Let none "pull a Baldwin" on H.R. 1732.

It is well for patriotic Americans to appreciate fully the tremendous stakes at issue in the current attacks upon FEPC. President Roosevelt's creation and continued support of this federal agency is unparalleled by any action of a Chief Executive since Lincoln. Although immediately concerned with assuring democratic wartime employment rights for Negro and other minority peoples, FEPC poses issues of fundamental and continuing importance for the nation as a whole.

At a time when maximum war production is imperative to support the coming Anglo-American invasion of Western Europe, a strong and effective FEPC is absolutely necessary to clear away traditional employment discriminations which now seriously impede the war effort. 1-20-44

At a time when the firm unity of organized labor, the Negro people, and all other patriotic Americans is an urgent necessity to implement the democratic perspectives of Tehran, to rout the defeatists and win a people's victory and a people's peace, FEPC stands as a vital rallying point around which to weld democratic coalition unity.

Let labor and the Negro people move quickly to the defense of FEPC in its present crisis. Let them move also to the offensive—in unified support of Discharge Petition No. 18, for passage of H.R. 1732. Upon this issue the lives of our fighting men abroad and defeat of our pro-fascists here at home largely depend.

Examiner And Stenographer Join F.E.P.C.

Graduate of Morris Brown College Is Added to Staff

An additional Fair Practice Examiner has been added to the staff of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice in Atlanta, it was announced today by A. Bruce Hunt, Regional Director. The new Examiner is James H. Tipton, Jr., who until recently was principal of Rabun County High School at Clayton, Georgia.

Mr. Tipton was born in Slyvester, Worth County, Georgia, and is the son of the late James H. Tipton, Sr., attorney-at-law and former representative in the Georgia State Legislature. The new Examiner was educated in the public schools of Sylvester, and at South Georgia A. and M. College and Georgia School of Technology, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science in Commerce from the latter institution in 1931.

Subsequent to his graduation, Mr. Tipton was employed variously by the Atlanta City Board of Education, Georgia School of Technology, Georgia Tech National Alumni Association, and Georgia Tech College Inn. He served as Assistant Treasurer of Georgia Tech, where he was an instructor in accounting and manager of the Georgia Tech Radio Program. In the latter capacity he had charge of all school radio programs and was chairman of the round table discussions. 1-18-44

In December 1942 Mr. Tipton entered the Army and was attached to the Finance Department. He was honorably discharged during August 1943, by which time he had obtained the rank of sergeant. He became principal of Rabun County High School, and held that position until his appointment by the Committee.

Announcement was given several days ago relative to the appointment to the staff of John Hope, Atlantan, who has one of the key positions in the FEPC setup here. He has already begun the duties of his office.

It is also announced by Director Hunt that Miss Thelma Horton, native Georgian, and a graduate of Morris Brown College, has been added to the stenographic staff, effective today. She is former student-employee at the college and finished with the class of 1943. She is a native of Athens, where her elementary and high school education was obtained, and also saw employment in the office of USO Director, William Y. Ball, Jr.

Mr. Hunt stated Monday that with the appointment of Miss Horton and Mr. Tipton, permanent positions on the local staff were complete. Of course, he stated, there will be several minor appointments made later on.

Firing Of Negroes Begins, FEPC Hears

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.

By HARRY McALPIN

WASHINGTON BUREAU OF ATLANTA DAILY WORLD NNPA

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(SNS)—A preview of the post war employment problems facing Negroes in both industry and government was given Saturday by the Regional Directors of the Fair Employment Practice Committee who have been meeting in Washington for the past three days. 2-13-44

At a press conference it was apparent from the brief analysis of the problems of discrimination in their regions that a definite trend already has started to fire Negro workers in disportionately large numbers whenever there is a contraction in activity. According to Elmer Henderson, Director of Regions Six and Eight. In a recent over all cut back in Chicago sixty percent of the persons laid off were Negroes. Other Regions indicated similar experiences. 2-13-44

A charge that some government agencies in the Pennsylvania, New Jersey Delaware area are resorting to trickery and under hand methods to fire Negro workers when personnel is reduced was made by G. James Fleming, Director of that Region. He declared that Negroes are given lowered efficiency ratings whenever personnel cuts are imminent in order to justify releasing them.

Evidence that unfavorable entries have been made in the personnel records of Negro workers after they have been terminated has been discovered he said.

Frank E. Hook, Regional Director of the Area which includes the District of Columbia, Fountain head of government employment. Said there is a suspicion that similar practices are used here but no evidence of it had come to light.

The problems of discrimination in all the Regions are now concerned mostly with up grading workers to use their full capacities and skill and in training rather than in initial hirings the Directors agreed.

A Bruce Hunt, Regional Director for Georgia, South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Florida, and Mississipi said complaints have been slow coming to his office. He attributed this to a probable inarticulateness of the workers and the lack of publicity given to the Agency in the White Press. He said

Virginia, of the special house committee investigating executive agencies, said the hearings would be confined solely to the issue of FEPC's legal authority. He declared spokesmen for minority groups would not be permitted to use them as a forum for social theories.

Specific case to be taken up by the committee today is that of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company, which on November 15, 1943, was ordered by the FEPC tice Committee. Young is editor of Norfolk's Journal and Guide. Houston, who is now 48, got his education at Amherst, Harvard and University of Madrid.

FEPC Probe

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—(AP)—Congress set out today to find out what legal backing the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee has for its directives forbidding racial discrimination in the hiring of workers.

The FEPC Must Not Be Crucified

Daily World-Atlanta, Ga. 3-12-44

The recent, sustained attacks upon the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice by the Old Guards in the Senate, indicate most clearly their determination to divest the Negro worker of every vestige of economic security and to subject him to the tender mercies of unscrupulous labor employers. The baneful assault upon the work of the Committee by Senator Richard B. Russell of Georgia and Congressman Smith of Virginia is a case in point.

The establishment of the FEPC is one of the most important actions a representative of the federal government has taken toward getting for us our basic rights as American citizens since the Civil War. Of course President Roosevelt named this Committee only after a representative group of our leaders threatened to "March on Washington" in an effort to get our share of the war jobs. But regardless of circumstances, the main fact remains that President Roosevelt took this unprecedented action in an effort to recognize our legitimate and basic rights. 3-12-44

Deploring the recent attack made upon the work of the Committee, the Washington Post, liberal white daily, said editorially: "Not long ago it (FEPC) called a number of the country's railroads and certain labor unions to account for their flagrantly discriminatory practices. No doubt this is what has brought down upon the agency the wrath of some southern Congressmen. From the point of view of the national welfare, indeed from any democratic point of view, it is a wholly misguided wrath. The FEPC is simply trying to bring about a fuller mobilization of the nation's manpower for war and a fuller realization of the principle of human equality on which the nation is founded."

The Post states further: "It would be genuinely tragic if race prejudice caused the liquidation of this agency. To American Negroes whose loyalty to the United States and devotion to democracy has remained steadfast in the face of bitter deprivations, the FEPC is a vital symbol. To renounce it would be to slam a door upon the legitimate hopes which our own American litany has engendered and encouraged."

"As of today," states Sidney Hillman, "there are 1,500,000 American Negroes directly engaged in war production, for anyone to spread the virus of racial discrimination is tantamount to making a direct effort to drive a million and a half workers out of our war plants. Those men and women, in office and out, who seek to destroy or circumvent the Fair Employment Practices Committee, give direct aid and comfort to enemy forces which seek to foment civil strife and discord by setting one race against another, whipping up hatred against minority groups and encouraging discrimination." 3-12-44

Moreover, we admonish the masses of people, especially our leaders, to go on record now and let both the supporters and opposers know how vital we feel the FEPC is, not only to our welfare but to democracy itself.

It behooves all liberal minded Americans to come to the rescue of the Committee and to seek legislation which would make it a permanent agency of the Federal government. Certainly the committee is needed now and it will be more vital to Negroes in the Post war readjustment than it is today.

The FEPC must not be crucified on the cross of racial prejudice.

Investigation To What End?

Atlanta, Ga. - Daily World 1-11-44

Announcement of the pending investigation of the activities of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice by a Congressional Committee, headed by Representative Howard D. Smith of Virginia, will deceive no one. It is a clear and determined effort on the part of the big railroad interests, in cahoot with the railroad brotherhoods and the big business interests to discredit the work of the Committee.

In response to the Committee's recent directive to bring their hiring policies into conformity with the spirit and frame-work of the Committee's principles, the nearly sixteen railroads arrogantly announced that such an order was impracticable and impossible.

"The successful prosecution of the war," said President Roosevelt, "demands the maximum employment of all workers regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin." In further clarification, Mr. Roosevelt stated "it is the policy of the United States to encourage full participation in the war effort by all persons in the United States regardless of race, creed, color or national origin, in the firm belief that the democratic way of life within the nation can be defended successfully only with the help and support of all groups within its borders." 1-11-44

Not only do the railroads and unions, as one editor points out, show an arrogance and contempt for the committee's purposes and authority, but they likewise fail to evince a desire to cooperate." The pending investigation by Congressional Committee goes even further. In effect, they signify that they intend to test the President's authority in issuing such an order. They indicate a desire to defeat the ends of justice to a certain minority in American life. And by their actions, they admit that fairness must not be administered to all groups no matter what the circumstances of the times.

"As a democracy," says the Washington Post editorially, "we cannot, at anytime, permit racial intolerance to govern our economic opportunities. The FEPC has come to grips courageously with a tough problem. It should have the full support against the obstructionalism it has encontered, of the whole Federal Government and the American public." 1-11-44

We believe it will get this support.

Permanent FEPC Is Urged

World-Telegram-Howard

Congress was urged last night to establish a permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee to fight racial and religious discrimination in industry at a meeting in Town Hall, sponsored by the National Council for a Permanent FEPC. 2-8-44

A permanent committee would replace the present committee set up by executive order of President Roosevelt. Representative Thomas E. Scanlon, of Pennsylvania, bill's sponsor, warned that postwar unemployment would increase the danger of racial discrimination.

The Rev. John La Farge, editor of the Catholic publication America, decried what he called the alarming outcrop of racial and religious hatreds and declared the time has come to reverse this course.

FEPC in War and Peace

Daily Worker-New York, N.Y. 1-27-44

THE Fair Employment Practice Committee ought to be made permanent and it ought to be given power to enforce its decrees. The FEPC ought to be made permanent so that at the proper time it could check the tendency of employers to slide back into the usual and "normal" habit of discriminating against Negro, Jewish and foreign-born job-seekers after the war. It ought to be given powers to enforce its decrees so that, as is now true with respect to the National Labor Relations Board, the FEPC could speak with statutory authority to such an undemocratic demagogue as Virginia's poll-tax Congressman, Howard Smith.

New York's progressive Vito Marcantonio has introduced into the House of Representatives a bill "to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, color, creed, religion, national origin, or citizenship." The bill is titled H.R. 1732. As a law it would make the FEPC both permanent and statutorily authoritative. It was first introduced into the House on Feb. 5, 1943. It might have been passed long since had it been given the full support of progressive labor and of Negro, Jewish, foreign-born and other anti-fascist, progressive organizations.

One reason why it did not get this support was that most of the people it is designed to help do not realize its significance. Too many persons imagine, for example, that the FEPC is intended only to procure jobs for Negroes. As a matter of fact, it is not intended at all to be a job-procurement agency or a placement bureau. Procuring and placing workers is the function of the United States Employment Service only. The FEPC is intended, now and after the war, to see that discrimination against ALL workers (at present, war workers), because of race, creed, color, religion, or national origin, is not practiced by any employer.

Pressure should be increased on Congressmen to sign the petition which would force H.R. 1732 upon the floor of the House for debate and action. A few Congressmen have already signed, among them being William L. Dawson, Illinois, the House's lone Negro member. Two hundred eighteen signatures are needed. 1-27-44

Everybody who is interested in hastening and preserving the fruits of victory over fascism must, at once, urge his Congressman to add his signature to House Discharge Petition No. 18.

FEPC IS A YEAR BEHIND

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

The most striking fact about the race problem, says Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, great New York pastor, is not that there are injustices, resentments, and occasional violence, but on the whole that we are making a go at it.

Is it enough to make a stab at solving racial equalities? Dean William Stuart Nelson of Howard's School of Religion would say "no." Speaking in Boston last week he added, "An attitude of doing the best under the circumstances is inadequate and cowardly. We should push on to live on the frontiers of what is possible." 2-26-44

Take for example the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee, which concerns itself with racial discrimination in war industries.

According to its chairman, Malcolm Ross, FEPC settles 165 cases a month, gets in 300 new ones at the same time and has on file 1957 cases.

It is a year behind its docket and, therefore, has to reject cases like the one against the Boilermakers' Union, because publicity alone will not bring compliance and it has no other legal sanction.

If the members of Dr. Fosdick's church were a year behind in their payment of dues, he wouldn't be as complacent about that as he is about the solution of racial problems.

P. B. Young Quits FEPC; 2nd Resignation in Month

ZeMurray, Out Also, Denies Leaving Because of Criticism of His Company's Labor Policy

By MARGARET LEWIS

Official announcement of the resignation of P. B. Young, Sr., publisher of the Norfolk Journal and Guide, from the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee on Monday brought to two the number of FEPC members who have resigned within the past month.

Although the announcement of the resignation of Samuel ZeMurray, president of the United Fruit Company, has not yet come officially from the committee, it is a well known fact in the capital that he severed his connections with the group more than four weeks ago.

Sources in the capital contend that Malcolm Ross, FEPC head, has attempted to soft-pedal the resignations until he can find replacements due to the continuous crises that have faced the FEPC from its inception.

Pressure of Criticism Denied

Rumors that Mr. ZeMurray attempted to resign several months ago, in the face of criticism of his company's employment policies, were denied by both Mr. ZeMurray and the committee.

Mr. Young, in his resignation, said that "contrary to my wishes and very much to my regret," it was necessary for him to sever his relaionship with the committee.

In informing the committee that he had sent his resignation to the President, Mr. Young stated that the demands of the armed forces and the war effort had drown so heavily upon irreplacable members of his staff that he would no longer be able to find time and energy to devote to the committee. 2-26-44

Ross Lauds Publisher

Mr. Young was appointed to the committee on July 1, 1943, serving for seven months, as did Mr. ZeMurray.

In a letter to Mr. Young, Chairman Malcolm Ross replied:

"The committee at its last meeting learned with deep regret that your added responsibilities make it necessary for to you to resign.

"Knowing the difficulties of running a newspaper during wartime, we are deeply appreciative of the thoroughness and care with which you have devoted yourself to the problems of the committee. Your offer of continued help to the committee is readily accepted."

The resignations mean that the committee will not have a quorum at its next meeting unless all members are present.

FDR Responds To McAlpin's Query On FEPC

World-
Memphis Tenn

Two Viewpoints On Statement By Chief Executive

By HARRY S. McALPIN
(Washington Bureau of Atlanta Daily World and NNPA)

WASHINGTON — President Roosevelt at his press conference Friday said he would like to have some suggestions as to how he could give more active support to FEPC.

The statemtnt was made in response to a question by this correspondent, representing the Atlanta Daily World and the National Negro Publishers Association, who stated in asking the President for comment that there have been reports and advice on the issue which it deserves.

MANY INTERPRETATIONS

Others have interpreted his statement as an open invitation for suggestions. They said it indicates that he feels he has done all he knows how.

Still another viewpoint expressed is that the President believes he has done everything possible and feels no more could be asked of him.

The National Committee for a Permanent FEPC assumes that the President has invited suggestions, and despite their having sent some already, they plan to take him at his word and send more.

A. Philip Randolph, co-chairman of the committee, was one of the men responsible for considerable discussion of the FEPC both on and off Capitol Hill, and also some charges that the Administration has not given the agency's appropriation request its active support.

CHARGES MADE 6-9-44

Such charges have been made as a result, among other things, of the failure of Representative McCormick, Majority Leader of the House, to be present when the FEPC appropriation squeezed through the House by a breath taking four vote margin.

Some observers, insisting the support of the Administration has not been apparent among Congressional leaders, have interpreted the President's statement as indicating he has not been getting the kind of aid for the President's decision to issue Executive Order 8802 which first created the original FEPC in July, 1941.

Fair Practices

Post-Washington, D.C.

There is a simple yet very vital issue involved in the current fight over funds for the Fair Employment Practices Committee. The issue is this: shall economic opportunity in America be limited on grounds of race, creed, color or nation origin? There can be no doubt as to how the American people, or their representatives in Congress, would settle this issue if it were stated in these real terms. Unfortunately, however, the issue has been distorted and obscured—imbued with wholly irrelevant emotional overtones and linked with complex questions of interracial relations. Some of this confusion has stemmed from misunderstanding. Some of it has been intentionally obscurantist in purpose. 6-13-44

The FEPC has as its sole function the elimination of unwarranted discriminatory practices in the employment of American workers. It is not concerned with abstract questions of social equality between races. It is not attempting—and has never attemped—suddenly to make over the mores of any section of the United States. It is not trying to do away with segregation or any of the manifestations of Jim Crowism—however repugnant these may be to democratic principles. As the committee chairman, Malcolm Ross, phrased it in testimony before the House Labor Committee the other day, "The mass of the American people can do as they please in their private lives but when it comes to earning a living, someone else with the hire and fire power offers the terms and conditions under which a man can earn his bread."

Race prejudice is an ugly factor in American life. Nevertheless it is a real factor and needs to be faced. The FEPC did not create race prejudice—as some of its critics have irresponsibly suggested. It is simply a mechanism for counteracting the effects of race prejudice in the economic sphere. As such, it performs a service which is indispensable to the freedom of minority groups and invaluable to the welfare of the American economy as a whole.

During the progress of the war, the FEPC has done much to integrate the skills and energies of minority elements into our production program. We should have had fewer tanks and planes and landing ships for D-Day if workers had been barred from industry through discrimination. In the course of the past 10 months, the FEPC has ended 26 work stoppages in vital production fields which had their origin in unfair employment practices; three of them were serious strikes in the steel industry. Its orderly, understanding approach to labor problems of this nature will be needed more than ever when we encounter the problems of demobilization and reconversion. For in this period discrimination can create chaos. If whole classes of men are denied an opportunity to earn a living because of the color of their skin, they will become desperate and dangerous. 6-13-44

The House has voted an appropriation of half a million dollars to carry on the FEPC's work. The Senate Appropriations Committee, despite an unfavorable subcommittee report, has recommended the approval of this sum. Today the Senate as a whole will begin discussion of it. We hope that the discussion will be concerned with the real issue—not with bugbears conjured up to obfuscate it. We cannot deny to citizens of the United States equality of economic opportunity.

Texas' Leonard Brin Resigns From FEPC

News-Birmingham, Ala
6-11-44

DALLAS, Tex.—(AP)—Leonard M. Brin has resigned as regional director the president's Comittee on Fair Employment Practices, and is en route to Washington.

Brin, who said here that his resignation—for "personal reasons"—would be effective June 30, declared that policy questions raised by Texas Gov. Coker R. Stevenson on FEPC operations "must be referred to the committee in Washington."

In a letter to Brin, Stevenson had asked by what authority FEPC conducted activities in Texas; what was the scope of its operations and the objective sought; whether the purpose of the activities included violation of any of the segregation laws of the state and whether it was the purpose to "establish policies which are in violation of state laws." 6-11-44

In Washington, Malcolm Ross, chairman of the committee, said, "The committee neither in its purpose nor in its activities does violation to any valid laws of any state nor has it established any policies contrary to such laws."

Brin said he had decided to resign two or three months ago, before a statewide discussion arose over activities of his office in directing employers engaged in essential work not to specify Negro and white in advertising for help.

Heartening signs

Senatorial refusal this week to kill the Fair Employment Practices committee evidenced in the 39 to 21 roll call vote for the $500,000 appropriation, certainly more than compensated for all the ugly things said in the nation's capital, and duly reported in the press, by the southern demogogues and race baiters, headed by the spectacular wickedly witty old war horse, Theodore Bilbo of Mississippi. Desipte Bilbo and his "Back to Africa" projects: despite the witch hunting of Senator George of Georgia and the strident echoes of their rebel colleagues on the senatorial floor, the Negro and those who love democracy might well take comfort in some aspects of the FEPC affair over and beyond the victory. Tribune-Los Angeles, Calif.

Encouraging was the position of Senator Pepper of Florida, who occupied the singular position of a Democrat from the Deep South voting with the forces for democracy. Senator Pepper is only one man, it is true, but day by day we become convinced that the South has an increasing number like him who will lead the region into mental, spiritual and social revolt someday, just as Denmark Vesey, Nat Turner, John Brown and the others led physically enslaved Negroes in the many insurrections prior to the Civil War. 6-26-44

In addition to Senator Pepper's courageous stand, the attitude of the better element of the nation's press was also heartening. Reported with due ridicule and a not too subtle show of impatience with such horse play were the harangues of the Dixie legislators. It can be taken as a good sign that the American publie at large is waking up when the popular press comes finally to almost common agreement; the intellectuals, the leadership, is never very far in front of the people.

IN SPITE OF HYSTERICAL OPPOSITION FROM the White Supremacy bloc in Congress, the Fair Employment Practices Committee has been granted $500,000 to carry on its fight for racial equality in employment. Meager though the amount may be for the vast responsibility that has been imposed upon the agency, the provision of even this sum must be considered a major political victory for the advocates of racial justice. In the Senate particularly, the racial bigots left no stone unturned to discredit the FEPC and withhold its appropriation. The agency was charged with creating racial trouble, with seeking to communize America, and, in the words of Senator Bilbo, with furthering the Negro's "dream of social equality and intermarriage." Under pressure from the Southern bloc the Senate adopted an amendment which will prevent the government from seizing and operating plants to enforce the rulings of the FEPC against discrimination. The agency will still have the power to enforce its orders through cancelation of government contracts. A second Senate amendment providing that no decision by the FEPC could modify any act of Congress is regarded as an attempt to undermine its cancelation powers. The practical effect of these amendments is not clear as we go to press; but since the agency has achieved remarkable results in the past without adequate authority for cracking down on offenders, now, armed with a clear-cut Congressional mandate, it should make an even better record.

The Nation-New York N.Y. 7-1-44

More 'Discrimination'

Post-Birmingham, Ala.

The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices has nosed its way into the headlines again. This time it is in Texas in a dictum to a Dallas newspaper. 6-5-44

The paper advertised in its own columns for a paper handler to work in its pressroom, specifying that he be a Negro. Promptly, the publisher was notified by the regional director of the CFEP that the ad was discriminatory that it violated Executive Order No. 9346. The violation, it seems, consisted in "automatically limiting applicants to the narrow field described in the advertisement and barring persons of other race or color even though the latter may also possess skill needed by your establishment."

Now all the aims of the CFEP may be laudable ones. Its members may be inspired by the loftiest of motives. It may have only the best interests of the people at heart. But it seems that its stand in matters like this one simply is silly, to put it charitably.

Who should be more competent to choose the type of man he wants for a job than the employer, out of whose pocket the wage for that man comes and whose interests are affected by the fitness or unfitness of the person he hires? If he thinks a Negro is better qualified for the job, who is a better judge than he? If he wants a white man, who is more competent to decide than he?

If it so happens that he prefers a Jew to a Gentile, or vice versa, or if he happens to want an atheist, a Baptist, a Roman Catholic, a Buddhist, or a disciple of Aimee Semple McPherson, why does he not have the right to that preference? 6-5-44

The employer is the winner or the loser by the choice. He is very unlikely to step out and hire a bunch of incompetents just because they are of a certain race or color or creed or political belief which he may happen to favor personally. He is not going to practice discrimination to his own damage.

Time must be hanging heavy indeed on the hands of the CFEP if it is worrying about the fairness or unfairness of hiring one paper handler at a wage of probably $20 a week. It certainly has strained its imagination to find discrimination in a case like this.

If this is the type of benefit with which we are being blessed by the workings of the committee, it seems that many of our congressmen were right when they fought against granting it a further appropriation from the Federal Treasury. 6-5-44

The Practical Point To Be Remembered

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky. 6-13-44

One great point about the Fair Employment Practices Committee might be pressed upon members of the United States Senate whose appropriations subcommittee proposed to knock out the $500,000 proposed for another year's operation of the anti-discrimination agency.

This is the idea that the F.E.P.C. is a highly practical device for helping make best use of manpower for war production and that it is a means of bringing about total mobilization of workers in the nation's interest. In the extremity of war, it is patently a disservice to stifle the operation of an agency designed to prevent the elimination of workers from the productive scheme of things because they belong to minorities of race, creed or color.

Irrespective of any social implications in the F.E.P.C. program, which many besides Southern Democrats seem exclusively to see, there is this element to be considered—that the thing involves a matter of labor utilization at a time when there is never enough of strength and skill, when working as well as fighting with every available resource of the land is demanded. 6-13-44

The subcommittee's action was overridden yesterday by the full committee, and we hope the Senate will sustain the latter decision, which coincides with the decision of the House of Representatives. In the lower body, the purpose of F.E.P.C. has been vindicated, though it was only by the narrow margin of four votes that the members there defeated the TARVER amendment which would have struck the funds from the War Agencies Appropriation Bill.

E en in the House, however, politics induced the members to move gingerly. The vote of 123 to 119 by which the Georgia Congressman's amendment was defeated was recorded by teller, with almost ostentatious avoidance of roll call. Obviously, the main point needs pressing, particularly now in the Senate. We are at war. The great necessity is to win, in the accomplishment of which all Americans must work together. Our fate is a common one, and as there can be no distinction as to it, so there can be no discrimination as to the service required properly to shape it.

George Hits FEPC Result

Constitution-Atlanta, Ga. 6-16-44

WASHINGTON, June 15.—(AP)—Senator George, Democrat, Georgia, contended today that the President's Fair Employment Practices Commission, chief item of controversy in a billion-dollar war agencies appropriation bill before the senate, is "a step toward national socialism."

George told reporters:

"The vital objection to it is that it takes away from the owner and manager of a business the right of control over that business—not in the interest of any legitimate social reform, but to placate and palliate the prejudices of a racial group which may feel itself discriminated against."

The announced purpose of the FEPC is to prevent racial discrimination in war industries and government employment. Some southern lawmakers contend it has fomented racial disorders rather than reduced them. 6-16-44

A majority of the southern group, while all-out against approval of the $500,000 FEPC budget, appeared unwilling to risk a filibuster on a bill carrying funds for important war agencies. Nevertheless they were determined to put their opposition firmly on record in the senate before the item goes to a vote. Its chance for approval was conceded to be good.

The $500,000 appropriation for its work next year, already approved by the House, is now before the Senate. Few senators outside of those from the polltax states would dare vote against it. So the polltaxers and some of their GOP pals are trying to kill it through trickery.

They have apparently dropped their first plan to filibuster the measure to death because any such action would hold up appropriations for many other war agencies and would rouse a terrific storm of public protest.

Their plan now seems to be to postpone action until the weekend when FEPC supporters will be absent.

This can, and must be, prevented by the people. Every senator should be reached at once and urged to be present during the debate and the vote on FEPC. Its defeat would be a dangerous blow to the war effort, to national unity and to American democracy. 6-13-44

Only 26 Pct. of 'Race' Cases Before FEPC Came From South

Constitution Atlanta, Georgia
8-4-44

BY JAMES MARLOW

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—(AP)—Southerners have shouted loudest about "white supremacy" over Negroes but there is plenty of evidence to show that doctrine is practiced widely in the rest of the country.

The strike of Philadelphia transit workers against the hiring of Negro drivers by the transportation company there followed bitter complaints of outright discrimination in that northern city.

This tells some of the story:

The Fair Employment Practice Committee has pending about 2,111 complaints of racial discrimination.

The FEPC was created to prevent discrimination on racial or religious grounds in war industries and thus, its advocates argued, make the best use of the nation's manpower.

1,550 CASES ELSEWHERE

Of the total of 2,111 complaints, 561 are in the south. The remaining 1,550 complaints have been made from the rest of the country.

8-4-44

FEPC officials say:

"Those figures don't mean that those are all the cases of discrimination occurring either in the south or the rest of the country.

"Actual discrimination may be far greater but we report only the complaints received.

"In the north, particularly, complaints of discrimination against Negroes are apt to be more numerous for two reasons:

"First, there are more Negro organizations in the north and they are active against discrimination. Second, there are more war industries in the north and the FEPC handles only cases of discrimination in war jobs."

Philadelphia is not the only city where there have been protests against proposals to promote Negroes to jobs as bus drivers or as street car motormen and conductors.

There have been complaints of discrimination in Washington, D. C., Baltimore and Los Angeles. The Los Angeles case will be heard Aug. 8 and 9. 8-4-44

There have been complaints of discrimination in the shipbuilding and aircraft industries, public utilities, southern textile mills, machinery manufacture and railroads.

The heaviest load of complaints has come from New York, Philadelphia, Detroit, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Detroit and St. Louis.

The FEPC Case

Editor, Constitution: I read with dimmed hopes the editorial of August 7, 1944, on "The State of the Nation." Whereas I agree with you that there are two obvious diseases that if unchecked will do permament damage to the heart of the nation. I certainly do not agree with your diagnosis. Your analysis of class legislation is partially true, but certainly by no stretch of the imagination could the FEPC be named as the second virus. The FEPC is only one remedy aimed at checkmating a malignant disease. It is very difficult for Negroes in Atlanta to understand how a paper with such professed liberalism as yours could so blindly ignore the true virus. 8-17-44

The real and potent virus is the dogged determination of the white American to perpetuate racial prejudice and economic discrimination in face of a world conflagration set by a Fascist racial theory. Everyone who has taken the time to study the testimony secured by congress on the FEPC, knows that Senators George and Russell stretched minor points to kill the FEPC. They did not speak of the overwhelming instances of amicable and noteworthy achievements of the FEPC in aiding the war effort. Nor did they propose how the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments to the Constitution could be enforced in face of flagrant denials of work opportunities to a minority race who is dying on the battle fronts of the world every day to protect the self-safe companies that would deny members of their own families work opportunities.

One More FEPC Mess

Birmingham Post 9-12-44

No good citizen favors strikes that hamper war production. Many of the hundreds of walkouts which have hampered our fighting program have been for reasons that seem senseless to the average observer. Many people will take that view of the transportation strike in Philadelphia, but it certainly is unfair in the extreme to heap all the blame on the traction workers who quit their jobs.

When the members of Mr. Roosevelt's so-called Fair Employment Practices Committee decided that they would force 5000 transit line employes to work with eight upgraded Negroes, they could not help knowing that they were setting the stage for trouble—and deliberately.

There was trouble. The Army moved in. The strike was ended. And the FEPC probably is sitting back and tossing bouquets at itself for a job well done.

There may be a little question about this well-done job. Is this victory of "principle" worth what it cost?

Is the upgrading of eight Negroes worth the loss of a million or more man-hours of work on vital war equipment?

Is it worth intensifying racial tension, which has been high in Philadelphia for several years? 8-12-44

Is it worth all the expense of moving troops into the city to take over the traction lines?

Is it worth the material damage, the property loss, the physical injuries that were sustained?

We doubt it. This looks like one more on the debit side of the FEPC, which, incidentally, hasn't any items on the credit side that we can recall right now.

Senator Russell and the FEPC

Sen. Richard B. Russell, of Georgia, has again spoken before the senate of the United States, asking that deliberative body to curb the "ruthless . . . distorted views" of the Fair Employment Practices Committee and its members.

Sen. Russell has said also he has no quarrel with the FEPC as created. Constitution—Atlanta, Ga.

What he does quarrel with, and what every thoughtful person must quarrel with, is the apparent determination, of at least a majority of its members, to extend the power and the field of operations designated for the committee far beyond anything ever conceived for it.

The problem outlined for the Fair Employment Practices Committee was large enough. It was set up to prevent discrimination in employment practices in the war plants of the nation supported by the taxpayers' money. In this field the original FEPC did an excellent job. It ended many discriminations and set up a new pattern of employment. 8-11-44

The FEPC then went into a period of inactivity because of resignations. These resignations were brought about, in some if not in all instances, by the determination of some of those connected with the FEPC, and some of those influential ones interested in it, to make of the FEPC, not a fair employment practices committee, but an agency which would solve, with a club the racial problem of the nation The FEPC, as finally reorganized, seems to have forgotten its original purpose. It has made war plants a secondary consideration. Only by a great stretching of imagination could it have ruled the railroads of the nation to be war plants within the meaning of the decree setting up FEPC. By no stretching of the point or imagination can it be said the FEPC had any business whatsoever dealing with the street railway business in Philadelphia.

We commend Sen. Russell and urge that he keep this before the senate of the United States until the FEPC is abolished or forced to do only the job it was created to do. It does stand convicted in the public eye as the most fanatical and authority-be-damned committee yet created. The good it has done—and it has done good—is completely overshadowed by its arrogant and harmful acts which cause ten dragons of prejudice and hate to spring up for every one slain.

Ministers Pray Before Senate FEPC Committee For Permanent Life

Daily Worker, New York 9-1-44

S. S. Washington Purser Writes Of Leader's Reaction

WASHINGTON—(SNS—A large delegation of Negro ministers stood in prayer Thursday at a Senate subcommittee meeting for consideration of a bill to establish a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission.

The ministers, from churches in Baltimore, Philadelphia and Washington, were presented to the sub-committee by Dr. William H. Jernigan, spokesman for the National Council of Negro Churches.

Exclusion of Negroes from equal opportunities threatens the democracy of this nation, Dr. Jernagin told the senators.

"Our democratic institutions cannot endure," he said, "if we continue to want and insecurity in the midst of plenty."

There is no hatred or strife more bitter than that which can come when people of different races compete for too little and too few jobs.

The Right Rev. John W. Ryan, spokesman for the New York, National Catholic Welfare Conference, told the committee that employers who practice discrimination against Negroes are committing an act "as definitely immoral as if they committed theft or murder."

The theory that the Negro must be "kept in his place" was condemned by Monsignor Ryan as based on "an evil tradition" which belongs of Negro slaves. Employers are "entirely illogical," when they refuse to employ them in their stores but in their own kitchens and dining rooms.

Coast Bows to FEPC

People's Voice—New York, N.Y.

LOS ANGELES—In a closed conference with FEPC officials Wednesday of last week, representatives of the Los Angeles Railway agreed to hire and upgrade Negroes to platform positions on street cars and buses. This agreement followed a directive of the FEPC after its hearings on the matter recently, in which it ordered the company to desist its practices of refusing to hire colored persons as motormen, conductors and bus drivers. The company promised to take immediate steps to comply with its new hiring policies, working in cooperation with the regional director of the FEPC.

8-26-44

The FEPC subsequently agreed to recommend to the War Manpower Commission that the firm's labor priority rights, which were taken away in March, be restored.

Navy Yard Discrimination Case Sent To Washington For Action

Age—New York, N.Y.

4-8-44

The Citizens' Anti-Discrimination Committee has just been informed by Edward Lawson, FEPC Regional Director, that its brief alleging racial and employment discrimination against Negro and Jewish workers by the Brooklyn Navy Yard has been referred to Washington officials for action. Mr. Lawson promised the committee a detailed statement later this week.

The FEPC's decision to send the case to Washington was the result of Navy Yard Command Kelly's failure to act on the charges.

4-9-44

The critical stage of this campaign to bring about fair employment practices for thousands of Negroes and minorities in one of the nation's largest Navy Yards is at hand!

The Citizens' Committee and the United Federal Workers of America Local 137 (CIO) will seek the support of all progressive organizations in New York to carry this fight on to Washington with increased vigor until substantial action is taken to eliminate the rampant employment discrimination charged to the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31—(AP)—A large delegation of Negro ministers stood in prayer Thursday at a Senate subcommittee meeting for consideration of a bill to establish a permanent fair employment practices commission.

The ministers, from churches in Baltimore, Philadelphia and Washington, were presented to the subcommittee by Dr. William H. Jernagin, spokesman for the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches.

Exclusion of Negroes from equal opportunities threatens the democracy of this nation, Dr. Jernagin told the senators.

"Our democratic institutions cannot endure," he said, "if we condemn 15 million or more of our citizens to want and insecurity. There is no hatred or strife more bitter than that which can come when people of different races compete for too little and too few jobs."

The Rt. Rev. John W. Ryan, New York, spokesman for the National Catholic Welfare Conference, told the committee that employers and employes who practice job discrimination against Negroes are committing an act "as definitely immoral as if they committed theft or murder."

The theory that the Negro must be "kept in his place" was condemned by Msgr. Ryan as based on "an evil tradition" which began in the days of Negro slaves. NEGRO GROUP PRAYS BEFORE SENATORS

Ministers Attend Hearing on Bill to Make FEPC Permanent

—Post-War Peril Stressed

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31 (AP)—A large delegation of Negro ministers stood in silent prayer today at a Senate subcommittee meeting for consideration of a bill to establish a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission.

The ministers, who came from churches in Baltimore, Philadelphia and Washington, were presented to the subcommittee by the Rev. Dr. William H. Jernagin of Washington, spokesman for the Fraternal Council of Negro Churches.

Exclusion of Negroes from equal opportunities threatens the democracy of this country, Dr. Jernagin told the Senators.

"Our Democratic institutions cannot endure," he said, "if we condemn 15,000,000 or more of our citizens to want and insecurity. There is no hatred or strife more bitter than that which can come when people of different races compete for too little and too few jobs."

The Right Rev. John A. Ryan, spokesman for the National Catholic Welfare Conference, said that employers and employes who practiced job discrimination against Negroes were committing an act "as definitely immoral as if they committed theft or murder"

The theory that the Negro must be "kept in his place" was condemned by Mgr. Ryan as based on "an evil tradition" which began in the days of Negro slaves. Employers are "entirely illogical," he asserted, when they refuse to hire Negroes in their stores but employ them in their own kitchens and dining rooms.

The Senators hearing testimony on employment problems of minority groups were told of an incident of "racial discrimination" in the United States Capitol.

Miss Milly Brandt of the American Jewish Congress, New York, testified before the Chavez subcommittee that to her and several others was denied admission to the Senate Office Building cafeteria and the Senate restaurant in the Capitol because one of the group was a Negro woman.

Only at the Supreme Court Building, whose motto, she quoted, is "Equal justice under law," was the party admitted to a cafeteria.

The subcommittee, considering a bill to establish a permanent fair employment practices commission, heard also Arnold Aronson, spokesman for the Chicago Council against Racial and Religious Discrimination, assert that race riots which followed the first World war might be repeated in this post-war period if employment dropped and no anti-discrimination stand was taken by the Government.

Saying that minority groups were "last to be hired and first to be fired," Aronson declared that idle workers might start "pulling down the social order in which they live."

The firing of minority group workmen, he said, to make way for soldiers and discharged war workers might create in this country a situation similar to "the ladder of race hatred, fanned in the crucible of unemployment," by which Adolf Hitler climbed to power in Germany.

Senator Dennis Chavez of New Mexico, chairman of the subcommittee, said the bill might be brought before the Senate education and labor committee next week. No witnesses, he said, had asked so far to testify against the proposed legislation.

Other witnesses included Mrs. Myrta P. Ross of New York City, executive secretary of the United Council of Churchwomen; Miss Helen Raebeck of New York, National Council of Jewish Women; Miss Charlotte May of Washington, National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses; Dr. Emily Hickman of New York, general secretary of the Y. W. C. A.; George Weaver of Washington, director of the national CIO committee to abolish racial discrimination; Kermit Eby, assistant director of research and education of the CIO.

One Opponent Appears At Hearings on FEPC

Call—Kansas City, Mo.

9-15-44

By HARRY McALPIN

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—Only one person appeared during the six days of senate hearings on legislation for a permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee in opposition to such a measure. She was Mrs. Agnes Waters, who claims to represent the Mothers of America, and to be a candidate for President of the United States—the only woman running for that honor.

She appeared at the hearings last week and after sitting through a session, arose and asked "what is this—legislation in favor of Negroes and Jews. I'm opposed to it and demand to be heard." She was extended the opportunity of appearing the next day.

Her testimony brought boos and hisses from the audience, which caused her to appeal to the chairman of the sub-committee, Sen. Dennis Chavez (D. N. M.) for order and courtesy, but he could not control "human reactions."

9-10-44

A highlight of her appearance came when she began to cough from her own ravings and a tall, handsome Negro—Grant Reynolds of the Washington Bureau of the N.A.A.C.P. —courteously carried her a glass of water. The irony in the situation escaped no one present.

The hearings ended last Friday with the appearance of Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, Dr. Robert C. Weaver, Broadus Mitchell, Ann Arnold Hedgeman and several others in favor of the bill.

Sen. Chavez indicated he would make every effort to get a favorable report before the full Senate Committee on Education and Labor "as quickly as possible."

FEPC AND CIO SIGN PACT TO ELIMINATE RACE DISCRIMINATION

Daily Tribune—Chicago, Ill.

9-4-44

Washington, D. C., Sept. 3 (AP).—The President's committee on fair employment practices and the war policy division of the CIO United Automobile, Aircraft, and Agricultural Implement Workers have signed a working agreement designed to speed the "elimination of un-American discrimination."

The agreement, announced today by FEPC Chairman Ross and R. J. Thomas, UAW president, is the first negotiated between the committee and any union. Under the agreement, the union will coöperate in the settlement of complaints of discrimination involving any UAW officer or a plant in which the union has a local.

9-4-44

Ross called the agreement "a great step forward in the trade union movement, which shows an ever growing realization that preservation of the right to work for all men regardless of race, creed color, or national origin is the key stone to its future healthy existence."

FEPC Awaits Two Major Decisions

Daily World Atlanta Ga.

2-9-44

WASHINGTON—(A N P)—The Fair Employment Practice committee was waiting with baited breath last week for the announcement of momentous decisions both in Washington and in Kansas City. At the same time, what preparation that could be made was going ahead in anticipation of a two-day meeting of the full committee on Friday and Saturday

Monday week ago President Roosevelt convenced his special three-man committee on the railroad cases and told them exactly what he wanted them to do. Meeting with the group also was Jonathan Daniels, assistant to the President chiefly responsible for problems arising regarding minority groups. 2-9-44

The remainder of the week the men met in an office at the state department building and worked out procedures.

ROSS TESTIFIES

They called in FEPC Chairman Ross on Wednesday and got from him a picture of the picture to date. Others whom they might have talked with could not be determined. It is understood, however that the committee planned to hear representatives of the carriers and the brotherhoods before reaching their decision. 2-9-44

The members of this committee are Judge Walter P. Stacy of N C., chairman, Judge William H. Holly of the U. S. District Court, Chicago; and Mayor Frank J. Lausche of Cleveland. Ross was not present.

Out in Kansas the boilermakers union was holding its convention and was expected to discuss the entire question of Negro memberships. Several sources have indicated that the action taken by the boilmakers 'might' have far reaching effect upon other problems confronting the FEPC. It is known that Chairman Ross had been out there seeking to prevail upon the union, but no indication was available as to what he said or, did or the success he might have met.

HELD IN ABEYANCE

Meanwhile, all cases pending before the Smith investigating committee and representing complaints against the FEPC are being held in abeyance until the outcome of the Kansas convention is known.

The committee disclosed this week that a woman who had been hired last September by the Capital Transit Company as operator was fired on January 24 when it was learned she is a Negro. She is Mrs. Sara Grayson.

Mrs. Grayson was hired on September 6, received 21 days of training operating a car without passengers but under supervision She was later assigned to a route This year she was called to the office of the personnel directoir who said "young lady, we shall have to ask you to turn in.' 2-9-44

Peterson Hits FEPC Ruling

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. 3-10-44

WASHINGTON, March 9.—(AP) The war effort is being delayed, believes Representative Hugh Peterson by "attempts to force social equality on merchant seamen."

Peterson, member of the special house committee investigating executive agencies, sharply criticized in an interview the Fair Employment Practices Committee for issuing a ruling which he said resulted in such action.

The Georgian also criticized Craig Vincent, War Shipping Administration regional administrator, who obtains crews for ships sailing from Jacksonville, Savannah and other points along the Atlantic seaboard.

"He declared that he believed unhesitatingly that the FEPC ruling should be enforced, even if it meant social equality," Peterson declared. 3-10-44

"Now I believe he has a right to have his opinions, but the men who sail the ships have a right to their beliefs, too.

"And when they don't want social equality, as they have indicated they do not, then it is not right for Vincent or anyone else to force it upon them.

"That is one of the things that we are fighting for—to guarantee men such as the merchant seamen the right to live as they see fit.

"It is a terrible situation and not right to take advantage of an emergency situation and force on them something to which they are opposed."

Ask Special FEPC Committee To Block Railroad, Union Bias

Atlanta, Ga. Daily World

1-22-44

WASHINGTON — (A N P)— Members of the special committee appointed by President Roosevelt to adjust complaints against the railroad companies and unions which have defied the findings and directives of the FEPC were asked to take all appropriate steps this week to abolish discriminatory practices against Negroes in a letter from the National Lawyers guild.

The letter, carrying the signatures of Robert W. Kenny, guild president and Martin Pepper, executive secretary, delcared that there is not the slightest evidence that the public would object if Negroes were employed on the railroads in the south, and that in fact, both the southern public and southern white labor have long accepted the Negro in these jobs.

"We sincerely hope," the lawyers said, "that your committee will not allow this flagrant interference with the war effort to succeed," while charging that the railroads and unions are in the position of trying to impose on the south an employment pattern in the railroads that has never heretofore existed there. 1-23-44

The three-man committee, which includes Judge Walter P. Stacy, chairman Mayor Frank Lausche and Judge William H. Holly, was told that no provisions in the Railroad Labor act protected the railroads in the practice of racial discrimination, and that supreme court decisions supported the view that discriminatory clauses in the contracts between the railroad companies and unions are made invalid by the presidential executive orders creating the FEPC.

Pointing out the acute manpower shortage at a time when the final push is about to be made against the fortress of fascism, the lawyers analyzed the contentions made by the railroads and stressed the national danger of a probable breakdown in transportation.

Claim "We Treat Negroes Right"

1-15-44

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON—(A N P) —Insinuations that the Fair Employment Practice committee might be communisticallly influenced and that what's Negro shipyard workers on the west coast are asking for is but a fore-runner to mixed housing, mixed schools and integrated social activity, are contained in the letter of Complaint which the Boliermaker's Union (AFL) have filed with the Smith investigating committee whose chairman, Howard W. Smith (D) of Virginia has announced that a probe would be made of FEPC.

Contents of the letter were obtained from a reliable source, and for the first time reveals the arguments which the boilermakers are making in answer to the directives of the FEPC to them to stop discriminating against Negro workers through the medium of Jim-crow auxiliary lodges 1-15-44

Meanwhile, in New York, George Marshall, chairman of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, in a letter to the speaker of the house, Sam Rayburn, urged that the Smith committee be immediatelv terminated because of its "irresponsible investigations which disrupt the work of important war agencies."

Monday a week ago, a representative of the committee seized the records of the FEPC in both the boilermakers' and the railroad's cases preliminary to undertaking a probe of the anti-discrimination agency. The seizure was made allegedly on the basis of the complaint of the boilermakers. The complaint was signed by W. A. Calvin, international vice-president of the union.

New Peril to FEPC

Daily Worker-Newyork, N.y.

GUNNING for the life of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee is again under way in Washington 3-1-44

Through the amendment to proposed appropriations offered by Senator Russell of Georgia, the FEPC would be killed in a shrewd and subtle way. The President would merely be prevented from transferring funds to any federal agency which had been in existence for twelve months or more. That spells "FEPC" all over. It would apparently end that agency by May 28.

This proposal has been actually endorsed, at least tentatively, by a sub-committee of the Senate Appropriations Committee. That this should happen is not necessarily surprising. That same coterie of Republicans and rightist Democrats which has tried to halt the soldiers vote, suppress subsidies and bring out an inadequate tax bill would not scruple at killing off the work which the FEPC has been doing against discrimination in war employment. 3-1-44

Among the members of the sub-committee which temporarily OK'd this Russell amendment are Senators Truman, Mead and Green —men who have frequently stood by the administration and who are generally on the democratic side of vital issues before Congress. Their attitude toward this measure has not been made clear, since it seems they were not present at the sub-committee meeting at which this undesirable move was made. But we want to take this occasion to urge them—and to ask our readers to urge them—to work actively against this proposal, in the committee and on the Senate floor.

It is unthinkable that America can, on the eve of the mighty military offensive, take any step so disturbing to our nation's unity as the snuffing out of the FEPC would prove to be.

GOP South Rallying Votes To Kill FEPC

Trade Calls for

Help in Cutting Funds For FCC

By ELIZABETH DONAHUE
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Mar. 21.—A Republican-Southern Democratic coalition in the Senate is rallying votes with clock-like precision to kill the FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee).

An amendment wiping out the FEPC—the agency designed to prevent or eliminate racial discrimination in war industries—is tacked on to the Independent Offices Appropriations Bill now under consideration in the Senate.

A number of the bill's provisions carrying funds for other agencies were voted on yesterday. The roll calls disclosed that the Southern Democrats who are out to get FEPC have swapped votes with GOP Senators, who in turn insisted that funds for other Government departments be curtailed.

Teamwork Evident

This teamwork between the two groups was clearly evident as the Southerners meekly followed the Republican leadership's fight against giving sufficient money to the FCC (Federal Communications Commission).

On two separate roll-calls, Southern Democratic Senators—Bankhead, Byrd, Eastland, McClellan, Overton, Russell, Stewart and others—concurred in slashing the FCC funds for radio propaganda analysis. 3-21-44

The FCC's funds clearly were not a major issue with the Southerners. They apparently acceded to Republican demands in the hope of winning GOP support when the FEPC issue hits the floor within a day or two.

The amendment abolishing FEPC is disguised in language which would prevent the President from using his emergency funds for any agency which after one year does not have Congressional approval.

Aimed at FEPC

The amendment, sponsored by Sen. Richard Russell (D., Ga.), is frankly aimed at FEPC, although a number of other agencies would be affected.

The FEPC, created by Presidential directive, has been supported from FDR's special fund, and until recently has not requested money from Congress.

After the introduction of the Russell amendment, the FEPC submitted a request for $585,000.

Actually, however, the fate of FEPC may be decided on the action taken by Congress on the Russell amendment. If both Houses vote to curb the use FDR makes of special money given him by Congress, this action will be construed as the death-knell of FEPC. There is slim chance that the FEPC's funds request would then be granted.

Permanent FEPC Council Ideal Hits A Snag

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.

Support Drops Amidst Confusion As To Policy

WASHINGTON — (ANP)— The work of the National Council for a Permanent FEPC, to all intents and purposes, has been snagged on the rock of policy. Sources both in and out of government whose sympathies all along have been and still are in support of the idea espoused by the council, are agreed upon this point.

To begin with, the council was born of the imagination of A. Philip Randolph and his March on Washington Movement, early in 1943. According to a strong supporter of the MCWM here in Washington, it was not the intent of the organization to dominate the council in any way but rather to get it moving and to leave it to its own devices.

The chairmanship of the council however, was shared by Randolph and Dr. Allen Knight Chalmers, pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle church in New York. A large national committee was created and then a smaller executive committee. The larger number of appointments to this smaller group were and are held by Negroes.

Because of his multiplicity of duties, Randolph quite naturally left much responsibility with B. F. McLaurin, a field representative for his Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. McLaurin, it might be said, has always been available to "second St. Philip's motion," as one individual has described him.

The council met here for two days in February and impressed a considerable number of people with its desire to do a job. Since that time the organization has been fumbling along without adequate direction. 4-18-44

At least two important matters involving policy have not yet been settled, if present indications are to be believed. The first involves actual minority representation in the council; the other, the position to be taken regarding the present struggle of FEPC for a budget.

Observers here have long felt if a permanent FEPC is ever to be realized, the effort is going to require the concerted efforts of all minority groups who can be convinced that they have a stake in the fight. These individuals maintain that FEPC is held by many to represent nothing more than an instrument for handling Negro grievances only. They point out that the committee itself has said or done nothing to demonstrate other wise, either in its make-up or in its selicitation of space in newspapers. 4-18-44

Say Agency Is Powerless To Enforce Edicts

Daily World

Counsel Witness Before Hostile House Probers

WASHINGTON—(S N S) — Attorney Charles H. Houston, who represented the Fair Employment Practice Committee in its hearings on railroad discrimination, conceded before the hostile Smith Investigation Committee of the House Thursday that the agency was powerless to enforce its celebrated directives against Negro job bias.

General concensus of opinion was that the FEPC campaign against discrimination in the employment of Negroes is bogging down.

DIRECTIVES NOT 'ORDERS'

Attorney Houston conceded that FEPC directives were not orders and "nothing but recommendations." Voicing the viewpoint of FEPC officials, he made this admission after the Smith Committee had provided a forum for an all-day attack on the FEPC directives, against discrimination by railroads and unions.

Attorneys for the railroads and the rail unions had joined in charging the FEPC with exceeding its authority in the issuance of the directives. Contending that the President's Commitee had no authority to ban discrimination were Sidney Alderman, (for the roads, and Frank Mulholland, for the Brotherhoods.

Alderman contended the railroads were powerless to employ more Negroes because of their agreements with the unions. He quoted Brotherhood officials as saying that if more jobs were given to the Negroes they could not "control their men" and disorder would follow. 3-5-44

DIGGING A GRAVE

Mulholland said the unions were sympathetic to the Negroes, but "couldn't progress more rapidly than public opinion." He admitted both the unions and the railroads had refused to comply with the FEPC directives.

Houston, replying to Mulholland's expression of sympathy for the movement to eliminate racial discrimination, said the Brotherhoods were "trying to solve the problem by elimination of the Negro from the industry." Warning that the issue involved the things we are fighting for in this war, Houston said:

"If you permit the authority of the United States to be flouted and say you will not permit employment to citizens of the United States, then you are digging the grave for thousands in the next generation."

CHALLENGE PRESENTED

Houston said the real function of the President's Committee was to bring the problem of racial discrimination to the attention of the public! He said it was the first agency to "deal with a problem like slavery that isn't going to be put off." 3-5-44

"To say that Negroes can't work on the railroads," Houston said, "puts a challenge up to every American that must be met."

Most of the Smith Committee members sat through a long day of testimony by Alderman and Mulholland attacking the FEPC, but when Houston took the stand to speak for the Negro unions they began to leave. First to go were three of the men who have been most hostile to the FEPC program—Representatives Clare Hoffman (Republican, Michigan), John Jennings, Jr., (Republican, Tennessee) and Hugh Peterson (Democrat, Georgia.)

Chairman Howard W. Smith, (Democrat, Virginia) suggested that if the unions really wanted to eliminate improper conditions they ought to do something about the Negro employes they represent but don't permit to belong to the unions. He said that "doesn't square with our American way of life."

Smith was careful to add that he was not "talking about race equality," because "I come from a part of the country where they don't believe in it."

'Real Story' Of FEPC Promised At Hearing By House Labor Head

News-Examiner
5-16-44

WASHINGTON—(AP) —Chairman Mary T. Norton (D., N. J.), of the House labor committee, asserted Tuesday she would "bring out the real story" of the oft-criticized fair employment practices committee at a hearing opening May 29 on legislation which would create a permanent federal agency similar to FEPC.

"It's time people knew about FEPC," Mrs. Norton told a reporter. "There has been so much misinformation about it that it's pitiful."

Three Southern members of her committee voiced sharp exceptions to the New Jersey congresswoman's action in calling the group to consider the proposed legislation.

REP. FISHER (D., Tex.) asserted the hearing "would only promote disunity" and Rep. Ramspeck (D., Ga.) commented, "The hearing will do more harm than good. The racial problem is a delicate one which can best be solved by a lot of patience and effort on the part of both races. It can't be solved by force or passing a law."

Rep. Abernethy (D., Miss.) in a statement published in The Congressional Record called the FEPC "the rottenest, vilest, most communistic-infested agency of this regulated government."

"THE SOUTHERNERS," observed Mrs. Norton, "think the FEPC deals just with their racial problem, but it doesn't. It concerns all minority groups throughout the country." 5-16-44

The proposed legislation, introduced by Reps. Scanlon (D., Pa.), Dawson (D., Ill.) and La Follette (R., Ind.), would create a fair employment practice commission of seven members, each of whom would be paid $10,000 yearly. The commission would be charged with preventing "discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color, national origin or ancestry."

Funds for FEPC Stir House Fight

WASHINGTON, May 25.—The House, receiving a bill to appropriate $1,033,358,367 for fiscal 1945 operations of 17 war agencies, immediately became embroiled today in a drive by some members to eliminate $500,000 for the President's fair employment practices committee. The bill was approved by the Appropriations Committee.

The drive against the FEPC was led by Representative Francis Case (R., S. D.) and was supported by Southern Democrats. The FEPC endeavors to prevent discrimination on account of color and race. Mr. Case sought to upset a unanimous consent agreement reached two days ago that legislative provisions of the bill could not be eliminated on parliamentary objections, but lost on a 175-to-54 vote.

Representative Clifton A. Woodrum (D., Va.) joined in seeking elimination of FEPC funds. He contended that since the agency never had been authorized by Congress (it was created by executive order), Congress should not vote funds for it.

Opponents of the agency planned to strike from the bill amendment to strike the FEPC funds.

The President on Monday announced official acceptance of the resignation of P. B. Young, Sr., as a member of the Fair Employment Practice Committee and the appointment of Attorney Charles H. Houston of Washington to fill the vacancy.

He announced also the resignation of Samuel Zemurray of New Orleans, as a member of the committee, and the appointment of Charles Horn, president of the Federal Catridge Company, of Minneapolis, Minn., as a new member of the FEPC.

The FEPC announced agreement of the Chicago Northwestern Railroad to upgrade Negro car cleaners to helpers, and dining car waiters to stewards. Five Negroes have been employed as stewards with retroactive seniority rights of six months to a year. 3-7-44

Although the Chicago Northwestern was involved in the FEPC hearings last September, the complaint of the waiters was not included because of late submission The matter was negotiated by the Chicago office of the FEPC.

Sen. Russell Offers Action To Limit Agencies

Bill Would Take Funds Away From Pres. Roosevelt

WASHINGTON — (S N S)—A Senate Appropriations Subcommittee voted solidly Monday to abolish President Roosevelt's Fair Employment Practices Committee and bring other executive agencies under closer scrutiny of Congress.

Offering the legislation was Senator Richard B. Russell, Democrat of Georgia. It was a amendment to the $8,500,090,000 independent offices appropriation bill. Effective July 1, it would prohibit the transfer of funds to agencies a year or more old which had not been authorized directly by Congress.

Indications were that the subcommittee would not complete consideration of the entire bill before Tuesday or Wednesday.

FEPC was established by executive order, designed to prevent racial discrimination in the hiring of war workers.

ACTION PREDICTED

Eealier Monday Senator Russell had said that his committee so far had been unable to obtain from the budget bureau a list of agencies which fell in this category, and added that he was informed that the FEPC, which had been investigated by a special house committee, would be included. Later, Senator Russell is quoted as having said "I guess that we'll get rid of FEPC."

FEPC KILLED 2-29-44

However, Malcolm Ross, chairman of the FEPC, issued a statement saying that reports that the Senate sub-committee had voted to abolish the agency were, "completely without foundation. "He pointed out that agencies which had been established by executive order and which were more than a year old should obtain funds directly from Congress instead of through the emergency funds of the President.

Two months ago, Ross declared, the FEPC submitted a request for a legislature appropriation for the gscal year, beginning July 1, 1944 to the bureau of the budget. "It is expected that congressional committees will act upon that request within a month or so," he added.

The FEPC budget is still pending before the budget bureau.

Subcommittee OKs Bill Which Would Kill Agency

2-29-44
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29.—A new threat to the existence of FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) developed today as a Senate Appropriations Subcommittee approved a measure calling for its elimination.

Sen. Richard Russell (D., Ga.) sponsored the legislation which, in the form of an amendment to the Independent Office Appropriation bill, prohibits transfer of funds to agencies a year or more old unless they have been specifically authorized by Congress.

Russell, virtually admitting that the amendment is aimed at the FEPC, declared yesterday that he "hoped it wiped out" the agency.

The FEPC was created by President Roosevelt to combat race discrimination in employment. It has no legislative authorization.

Another Senator from a poll tax state—Burnet R. Maybank (D., S. C.)—declared that "organizations that are set up without the specific direction of Congress should be abolished or confirmed by the Senate." 2-29-44

FDR recently reinforced the FEPC with a special order issued to the Comptroller General forbidding him to make war contracts with firms which practiced racial discriminations.

The FEPC is also under fire in the House, where a committee headed by Rep. Howard Smith (D., Va.) is conducting an investigation.

The amendment killing the FEPC has been approved by a subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee, but it must get approval from the full committee before it reaches the Senate. The subcommittee is completing work on the bill today.

Smith Urges FEPC to Cancel Order for Employment of Negroes

PM-New York, N.Y.
1-12-44

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Rep. Howard W. Smith, author of the Smith-Connally anti-strike law, is urging today a major change in Government policy to satisfy employes of the Philadelphia Transit Co. who are threatening to strike if they don't have their way.

The Virginia Congressman has proposed that the Fair Employment Practice Committee cancel an order directing the Philadelphia street car company to promote 24 experienced Negro employes in positions as conductors and motormen.

The Virginia Congressman was caught in this peculiar spot when, as chairman of a special House Investigating Committee, he was presented with a petition of protest signed by 1776 employes of the company.

The employes, most of whom are members of an independent union, insisted they would refuse to work with Negroes if the FEPC order is enforced.

Four employes were paraded before the Committee to back up the protest against the FEPC order that was filed by the independent union. They rang the changes from the superstition about venereal disease to the charge that the FEPC order would force the company to violate its contract with the union. 1-12-44

"Since when has syphllis become any respecter of persons?" asked Rep. Jerry Voorhis (D., Calif.). "I understand it afflicts whites and Negroes alike."

The only company witness was Frederick L. Ballard, counsel for the Philadelphia Transit Co. who admitted that the company had greed to the FEPC order. However, Ballard added:

"I can safely say that the company will not take any strong-arm action to enforce the directive against the wishes of the union."

FEPC Gets a Looking-Over

Post-Birmingham, Ala.

Congress at last is taking a good, searching look at President Roosevelt's Fair Employment Practices Committee. And a thorough investigation of this agency won't do any harm. 3-17-44

There may have been instances in which this committee has done good work in bringing about more fairness in employment in the nation's industrial plants and in other lines of work. But a greater part of its ukases have done nothing but stir dissension. Especial source of trouble has been its idea that merely by issuing directive, to take effect within 30 or 60 days, it could change customs that have prevailed for decades.

The President has asked that $585,000 be set aside for the work of FEPC. To date, it has been financed from unexpended balances of other agencies. An amendment to the independent offices appropriation bill would place it under a status of direct appropriation from Congress.

Certainly some check should be put on the FEPC. Its bull in a china shop course up to now has not endeared it to industry, railroads, unions, or business men in general. 3-17-44

Smith Probe Against FEPC Seen Seeking Anti-Negro Strikes

Daily Worker - New York, N.Y.

By Eva Lapin
(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The ductors served as the signal for amazing spectacle of a congressional stirring up racial antagonism. body steaming up workers to a strike Malcolm Ross, FEPC Chairman, situation unfolded today as the revealed that in November both the Smith Committee began its witch- company and the union showed in- hunt against the Fair Employment Practices mittee.

As em es of the Philadelphia Transit Company testified, it became apparent that the Smith investigation of the FEPC directive to put the blame on the other foot and charge directive and that "no visible agonism to Negroes" existed.

FEPC
Aaron Ford, former Mississippi
man who is acting as counsel for the committee, asked Wilson Fagg, a company employee for 18 years, what the sentiment of the workers was. 1-12-44

"I definitely believe there will be a strike in PRT if the FEPC order is enforced. That is my own opinion and that of the men who have signed the petitions," Fagg stated.

Ford directed a similar question at two other company union members, who innocently claimed they came down on their own behalf, as to whether they would work if the FEPC order was enforced and the answer was no in each case. 1-12-44

Not one congressman of the six present, including labor-baiter Clare Hoffman of Michigan, attacked the unpatriotic attitude of these workers. Only from John Delaney, New York Democrat, and Jerry Voorhis, California Democrat, came any criticism of these company union stooges. 1-13-44

From the testimony of FEPC Chairman Ross, who was constantly heckled by Congressmen Hoffman and Hugh Peterson of Georgia, it was apparent that the situation would have gone along smoothly if the Smith Committee hadn't stepped into the picture.

Now the company, which on Nov. 5, indicated its willingness to abide by the FEPC directive to upgrade Negroes, is hiding behind the skirts of the company union.

After the War Manpower Commission tried for eight months to get the Philadelphia Transit to employ Negroes, the FEPC finally stepped into the case.

The company at first seemed willing to abide by the order to relieve the manpower shortage and the company union, although claiming a certain clause in its contract with the company referring to unwritten customs prevented upgrading of Negroes, admitted that the "present manpower situation might well require a re-interpretation of this custom clause." 1-12-44

Counsel Ford constantly challenged Ross on the legal authority of FEPC to issue an order to a transit company, but the FEPC chairman made it plain that the committee has power to tackle any war industry, even in the absence of a government contract.

PREDICT STRIKE IF FEPC RACIAL EDICT IS OBEYED

Daily Tribune - Chicago, Ill
1-12-44

Transit Workers Oppose Rule on Negroes.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 11 (AP).—An employe of the Philadelphia transportation company predicted today that a strike among white employes would occur if the company complied with a government directive to employ Negroes as conductors, motormen, and cashiers.

William S. Fogg, who said he was a company storekeeper and a member of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Employers' union, presented the Smith house committee investigating executive agencies with two petitions opposing the directive which was issued by the President's fair employment practice committee. He contended that compliance with it would interefer with the war effort by causing discord among the transit employes.

Fogg said the signers would refuse to work with Negro motormen and conductors, and that 1,776 persons had affixed their names to the petitions in two days.

Union Bargaining Agent.

Frank P. Carney, president, and Frank N. Cobourn, secretary treasurer, of the Transit Employes union, and C. C. Hodgson, union council, appearing as witnesses, said the union has been certified by the Pennsylvania state labor board as bargaining agent for the company's 10,000 street car, bus, and elevated train employes, of whom approximately 600 are Negroes. 1-13-44

They told the committee the union has refused to abide by the FEPC directive because the legality of the directive had not been established, and because it would violate a contract with the company, which states, they said, that existing practices of employment cannot be changed unless agreed to by the management and the union. The exclusive employment of white workers as motormen, conductors, and cashiers was one of these existing practices, they testified.

The committee is attempting to find out what legal backing FEPC has for its directives forbidding racial discrimination in the handling of workers. 1-12-44

Limit Scope of Hearings.

Chairman Howard W. Smith [D., Va.] of the special house committee investigating executive agencies, said the hearings would be confined solely to the issue of the FEPC's legal authority. He declared that spokesmen for minority groups would not be permitted to use them as a forum for social reform theories.

The Philadelphia company on Nov. 15, 1943, was ordered by the FEPC to cease discriminating against Negroes. The directive was made retroactive requiring the company to consider all applications for upgrading and hiring which has been filed by Negroes since June 25, 1941.

FEPC Faces Life-and-Death Fight as Rep. Smith Opens Drive to Kill It

Daily Worker - New York, N.Y. 1-1-44

(By Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31. — The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, which has weathered more attacks than almost any other government agency, is sailing into the worst storm of its life.

Polltaxer Howard Smith's (D., Va.) long promised investigation of FEPC got off to a well-publicized start Dec. 27 with seizure by Smith committee lawyers of FEFC files on the southeastern railroad and west coast shipyard discrimination cases. Grandiosely known as the Smith committee of the house investigating the acts of executive agencies, the committee has been used by the wing-collared reactionary from the south in endless fishing expeditions against OPA, National War Labor Board and other key war agencies.

Hearings will begin immediately after the Congressional recess, chief counsel Aaron Ford informed FP. Alleged purpose will be to determine whether FEPC is assuming powers which can only be conferred by special act of Congress, but observers, well-acquainted with the circus ring atmosphere of Smith committee hearings, expect a vicious assault on FEPC, with 5,000,000 Negro workers as the main victims in the end.

Smith's witchhunt came as FEPC, through its chairman, Malcolm Ross, called on President Roosevelt to enforce its orders for 16 southeastern railroads and seven unions to halt discrimination in the employment and promotion of Negroes. All of the railroads and three of the unions have challenged FEPB's authority to issue such directives.

WEAK POSITION

With the railroads now under government operation, Roosevelt can enforce any decision he may make in the railroad discrimination case. However, this purely accidental circumstances does not change the essentially toothless position of FEPC.

A bill introduced by Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N. Y.), which is gaining fresh support daily among unions and Negro organizations, would do three things:

1. Make FEPC a permanent organization with full statutory powers, such as are held by NLRB with power to subpoena witnesses.

2. Arm FEPC chairman with authority to fix penalties for those who fail to comply with FEPC directives.

3. Provide criminal penalties for anyone who interferes with the work of FEPC. Offenders would be subject to $5000 fine, a year in prison, or both. 1-1-44

At present, the bill is buried in the judiciary committee, but Marcantonio has launched a campaign to get 218 signatures on house discharge petition No. 18, forcing consideration of the measure.

FEDERATION ASKS SMITH PROBE ENDED

Immediate termination of the House Smith Committee "investigating activities of executive agencies to see whether they are exceeding their authority," was urged yesterday by George Marshall, chairman of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, in a letter to the Speaker of the House, Sam Rayburn. Mr. Marshall pointed that the Smith Committee's action yesterday in seizing records of the Fair Employment Practices Committee (FEPC), notably all the records of the FEPC's recent Southern Railroads and the West Coast Shipyards cases is the latest example "of the Smith Committee's irresponsible investigations which disrupt the work of important war agencies."

Backers of FEPC Bills United -- Marcantonio

Daily Worker - New York, N.Y. 2-14-44

(Special to the Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Representative Vito Marcantonio, (ALP-N.Y.) yesterday issued a statement declaring that "No good purpose can be served by dividing the forces who seek a permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee through a debate as to the relative merits of the several bills on the subject now pending in the House."

His statement was an answer to a wire from Dr. C. B. Powell, editor of the New York Amsterdam News, asking for his views on a comparative analysis of the various Congressional measures for a permanent FEPC.

He said that Representatives Dr. Thomas Scanlon, of Pennsylvania, and William L. Dawson, of Illinois, were supporting H.R. 1732, the Marcantonio bill, by signing House Discharge Petition No. 18. Efforts are being made to get 218 signatures on that petition. H.R. 1732 would then be forced on the House floor for consideration.

"There is no contradiction whatsoever between urging a member of Congress to support the demand for my full support to all such bills."

MARCANTONIO

While Mr. Marcantonio was issuing his statement, regional directors of the FEPC were meeting elsewhere here to report on their work.

Mr. Marcantonio's statement said:

"Good common sense requires that all persons sincerely wishing the passage of such legislation give their fullest support to each of the bills now pending at each stage of their legislative development. I am giving my full support to all such bills."

Cases of discrimination against Negro workers lead, with Jewish workers following in second place. Regional directors said that failure to utilize Negro manpower to its fullest skills and discrimination in the employment of Negro women were still common in some places.

There seemed to be general agreement that employment practices show improvement in regions where the FEPC has offices. As a result of opening one in Chicago, Negroes were employed on the transit lines. An office is planned for Cleveland, where there has been considerable resistance to FEPC directives.

Employment Practice Committee said: "If so happens that the quickest way to get legislation for a permanent FEPC is by securing 218 signatures to discharge petition. Already a great many Congressmen have signed and others are pledged to do so."

If that is done, Mr. Marcantonio will call a simple matter to bring his bill to the best of the other. He concluded: "We defeat ourselves by debating what is good and what is bad in each bill at a time, when our whole strength should be mustered to secure swift action in Congress on this vital subject." 2-14-44

Fair Employment Practice Committee regional directors expressed the unanimous opinion, in their meeting with Malcolm Ross, national chairman of the agency, that their chief problem is that of upgrading Negro workers.

Stacy Committee Considers FEPC And Railroads

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga.
2-26-44

WASHINGTON—(ANP)—The Stacy committee reviewing the findings and directives of the FEPC against the 16 railroad carriers and seven railway unions, were scheduled to convene here for another session. The expectation is that they will call in representatives for the carriers and the unions to hear their points of view.

Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, appeared before the three-man group nearly three weeks ago and answered a number of questions and provided the committee with various papers and records. Earlier indications had been given that the Stacy committee does not intend to begin at the beginning but rather to take up the problem where FEPC left off.

The other important development in FEPC quarters is the consideration being given to a successor to Samuel Zemurray president, United Fruit company who resigned a month ago because of ill health.

TWO BEING CONSIDERED

At least two names are known to be under consideration, and possibly four. Charles E. Horn, president, Twin Cities Ordnance Plant, St. Paul, Minn., is one and the other is Randall Irvin, vice president for industrial relations, Lockheed Vega Anircraft corporation, Burbank, Calif .

Both men have acceptable employment records regarding Negroes to which they may point. Horn, according to persons who know him, has done an "excellent job" of integrating Negroes into his plant, and in various categories. In this work he was aided by Cecil Newman, energetic publisher of St. Paul.

Last October Horn addressed a session of management and labor during the annual conference of the National Urban league in Chicago, and delivered what was considered "a far reaching and significant" philosophy on the matter of industrial opportunities for Negroes, not only as a wartime necessity but as a postwar imperative. 2-26-44

FAVORABLE RECORDS

Irvin is credited with having brought his company around to the employment of Negroes early in the defense preparations period. Lockheed-Vega was the first west coast aircraft plant to hire Negroes. Last year during the "Hold Your Job" campaign he issued a statement supporting the objectives of the sponsoring committee.

A report lacking confirmation is the one that Smith investigating committee may hear evidence in connection with the charges filed by the Sailors' union (AFL) against FEPC and the War Shipping administration charging that these two agencies are "forcing" Negroes and whites to sleep and eat together aboard ships of the merchant fleet.

GROUP TO PROBE RACIAL QUESTION

Age-Herald-Birmingham, Ala.
1-4-44

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3—(AP)—President Roosevelt named a three-man committee Monday to investigate a dispute involving the Fair Employment Practices Committee, railway labor organizations and 16 Southern carriers over the question of racial discrimination.

The members are: Judge Walter P. Stacy, Raleigh, N. C., chairman; Judge William H. Holl, of the U. S. District Court, Chicago, and Mayor Frank J. Lausche, of Cleveland.

The railroads involved had declined to abide by an order of the FEPC for greater employment of Negroes and the agency referred the dispute to the president. White House Secretary Stephen Early said the committee of three did not supercede the FEPC but merely would explore and investigate the situation for the chief executive.

Mr. Roosevelt in identical letters of appointment told the committee members he planned to ask the committee to meet in Washington "in the very near future" with representatives of carriers and labor organizations. 1-4-44

"Obviously," Mr. Roosevelt wrote, "in such a complicated structure as the transportation industry we cannot immediately attain perfect justice in terms of equal employment opportunities for all people.

"I am sure, however, that you agree with me that all Americans at this time should be anxious to see to it that no discriminations prevent the fullest use of our manpower in providing the strength essential to the major military offensives now planned. Indeed, hardly anything in America now seems so important as such a unity based upon justice as will make possible national effort."

The president said he was sure that "agreements shaped in good sense and good will can be reached."

By Gordon H. Cole
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—President Roosevelt has taken preliminary steps forward enforcing the anti-discrimination order of the FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) against 14 Southern railroad corporations and seven labor organizations.

A special committee of three has been named by the President to "investigate the impasse" between the FEPC and the roads and unions.

The Southern railroads have been robbed of their favorite objection to the FEPC order by the President's instructions to the special committee limiting their investigation to questions relating only to discrimination against Negroes for jobs of locomotive firemen, trainmen, switchmen, dining car and shop employes.

The corporations had charged in a letter to Congress that the FEPC was attempting to force the roads to hire Negroes as conductors and locomotive engineers—jobs traditionally reserved for whites in the South.

The members of the special committee are: 1-4-44

Judge Walter P. Stacy, Raleigh, N. C., chairman. Judge Stacy is a member of the North Carolina Supreme Court, and has served as chairman of a number of emergency boards appointed by the President under the Railway Labor Act to settle wage disputes between the roads and the unions.

Judge William H. Holly, of the Federal District Court, Chicago, Ill., formerly an attorney for the National Women's Trade Union League, the American Federation of Teachers, and the Public Ownership League.

Mayor Frank J. Lausche, of Cleveland, O., who has worked successfully as mayor to aid Negroes in obtaining war jobs in Cleveland.

The President sent the three committeemen identical letters saying that "hardly anything in America now seems so important as a unity based upon justice as will make possible the best use of all our human resources in this year of supreme national effort." 1-4-44

"Obviously," he continued, "in such a complicated structure as the transportation industry we cannot immediately attain perfect justice in terms of equal employment opportunities for all people. I am sure, however, that you agree with me that all Americans at this time should be anxious to see to it that no discriminations prevent the fullest use of our manpower in providing the strength essential to the major military offensive now planned."

Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, immediately welcomed the appointment of the special committee.

The executive said Jews, Negroes and all other minority groups must unite to work for elimination of discriminatory employment practices in industry. He added that "only through the coordinated strength of all minority group workers can discrimination be ended."

The Rev. Willard Johnson, assistant to the president of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, praised the Catholic Church for distributing in its parochial schools a collection of "Faith and Freedom Readers" and called them "pioneering landmarks in the building of understanding and cooperation." He remarked that a series titled "The Church and America's People," in use in most Protestant churches of the nation, constituted "a significant venture in the field of religious education, and we may expect great good to derive from it."

George Hunton, secretary of the Catholic Interracial Council and editor of The Catholic Approach, said: 2-17-44

"Every effort is being made by the council and its magazine, Interracial Review, to impress upon Catholics the social principles of the great papal encyclicals, with particular emphasis upon the economic and vocational problems of the Negro; again and again the encyclicals emphasize that all men are equal in the sight of God, that all have the same dignity and the same natural rights, and that the right to work—the right to be employed at a living wage—is basic and fundamental."

Dr. J. X. Cohen, chairman of the national commission on economic discrimination of the American Jewish Congress, asserted that the "Jewish people view happily the rise in the standards of fair employment practice toward Negro workers."

Jacob J. Rosenblum was chairman of the evening. Isaac Rosengarten, editor of The Jewish Forum, arranged the program.

RAMSPECK THINKS FEPC WRONG IN EQUALITY FIGHT

Daily World-Atlanta, Ga. 1-8-44

WASHINGTON,—(A N P)—The wisdom of the administration's effort through the FEPC to obtain equality for Negro workers was questioned this week by Rep. Robert Ramspeck (D., Ga.) while President Roosevelt urged steady progress in the fight to suppress racial discrimination and segregation.

Contending that race prejudice can not be wiped out over night, Ramspeck expressed a belief that the policy of the FEPC is wrong in pushing racial equality, stating that neither the government nor anyone else could tear down in a brief period of time the "prejudices and discriminations that have existed for centuries."

While President Roosevelt declared that he wanted steady progress in the fight against racial discrimination, he said that he did not think the "millennium" could be brought away. 1-8-44

FEPC's recent fight to curb and suppress racial discrimination in war plants has resulted in concerted efforts to abolish the federal agency and has aroused considerable comments from anti-Negro quarters.

CONGRESSMAN WANTS ALL TO VOTE BUT DODGES FEPC ISSUE

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.—(A N P)—Congressman John J. Jennings declared himself favorable to having everybody vote, soldiers and civilians, but evaded answer on the FEPC in an address before the Triads and Cansler Branch YMCA here this week. 1-8-44

He stated he felt a national law to grant the vote to soldiers in the coming election would be unconstitutional, but", added, "I will do all I can to give the soldier the vote to get rid of the poll tax. I am in favor of everybody voting and I have waged a consistent fight to have everybody's vote count as he casts his ballot."

Rep. Jenings stated on questioning that he was not familiar with the FEPC and intimated that progress could only be brought by a "change in men's hearts." In answer toa question of change in hearts of men like Rep. Rankin of Mississippi, he was of the opinion that "Rankin does not represent the average congressman."

ROOSEVELT ACTS IN RAIL RACE CASE

Times-New York, N.Y.

Names Justice Stacy, Mayor Lausche, Judge Holly for Discrimination Study

1-7-44

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3—President Roosevelt today appointed Chief Justice Walter P. Stacy of the Supreme Court of North Carolina as chairman of a three-man special committee to study the racial discrimination case in which an order of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices has been challenged by sixteen Southern railroads and three labor unions.

The other members are Mayor Frank J. Lausche of Cleveland, and Judge William H. Holly of the United States District Court in Chicago. 1-4-44

In establishing the committee the President acted on a certification received by him a week ago from Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, who stated that his committee had reached an impasse with the railroads involved and a group of labor unions in the matter of giving Negroes equal employment opportunities with white persons.

Sixteen Southern railroads had refused to carry out the FEPC order, issued Nov. 30, against discrimination, and the three unions had also challenged the authority of the Ross committee to issue such an order, it was stated.

Urges Full Manpower Use

In his letters of appointment the President told Justice Stacy, Mayor Lausche and Judge Holly that he did not expect in such a "complicated structure as the transportation industry to immediately attain perfect justice in terms of equal employment opportunities for all people." But he emphasized that no discriminations should prevent "the fullest use of our manpower in providing the strength essential to the major military offensives now planned."

"Indeed, hardly anything in America now seems so important as such a unity based upon justice as will make possible the best use of all our human resources in this year of supreme national effort," he added.

The President pointed out that the specific problems placed before him by the FEPC related only to "discriminations against certain classes of Negro railroad employes." These employes are locomotive firemen, trainmen, switchmen, dining car and shop employes.

Looks to Good-Will Agreements

"I believe it to be highly important in connection with this situation that a small committee of disinterested and distinguished citizens be appointed to discuss this matter as my representatives with the railroads and labor organizations," added Mr. Roosevelt.

"I am sure that agreements shaped in good sense and good will can be reached." 1-4-44

The President said he planned a meeting of this committee with representatives of carriers and labor organiaztions in Washington soon.

White House spokesmen made clear that this special committee was not intended to supplant the FEPC, a view shared by Mr. Ross.

"I welcome the appointment by the President of Judge Stacy, Mayor Lausche and Judge Holly as his personal representatives in the railroad case," said Chairman Ross. "It is my understanding that this group of three eminently qualified citizens will in no way take the place of the FEPC but will deal with the railroad question for the President. I have every hope that ways will be found by which discrimination may be removed." 1-4-44

Tonight Edgar G. Brown, director of the National Negro Council, in a telegram to President Roosevelt, said:

"We urge you to also call upon your special committee to assure decency and protection of the rights of the Negro traveling public once and for all by ordering a full report on this mortifying practice of subjecting 13,000,000 loyal and patriotic colored Americans to 'Jim Crow' on Southern carriers."

FEPC Seeks New And Larger Appropriation

Daily World-Atlanta, Ga. 3-12-44

By HARRY S. McALPIN

(Washington Bureau of Atlanta Daily World and NNPA)

A request for a legislative appropriation of $585,000 for the Fair Employment Practice Committee was sent to the Congress by the President Saturday. The amount requested is about $100,000 more than the FEPC used last year and about $70,000 less than it asked the Budget Bureau to approve.

The President sent the appropriations request to Congress for the FEPC appropriation. Some predict that Republican members of the appropriations committee will get Bureau. The request for a legislative appropriation means the amount approved by the Budget Bureau of the appropriations FEPC is putting its fate and its future in the hands of the Congress. It means also that it is extricating itself from the toil set by the amendment adopted by the Negro vote. the appropriations committee this week prohibiting the President transferring any funds from the independent offices appropriation to any agency created by executive order which is more than 12 months old. 3-12-44

Some members of the committee are urging an "economy argument," that the amount be cut to the bone or rejected in an attempt to take from the Roosevelt administration one of its best appeals for support.

To be effective the Republicans would have to seek another alliance with anti-administration and anti-Negro Democratic forces. These observers believe such a ruse would not be a sufficient blind to avoid responsibility to the Negro electorate in the coming elections, if tried.

The amendment is reported to have been aimed at killing FEPC. There is considerable speculation by political observers in Washington as to what will be the fate of

A PERMANENT FEPC

Age New York City 1-5-44

SPEAKING before the annual meeting of the Chicago Civil Liberties Committee recently, Malcolm Ross, chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, stated that America is at a point where it must decide whether or not it wishes to tackle directly the problem of minority employment. That, in very few words, sums up what Negroes have been fighting for ever since the FEPC was first created by the President.

"There comes times when men must face decisions," said Mr. Ross, "and I think this is one of them. The task of the committee is concise. If the committee had never existed, some other agency would have arisen in answer to that yeasty discontent which any man must feel whose twin impulses of earning his living and serving his country are frustrated. Equality of opportunity is the very substance of the American dream, now approaching maturity after 168 years of national life, and now under the critical eyes of hundreds of millions in Europe and in Asia who want to know whether to follow that dream or embrace another." 2-5-44

Concluding his speech, Mr. Ross said:

"The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice is a young agency, operating in a difficult field, and it needs public understanding. Our Latin American neighbors, the races of Asia, Africa and the victims of Nazism are watching to see what patterns for the post-war world we, here and now, are weaving. But is it, as some say, bad judgment to admit in the midst of a war that we have national imperfections? Hitler and Goebbels would consider it so. Americans who are jealous of their country's good name will, I believe, freely confess the flaw as a necessary step in welding a more perfect democracy into one nation, indivisible."

Much has already been written, both here and elsewhere, as to the necessity for a strong FEPC since there are still too many in this country who must be told what to do rather than do it voluntarily. Many will give lip service and subscribe to the theory that it is the right of every man to make a decent living and yet they are the first to deny him the opportunity to do so. The solution lies, then, in a permanent FEPC set up by law and with specific authority to do the job. The solution, we believe, lies in adoption by Congress of the Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill, H. R. 3986 for a permanent FEPC.

The impasse reached by defiance of the FEPC directive in the case of the Southern railway and labor unions and the challenge to the authority of the FEPC make it mandatory that the bill for a permanent FEPC be passed and become law. Moreover, FEPC has had distinct handicaps in clearly establishing its status and in obtaining the means necessary to discharge its duties and responsibilities. It has been hamstrung by government agencies itself and presently is being made the target of an investigation by a Congressional committee. 2-5-44

It was only after two years of earnest, yet oftimes futile work, that the FEPC began to function as it should. Now, when it has reached a point where it might become most effective, its authority is challenged. Referral of the defy to its authority in the railroad case to President Roosevelt, himself, has meant little more than the usual buck-passing usually engaged in when an office-holder is given a "hot potato".

The only answer, we repeat, lies in adopting by Congress of the Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill for a permanent FEPC. It is going to take all the energies and all the activities of every individual who believes in the right of all qualified men and women to work at their highest skill.

The New York Age wishes every success to the National Committee for a Permanent FEPC in its campaign to arouse and muster public sentiment behind the bill. Readers of The New York Age can help by writing, and having their friends write, to their Senators and Representatives urging adoption of this bill. 2-5-44

If ever there was a time when the United States must take decisive action, this is it. Let's have that Permanent FEPC!

The FEPC Must Be Permanent

CALL Kansas City, Missouri

When the war is over, the FEPC will be just as greatly needed—if not more so—as it is now. 2-4-44 In war-time, the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice is playing an important role in getting Negro workers jobs and upgrading in war plants and membership in unions. When peace returns, many of these industrial gains will be lost unless some agency like the FEPC is on the job to guard against discrimination based on race and color.

The Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-La Follette bill (H. R. 3986) introduced in the house of representatives to make the FEPC a permanent agency is most important to minority groups. CALL Kansas City, Missouri 2-4-44 Since the Negro and other minorities are the ones most essentially concerned about securing federal legislation to eliminate discrimination in industry, unions and the government, it is up to those groups to push the passage of the bill.

We cannot afford to be silent and indifferent about the bill now when the FEPC is an active agency because if we are, the day will come when there is no more FEPC. And if such a day should come, the very persons who are too busy now to write to their congressmen urging passage of H. R. 3986 would be the first to cry, "Why doesn't somebody do something to keep the FEPC going?"

The time to act is now, not tomorrow. The bill introduced by Representatives Scanlon, Dawson, Coffee and La Follette will give the FEPC a permanent place in our government setup. Write your congressmen, urge your friends to do likewise and encourage your white friends to push the bill by sending telegrams and letters and by having their organizations send resolutions to Congress. 2-4-44

The movement for a permanent FEPC is as important as anything before Negro citizens today. Let's get busy.

Toward a Permanent FEPC

New Masses N.Y. N.Y. 6-13-44

A BIG lift to the movement to prevent FEPC from being legislated out of business was given late last week by the President. Correspondent McAlpin, who now represents the Negro press at the White House press conference, commenting that there was considerable discussion of the FEPC in and out of Congress, asked the President: "There have been some charges too that the administration has not given the agency appropriation request its active support. Would you care to comment?" 6-13-44

The President did care to, definitely scotching defeatist, anti-administration rumors that the White House was letting FEPC down. He said in no uncertain tones that he would like to have some suggestions on how he could give it more active support.

This was the day after the House passed the Senate-approved blitz against twenty-six agencies created by executive order, which will go out of existence by Jan. 1, 1945, if Congress does not appropriate funds to the specific agencies. Most crucial is the FEPC, which has become to millions all over the country a symbol of the administration's recognition of the Negro's essential role in this people's war against the Axis. New Masses N.Y. N.Y. 6-13-44

The House has approved appropriations of $500,000 for the FEPC. Immediate pressure to commit Senators to vote for the measure and to restore $85,000 lopped off in the House is in order. The measure may be rushed out of committee and to a vote on the Senate floor this week. No time can be lost in urging its passage.

Hearings have begun before the House Labor Committee on HR 3986, Representative Scanlon's bill creating a permanent FEPC. Representative Marcantonio of New York, author of a similar bill, is also backing the Scanlon and Dawson bills. A petition is being circulated to force the Marcantonio measure, HR 1732, out of the House Judiciary Committee, where it is now bottled up. 6-13-44

Both parties recognize the importance of the Negro vote to some extent, but, as we go to press, no single Senator has agreed to lead the fight for the FEPC on the floor. Actually the Negro people hold the balance of power as potential voters in ten states. This is indicated by the following figures taken from the 1940 census, showing the total number of citizens over twenty-one years old in these states, and the total number of Negroes of voting age:

New York, 8,327,563; 393,056. New Jersey, 2,592,978; 143,661. Pennsylvania, 6,031,192; 299,998. Ohio, 4,404,423; 220,164. Indiana, 2,198,935; 80,451. Illinois, 5,119,854; 263,426. Michigan, 3,131,722; 138,116. Maryland, 1,153,510; 183,719. Kentucky, 1,630,772; 138,001. California, 4,445,677; 90,407. Totals are 1,950,999 Negroes in these states, compared to 39,046,626 whites and Negroes. 6-13-44

Since these figures were obtained by the Census Bureau, some 700,000 Negroes have migrated to industrial centers. A total of 1,500,000 Negroes now are engaged in war industries. With the Supreme Court decision invalidating the Texas white primary, new political stirrings are being felt throughout the South among Negroes, and with the CIO Political Action Committee making a strong appeal to Negro voters, they are likely in various states and communities to prove a decisive factor in November.

The FEPC New Republic N.Y. N.Y. June 12, 1944
The Fair Employment Practice Committee has escaped another ax gang—but there is another, even stronger, one, just around the corner. Despite the Southern bloc in the House of Representatives and their Republican collaborators, the House approved the recommendation of the Appropriations Committee that the FEPC be granted $500,000 with which to carry on its work during the next year. That is $85,000 less than the sum which the President requested for the agency. A long string of parliamentary tricks were attempted to kill the appropriation. Representative Vito Marcantonio deserves a major share of the credit for blocking the move to throw out the FEPC on a point of order. Now the Senate's Unholy Alliance of Southern Democrats and Republicans is preparing for the coming battle there. The FEPC will have harder sledding in the Senate. It needs more support from its friends now than ever before.

Ross Asks Plans Now to Avoid Such Post-War Troubles

WASHINGTON, June 9 (AP)—Recalling a wave of Southern lynchings and Northern race riots after the last war, which he attributed to racial contests for jobs, Malcolm Ross, chairman of the Committee of Fair Employment Practice, said today that steps should be taken now to prevent similar post-war disturbances.

Appearing before the House Labor Committee in support of a bill to establish a permanent fair employment practices commission, Mr. Ross declared: 6-10-44

"I do not say the stage is set for economic dislocations which may prepare the way for similar outbreaks after this war. I do say that we ought, out of experience, fear the worst and to anticipate it."

Mr. Ross estimated that in the post-war adjustment period more than a million Negro veterans plus Mexican-Americans would be returned to civilian life and that 1,500,000 Negro workers would be shifting to peacetime jobs.

Has Been Reached

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—The FEPC's "D-Day" appeared near this week and activity developed among both supporters and opponents of the agency. The appropriations bill which would provide funds to finance the Committee's operations for another year was slated to be reported out of committee to the House of Representatives this Thursday, it was learned over the week-end.

The Stacy Committee, appointed last January to seek settlement of the situation between FEPC and 14 Southern railroads, announced last Thursday that it had come to agreement with representatives of the railroads and unions involved and with officials of the FEPC on the procedure which would be used to attempt adjustment.

Inquiries by NNPA of the Smith Committee which has been probing the source of FEPC's powers brought out the information this week that the congressional body's report on FEPC has been completed, but its releast is being held up so that each member of the Smith Committee may have a chance to go over it.

On the campaign for a permenent FEPC, Rep. Mary Norton (D. of N. J.) asserted last week that in the hearings on proposed legislation which her Labor Committee opens next week, she plans to "bring out the real story of FEPC." Her statement that "It is time the people knew about FEPC. There has been so much misinformation about it, it is pitiful," brought sharp disagreement from the three Southerners on the Labor Committee, Democratic Reps. Ramspeck (Ga.) Fisher (Tex.), and Abernathy (Miss.) who denounced the agency as a "troublemaker" and "breeder" of national disunity." 5-25-44

The Stacy Committee announcement revealed plans for the considering of each railroad case individually. The roads and unions, according to Judge Stacy, the committee chairman, have agreed to get together, try to work out a means of complying with the FEPC directives "within the natural framework of their schedules fo wages and working conditions," and report back at an early date to the Stacy Committee.

Inquires the FEPC office brought the declaration that no comment would be made on the Stacy report. The class being handled by the Stacy Commitee, it was explained, were turned over to the President at which time the FEPC's official responsibility for them ended. The cooperation of FEPC with the Stacy Committee wherever it might be helpful in bringing about a satisfactory settlement, was, of course, assured.

Concerning the Smith Committee report on FEPC, AAron Ford, general counsel for the Smith Committee explained the delay in release by saying: "It is just a question of time when the Committee will be able to get to it. The Committee hasn't been able to go over it yet as some of the members have been out of town with the primaries and other business."

Asked what was the trend of the report, Ford declared he could not say because the Committee has the right to change it. It is generally believed, however, that the report will be unfavorable to FEPC and veteran observers in the capital feel there is a strong likelihood that its release is being timed to coincide with the report of the FEPC budget to the floor of the House so that it may be available for use against the appropriations bill.

Southern Democrats Are Bitterly Hostile To Unit Set Up By The President

WASHINGTON, May 26.—(AP)—A four-vote margin saved one of President Roosevelt's most controversial agencies, the Fair Employment Practices Committee (FEPC), tonight as the House passed the $1,033,358,867 war agencies appropriation bill.

Less than an hour before a roll-call vote of 247 to 58 sent to the Senate the omnibus measure financing almost a score of home front war agencies for the year starting July 1, the House tentatively had refused to include in the bill a $500,000 fund for FEPC and then reversed itself to restore the item.

FEPC was set up by the President with instructions to assist in ending job discrimination because of race, color, or creed.

The original action, in committee of the whole where record votes are not possible, came on adoption of an amendment to eliminate the fund, the teller vote being 141 to 103 with a large bloc of Republicans joining a solid southern delegation in opposition to the FEPC.

Marcantonio Rebuffed

In the House proper, however, the amendment was defeated by a 123 to 119 teller vote after Representative Marcantonio (Amn.-Lab.), New York, had failed to force a record vote. Marcantonio was one of the leaders in the fight to save the FEPC.

Aside from the FEPC fight, only two other amendments were offered and both were voted down. One, by Representative Dworshak (R), Idaho, would have cut $5,500,000 from the $58,625,367 OWI fund. The other, by Representative Keefe (R), Wisconsin, would have trimmed $660,700 from the War Production Board's allotment. 5-27-44

Final passage of the bill found many southerners opposed to the last to the FEPC item, voting against the entire measure.

Two days of debate on the omnibus bill had been devoted almost entirely to the FEPC. The fight against it, led by Representative Tarver (D), Georgia, was based on contentions of southerners that the agency, not specifically authorized by Congress, was more interested in advocating social racial equality than in preventing discrimination against negroes.

The bitter debate brought warnings of grave racial problems in the future and a remark from Representative Gibson (D), Georgia, that "there are only two things that are going to save this Nation: One is ballots and the other is bullets."

Busybodies Assailed

Tarver said there would be no racial problems in the South if it were not for the activities of "pettifogging and trouble-making busybodies in other sections of our country....."

"Among this type of trouble-makers," he added, "the FEPC is entitled to high rank."

The FEPC, he said, "is engaged ...in an effort to foist certain ideas of social, not economic, equality, which have long been entertained in communistic quarters in this country, upon the white people of the country who feel a certain pride in their race ....and who, while they are willing and anxious that the negro shall have his economic rights, are not willing, and never will submit, to his being forced upon them as a social equal and bedfellow."

Representative Hobbs (D), Alabama, charged that white workers were being ousted from their jobs in favor of negroes, while Representative Rankin (D), Mississippi, assailed FEPC as a "communistic bunch."

Only a few members rose to defend the FEPC and in the main they based their argument on the contention the President was authorized by Congress to create such an agency when it enacted war powers legislation.

Negro Member Heard

Representative Dawson (D), Illinois, only negro member of Congress, won applause from both sides of the aisle when he defended the agency as one interested solely in preventing discrimination. 5-27-44

"I too am an American," Dawson told the House. "Every rule that you may measure men, apply to me and see if I measure up."

He cited his World War record and pointed to a scar on his forehead inflicted by mustard gas burns. Negroes, he said, "were called to the colors" when the present war broke out "but they were not called to work," and the FEPC was set up to remedy that condition.

Claims of opponents that FEPC was dictatorial, he said, were without foundation because the agency "cannot make anybody do anything."

Hearings Open on Bill for Perament Agency Like FEPC

Post-Washington, D.C.

Some war plants have refused to hire Negroes although they urgently needed more workers, Representatives Scanlon (D., Pa.) and Dawson (D., Ill.) declared yesterday in urging adoption of legislation to set up a permanent Federal agency "with authority to prevent such discrimination." June 2, 1944

The two made the statement before the House Labor Committee, which is considering their bills to establish a seven-member commission patterned after the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

WASHINGTON — Chairman Mary T. Norton (D. N. J.), of the House Labor Committee asserted Tuesday that she would "bring out the real story" of the FEPC at the hearing opening May 29 on legislation to create a permanent FEPC.

"It is time the people knew about FEPC," she declared. "There has been so much misinformation about it, it is pitiful. The Southerners think the FEPC deals just with their racial problems but it does not. It concerns all minority groups through out the country."

Three of her committee members, however, disagreed with Representative Norton. Representative Fisher of Texas stated, "The hearing will only promote disunity." Representative Abernathy of Mississippi, declared, "The FEPC is the rottenest, viles, most communistic agency of the Federal Government. I believe it to be a waste of the committee's valuable time even to consider hearings on this subject." 5-17-44

These three Congressmen were the only ones to vote against holding the hearings which action was taken by the committee on a vote of 14 to 3.

Salute To The FEPC

THE STUFF it'll take to carry out on the battlefield those agreements at Cairo and Teheran won't come without full utilization of the nation's manpower resources. And it's going to take plenty of stuff.

That's what Stalin meant when he figuratively reached his hand across the ocean with that toast to American "production" helping to win the war. Without it, he said, the United Nations could not have won the war. He was talking about American labor, the plain ordinary men and women who make that time day after day to keep the planes and guns and tanks rolling off the production line.

That handshake came across for the more than one million Negroes in war industry, too. And if anybody's got a right to pat themselves on the back and crow over what they're doing to win the war, it's the guy who has to fight for the right to work for victory.

But there's a lot more fighting for that right ahead. Because the stuff we've already produced is a mere iota of what we've got to produce for the big push this coming January and thereafter. The boys in the know say it's coming next month sometime. They're talking about five million men closing in on the Nazis from the East, the West and the South.

What that will mean in terms of tanks and planes and guns will run into figures that seem impossible. But they've got to be turned out if we're going to win. And that's where President Roosevelt's Fair Employment Practices committee comes in.

Key Problem of Production

THE FEPC has done yeoman work, and don't let anybody tell you anything different. You can list what it's done in terms of progress that seems almost revolutionary.

It cracked the solid Jim Crow of the solid South and almost gave the boys in Alabama the secession blues. In point of fact, old man Wilkinson and Governor Dixon got so scared they started a brand new "White Supremacy" movement. And when the FEPC tackled the Southern Bell Telephone company, one of the country's biggest monopolies, the Dixie patrioteers got Comptroller General Warren to try extracting its teeth. It might have been too bad, too, if President Roosevelt had not slapped Warren's store teeth back in his throat with a notice that his executive order was mandatory.

Then the FEPC moved on the railroads, and it has already forced the railroad retirement board, which handles the recruitment of labor for the transportation industry, to instruct the United States Employment Service to accept applications from Negroes. Furthermore, it gave the railroad companies a fixed time to comply with its order.

Then it tackled a trade union bottleneck in the form of that minority of AFL unions which discriminate or practice Jim Crow, centering its fire on the Boilermakers' International. And it got the support of another leading Administration agency, the National Labor Relations board, which warned Boilermakers' officials that they stand in danger of losing exclusive bargaining rights unless they stop discrimination.

In all of these cases, the FEPC was attempting to solve the key problem of war production, the problem of manpower. For not until this nation's great manpower resources are fully and efficiently utilized will the apparatus of production work smoothly. This means, not until all available Negro labor is employed, and employed and upgraded in accordance with its skill and qualifications, can the required stream of tanks and planes and guns flow off the production line.

FEPC Needs Our Support 1-1-44

YOU AND I KNOW it was an uphill fight for the FEPC. Time after time some gang of conspirators tried to throttle it. And we're kidding ourselves if we think the committee has already slid over the home plate. At this point, as never before, the Jim Crow boys are out to get it.

The big railroad companies are not going to give in without a fight. That's in the cards. They have already announced their intention of contesting the decision.

The gang of Congressional cut-throats who've been systematically scuttling the President's anti-inflation program and otherwise helping Mister Adolph Hitler, will try to kill the FEPC, if for no other purpose than to head off the Negro's pro-Roosevelt vote in 1944. By stirring up trouble, killing the FEPC, and encouring discrimination, they calculate on getting a few Negro mis-leaders to blame Roosevelt for it all, so as to garner in the Negro vote for an anti-Roosevelt presidential candidate.

So there's tough going in the offing for the FEPC. And now's the time Negro-America should do a little hollering in behalf of the committee. We were quick to scream bloody murder when we thought the FEPC was stalling. But now that it's really standing up to Mister Wilkinson and Governor Dixon and the Ku Klux-spirited big industrialists and trade union officials, we aren't doing enough yelling.

It's time to salute the FEPC. More, it's time to back it up to the hilt and help it carry on the work that means more Negroes in war industry, more tanks and planes and guns for the boys

PRT Union And PTC Must Obey FEPC Order Or Hamper War Effort

Tribune—
Philadelphia, Pa. 1-1-44

AS THE NEW YEAR dawns over a bloody war-torn world, the prediction of victory for the United Nations over Germany during the year should inspire the American people to grander and more noble achievements.

General Dwight D. Eisenhower, the Commander-in-Chief of the Allied second front armies, announced to the world: "We will win the European war in 1944." Then he added:

"The only thing needed for us to win the European war in 1944 is for every man and woman, all the way from the front line to the remotest hamlet of our two countries, TO DO HIS OR HER FULL DUTY."

In the light of that heartening prediction, made by a great military authority, every man and every woman in every town and every city who love America will do their FULL DUTY.

No one does his full duty who permits his prejudices to prevent others from doing their full duty.

It is well and fitting to point out that General Eisenhower's prediction came on the same day that the FEPC ordered the Philadelphia Transportation Company and the P. R. T. Employees' Union to abolish all barriers to the employment and promotion of Negroes by the PTC.

The P. R. T. Employees' Union's duty is to obey the mandate from its Government. Especially is this true since the announced objective of the FEPC is to secure the full use of all available manpower for the successful prosecution of the war effort.

The full duty of the PTC necessitates the immediate employment of colored workers in compliance with the FEPC order. Not to do so will cause, perhaps, many soldiers to lose their lives and delay victory.

One's full duty in the present global struggle for freedom demands the giving up of special privileges by those who employ them while denying basic human rights to others. 1-1-44

The cold fact is that it is more important than ever before to destroy the false concept of a master race. The refusal to permit colored men and women to operate buses and trolley cars is predicated on the belief that white people are the master race.

Those who control the employment policies of PTC must decide whether they prefer to hold tight to their prejudices or do their full duty so that our nation will certainly defeat Germany in 1944.

The Railroads, The President And The Negro

Courier—Pittsburgh, Pa.
1-8-44

The seizure and operation of the nation's railroads by the U. S. Army by order of President Roosevelt brings sharply to a head the controversy between the Fair Employment Practices Committee, the rail unions and the railroad companies.

The FEPC ordered the railroads and the railroad unions to end discriminatory practices against Negro workers, only to be met with evasion, buck-passing and downright refusal, especially by the Southeastern railroads and the Big Four Brotherhoods.

The FEPC then certified the whole question to President Roosevelt for personal negotiations between him and the disputants.

In the meantime the railroads were taken over to avert threatened stoppage of work by the unions seeking pay increases.

The United States Government thus displaces the railroad companies and the rail labor unions as the supreme authority, and assumes the responsibility of settling the whole question of discrimination against Negroes.

Since the Fair Employment Practices Committee is also a government agency, it would appear that the whole controversy over color discrimination can now be easily solved. 1-8-44

The President has only to order the U. S. Army railroad administration to obey the dictate of the FEPC to end color discrimination against Negro workers and presumably it will be ended, as in all government agencies.

What will be done remains to be seen, but there are some who attach ominous significance to the fact that Representative Howard W. Smith of Virginia, head of a House committee investigating activities of executive agencies to see whether they are exceeding their authority, has ordered the seizure of the records of the FEPC in the case against the railroads and rail unions.

What is the meaning of this latest move?

Is the stage being set for another run-around?

Or does it indicate much-needed and long-discussed play for Negro railroad workers?

The next few days or weeks should tell the story.

Drive for Permanent FEPC Unites Both Races; Meeting Nets $295

Tribune - Washington, D.C.
1-29-44

The National Council for a permanent FEPC, headed by A. Phillip Randolph and the Rev. Allan Knight Chalmers, co-chairmen, brought before Washingtonians an array of nationally-known leaders in a public meeting at New Bethel Baptist Church, Ninth and S Streets, Northwest, Thursday, which launched a mammoth nation-wide membership drive.

Each speaker made a strong appeal for unified action in this fight for a Permanent FEPC. The church was filled and evidently the speakers' plea for everyone to do his share made some headway as a total of $295.95 was raised in support of the effort.

Thurman L. Dodson, master of ceremonies, began the evening of oratorical eloquence by stating that "America today stands on trial." "The purpose of this meeting and the purpose for a permanent FEPC is to combat the power of the twenty-four Southern Railroads specifically, and other industries which have defied the ruling of the President and the U.S. Constitution.

The objectives of the National Council are:

To promote in every possible way the establishment of equal opportunity for employment, to obtain hiring with due regard to the already existing skills and experience of the applicant, equality of wages for the same work, and the full right of upgrading employees within industries regardless of race, creed or orgin;

To bring about the establishment of a permanent Federal Employment Practice Committee, to carry on an educational campaign, nationally and locally, to further the Council's objectives. 1-29-44

Monsignor Ryan Speaks

Monsignor John A. Ryan, formerly chairman of the FEPC, stressed the need for legislation so that the rights of the Negro as well as minority groups in general may not be hindered by unfair means, so that they may not be hindered from getting jobs of their choice the same as anybody else.

"Discrimination," he continued, "is a violation to the moral right of mankind."

Monsignor Ryan opined that discrimination by the local street car and bus company is unfair stated, "I will not be bought but will fight to the end so that the courts can decide the status of the Negro regarding interstate traveling on railroads." 1-29-44

Speaking in behalf of the Council of Negro Churches, the eminent churchman said, "the church is out to fight discrimination and segregation in any form. The church is building a movement for unified action among Negroes for this purpose and the church is girded for action in this fight for a permanent FEPC.

Bill Sponsored

Representative Thomas D. Scanlon of Pennsylvania, who introduced HR 3986 on January 14, asking for a Permanent FEPC, re-emphasized his determination for continuing this committee.

Senator Langer

Senator William E. Langer of and that the place for women, who in many cases have been used to circumvent the hiring of Negro men operators, is not on streetcar platforms.

Pleads for Women

Mrs. Thomasina Johnson of the AKA Sorority Legislative Council, made a strong plea for the rights of women in employment. Mrs. Johnson related that women are much in favor of a permanent FEPC so that the idea in this country that Negro women are only fit as domestics may be erased in peace time as well as in war time.

Mrs. Allan Knight Chalmers, speaking in behalf of her husband who could not attend, reemphasized the contentions set forth by Mrs. Johnson. She revealed that through the YWCA, with which she works in New York, and other local groups, Negro salespeople have been placed in two of the largest stores in New York and the country. 1-29-44

War's Stumbling Block

Perhaps the most stimulating speech of the evening was made by Sidney Hollander of Baltimore. Mr. Hollander was loud in his denunciation of discrimination and called it "the stumbling block of the War Effort." The speaker stated that this country is beset with Quislings who want to set race against race, faith against faith, and religion against religion.

The job of erasing racial discrimination from this country has left for the Negro to do by himself far too long and it's time that the rest of us take a hand in helping to fight this battle, the Marylander stated.

Dr. Jernagin

Rev. W. H. Jernagin related his recent discriminatory experience and the present case which he has against the railroad and South Dakota, who has been foremost in the fight for minority groups, revealed that three Republicans and three Democrats have already introduced similar bills to that of Representative Scanlon in the Senate. 1-29-44

Randolph Concludes

A. Phillip Randolph concluded the speaking and impressed upon the audience the fact that "the Negro must be transformed from the status of a second class citizen to that of a first class citizen." He asserted that this meeting in the nation's capital was the actual launching of a nation-wide membership drive for a Permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee.

Boilermakers' Head Sees FEPC Chief Today, Jimcrow Is Issue

Daily Worker - New York, N.Y.
5-22-44

WASHINGTON, May 21.—A possibility that the AFL International Brotherhood of Boilermakers may modify or abandon its long-time jimcrow policy loomed today as Malcolm Ross, chairman of the Fair Employment Practice Committee, announced a conference tomorrow with Charles A. McGowan, union president.

Ross said the meeting with McGowan was aimed at reaching agreement on adjustment of complaints made by Negro boilermakers on the West Coast. 5-22-44

NAVY YARD VICTORY

The complaints, which come from thousands of workers in Portland, Ore., Los Angeles, San Francisco and other West Coast areas, demand elimination of so-called "auxiliary" lodges in which Negroes are segregated in the Boilermakers. They pay dues in the auxiliaries but are denied ordinary union rights. FEPC hearings on the complaints were held in Portland Nov. 15 and 16 and in Los Angeles Nov. 19 and 20 and in December the committee directed the union and the shipbuilding companies involved to eliminate discrimination.

Meanwhile in New York, FEPC officials announced that racial designations will be removed from the badges of workers in the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

For several years, workers had been compelled to wear badges containing among other things, the letter "W" for white or "C" for colored, a regulation long protested as discriminatory.

First FEPC efforts to win a change were met with Yard officials' insistence that designations had been ordered "for security reasons" by Washington but investigation showed that other Navy Yards didn't use them and after a series of conferences Assistant Secretary of the Navy Ralph A. Bard informed Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, that badges would be changed where workers desired it. 5-22-44

Progress has been made on adjustment of more than 50 complaints of discriminatory practice at the yard in the past two months, Edward Lawson, FEPC regional director, disclosed.

As a result, several Negro workers who claimed promotion had been denied because of race, were advanced in their ratings.

Herald Tribune Sheds Tears, But Snaps Jaws at the FEPC

Daily Worker, New York, N.Y. June 1, 1944

By EUGENE GORDON

The Fair Employment Practice Committee, barely escaping alive last week when it asked the House for $500,000 to do a fourth year of splendid work, was condemned yesterday by the Herald Tribune as "bureaucratic."

June 1, 1944

Oh, no, the H. T. doesn't oppose employment of Jewish and Negro workers in war industries. It is "deeply concerned about discrimination" and believes "steps to correct unfair employment practices were, and still are, needed." The H. T. is simply against "a bureau whose existence depends solely on vague executive powers." FEPC's existence should depend, instead, on congress (whose hands are still wet from the murder of the anti-polltax bill). Daily Worker, N.Y.

The Dewey mouthpiece opposed H. R. 7 on one pretext. It opposes appropriations for the FEPC on another pretext. It is for fair voting and fair employment only in the abstract, never in the specific.

This sly but none-too-clever trick is intended to injure the administration's good works in the eyes of the people. But the people, by demanding that their senators vote for the $500,000 appropriation, will show the Herald Tribune and the Republican Party who the fools really are.

Hearings On FEPC Bills Open

Daily Worker, New York, N.Y. 6-2-44

Daily Worker Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 1.—The fight to save the President's committee on Fair Employment Practices approached a climax on Capitol Hill today.

The House Labor Committee opened hearings on the Scanlon-LaFollette-Dawson bills to give FEPC statutory basis, with power to crack down on employers who discriminate against Negroes and other minority groups.

Malcolm Ross, chairman of FEPC, prepared to appear Monday before the Deficiency Subcommittee of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee on the $500,000 appropriation for the agency which the House approved last week.

This 15-man subcommittee is headed by Senator Kenneth McKellar of Tennessee and is packed with southern senators, including John Overton of Louisiana, Richard Russell of Georgia and John Bankhead of Alabama.

A number of Republicans on the subcommittee, including Senators Senators Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota and Rufus Holman of Oregon, are understood to be equally unsympathetic to FEPC.

Sponsors of the bills to create a permanent FEPC point out the agency will have greater authority if set up in basic law rather than simply by executive authority.

W. A. Hughes, Director of Industrial Personnel in the Army Service forces, read at the labor committee hearing a letter from Secretary of War Stimson which stated: "The War Department is in accord with the general purpose of prohibiting discriminatory practises." 6-2-44

Hughes, however urged that there be stricken from the bill a provision requiring that violators of the anti-discrimination ban be barred from receiving government contracts for three years.

Other penalties in the bill would punish violations by a year in jail a $5,000 fine or both.

Rep. Vito Marcantonio of New York is sponsor of a similar bill which was referred to the House Judiciary Committee. Marcantonio is circulating a discharge petition to bring the bill to the floor.

Senate Riddles FEPC Bill; Race Baiting Marks Debate

Daily Worker, New York, N.Y. 6-21-44

By ADAM LAPIN

WASHINGTON, June 20.—In a session marked only by thinly disguised appeals to lynch Negroes, the Senate today rejected the Russell amendment to kill a $500,000 appropriation for the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee by a vote of 39 to 21. But the polltax senators, who held forth all day in anti-Negro and anti-Semitic tirades which reached a new low for congressional debate, did succeed in passing three amendments designed to weaken FEPC.

The most important of these, approved by a voice vote, bars FEPC from taking any action which would have the effect of repealing or modifying existing congressional enactments.

This is a booby trap enactment which has the purpose of blocking action by the President requiring government agencies to insist that contractors write anti-discrimination clauses into their contracts.

TIES UP FEPC

In an amendment passed 27 to 25, the Senate enjoined FEPC from undertaking any action or investigation which might lead to presidential seizure of plants.

While no plants have been taken over in connection with FEPC directives, the effect of this amendment is to tie the hands of FEPC.

Still another amendment gives employers charged with discrimination whose cases have been referred to the White House the opportunity to make appeals to the President.

All three of these amendments, which were offered by Senator Richard Russell of Georgia, were able to win approval because many Republicans who had voted against killing FEPC subsequently voted for amendments which have the same effect by indirection.

Defeated by a 31 to 21 vote was another Russell amendment to deprive FEPC of authority to modify discriminatory contracts between unions and employers.

Friends of FEPC now expect to urge conferees on the War Agencies Appropriations Bill to knock out the restrictive amendments which were adopted. 6-21-44

Voting for the major Russell amendment were 14 Democrats, mostly polltax senators and seven Republicans. Against the Russell amendment were 25 Democrats and 16 Republicans.

PEPPER BACKS BILL

Senator Claude Pepper of Florida was the only southern senator to support FEPC. Senator Lister Hill of Alabama, administration whip, was active in fighting FEPC.

Senator Theodore Bilbo of Mississippi in effect advised white citizens of Washington in sections where Negroes are said to be buying homes to use violence.

"There is no way for those people to get any relief that I know of except to take the law into their own hands and give the matter their personal attention," he said.

In an anti-Semitic passage of his speech, he said that Jews virtually control the government and that they have "received more consideration at the hands of the present Administration than any other nationality in the United States.

DEPORTATION SCHEME

Bilbo advocated his pet scheme for deporting all Negroes to West Africa, and suggested that Mrs. Roosevelt be made "queen of that greater Liberia."

Senator James E. Eastland of Mississippi said that we have "a government of minority groups who control this country" and discriminate against any "white person, a member of the Caucasian race."

Eastland said that white girls in the government service are "forced to work and take dictation from a group of burly headed n - - - - s and n - - - - r supervisors in the departments."

The vicious anti-Semitic and anti-Negro speeches were not challenged in a single speech from the floor.

Southerners' Plea

6-21-44

SEN. PEPPER VOTES WITH REPUBLICANS

Joint Committee Clears Way For Extending Price Control

WASHINGTON, June 20—(AP)—Disregarding embittered Southern assertions that the United States is being pushed into Communism or National Socialism, the Senate declined on a 39 to 21 roll call Tuesday to kill the president's fair employment practices committee.

The vote was on a $500,000 appropriation for the FEPC in a $1,030,000,000 war agencies supply bill.

Thirteen Southern senators who oposed the fund were supported by seven Republicans and one Western Democrat, Johnson of Colorado, but 16 Republicans joined with 23 Democrats to override their objections. Sen. Pepper of Florida was the only Democrat from the Deep South who voted with the majority.

The FEPC was set by President Roosevelt's executive order and was instructed to combat racial and religious discrimination in industry.

The Southerners salvaged only a few minor concessions—war contractors whose contracts were threatened with cancellation because of alleged discrimination would have the right to appeal to the president, and a prohibition was directed against government seizure of any plant for its refusal to conform to rules set up by FEPC. 6-21-44

Southerner after Southerner took the floor to castigate the agency as tending to stir up trouble rather than to alleviate friction between the races. White-haired Sen. George (D., Ga.), faced flushed, thundered that by approving the FEPC fund, the nation would be taking "a long step toward converting our economic system into a Communistic or National Socialistic system."

George Warns Senators

Turning toward the Republican side of the chamber, George declared "this may get you votes in 1944, but it won't in 1946, or 1948, or thereafter." The final aim of the persons backing FEPC, he declared, is taking away the control of private property from the owners.

Before a crowded gallery, the debate was unrestrained.

Sen. McClellan (D., Ark.) declared:

"When white and Negro women are compelled to sit side by side at their work, use the same toilet facilities, eat at the same table, it is an encroachment on the constitutional rights of both races, if either wants to be segreated from the other!"

At that point Sen. Eastland (D., Miss.) arose to shout:

"Isn't it even worse for decent white girls to have to take dictation from a lot of burr-headed Niggers in the departments?"

The debate even brought a suggestion that Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt become "queen of that Greater Liberia." 6-21-44

Bilbo Advocates Colony

Sen. Bilbo (D., Miss.), for years an advocate of resettling American Negroes in West Africa, said two and a half million Negroes had seconded his idea and added "I do not see why Mrs. Roosevelt or anyone else should object to it."

In fact, Bilbo said, if his resettlement plan ever succeeded, "I might entertain the proposition of making her queen of that Greater Liberia."

The main argument of the Southerners was that FEPC was aiming for social equality rather than against economic discrimination.

Supporting the FEPC, Sen. Lucas (D., Ill.) said:

"Job discrimination is indefensible when manpower bottlenecks are impeding the war effort."

With the White House intervening to break a deadlock, Senate and House conferees reached a compromise late Tuesday on the Bankhead amendment to adjust cotton textile ceilings in the price control extension bill.

The administration agreed to a requirement that ceilings on "major" textile items be revised to reflect a parity price for raw cotton. Eliminated from the original Bankhead proposal was a requirement that the ceilings guarantee manufacturing costs plus a profit to millers. 6-21-44

Byrnes Takes Lead

James F. Byrnes, war mobilization director, was said by members of the conference committee to have taken the lead in the move that brought about the compromise. The conference committee bill representing a merger of conflicting measures passed by Senate and House, is scheduled to go to the Senate first and then the House for concurrence Wednesday.

Henry M. Hart, associate general counsel for the OPA, said the effect of the compromise cotton amendment might be to raise ceilings on some textile items but that "we don't think the increases will be serious." He said any possible inflationary effect had been removed.

Rep. Wolcott (R., Mich.) said the parity price guarantee likely would mean increases in textiles that go into low-priced clothing.

The White House intervention obviously was aimed to preventing a congressional stalemate over the extension bill. President Roosevelt had called the original Bankhead proposal inflationary and administration congressmen had predicted a veto if it appeared in the bill as finally passed.

Porters' Chief Cites Strong Points, Sees Brighter Prospect

MARCANTONIO BILL HAS SAME INTENT

But Latter Measure Would Not Punish Lily-White Unions

NEW YORK — Congressman William L. Dawson's bill for a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission is not only the stronger of two such measures now before Congress, but has better prospects for passage, according to A. Philip Randolph, co-chairman of the National Council for a permanent FEPC.

Mr. Randolph, who is president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, along with other members of the council, has just completed a comparative study of the two bills.

Congressman Dawson (Dem., Ill.) is co-sponsor of the preferred measure with Reps. Thomas E. Scanlon (Dem., Pa.) and Charles M. LaFollette (Rep., Ind.), while the other was introduced by Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N.Y.).

Party Strength Needed

Relative power of the respective backers' party affiliations was cited as a basis for the contention that the former has brighter prospects in the face of certain opposition from the Southern bloc in Congress and such biased unions as the Brotherhood of Locomotive Enginemen and Firemen and the International Association of Machinists.

Emphasizing the Dawson Bill's advantages in "structure, policy, and scope," Mr. Randolph made the following comparisons:

Scope Broader

"The Dawson Bill declares the policy of the United States to eliminate discrimination in all employment relations subject to the control of the government, while No. 1732 (the Marcantonio Bill) limits the policy of employers who contract with the government.

"Freedom from discrimination is declared by the Dawson Bill to be a privilege and immunity of U.S. citizens which shall not be abridged by the United States, a State or instrumentality thereof. This is not in No. 1732.

"No. 1732 does not include labor unions, while the Dawson Bill does. The latter also makes it an

Southern Senators Threaten Filibuster to Kill FEPC

PM-New York, N.Y.

Polltaxers Ruffled by Committee's Action OKing Agency Appropriations

6-13-44

By Nathan Robertson

PM Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Southern Senators were threatening today to filibuster the vital $1,000,000,000 war agencies appropriation bill in an effort to kill the FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee).

Arrangements for the filibuster were quickly organized by the poll tax Senators after their attempt to kill the FEPC by refusing to appropriate any money for it had been defeated 14-6 yesterday in the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Senate leaders were trying desperately to avert the filibuster fearful of the feeling that would be stirred up by such a legislative maneuver against the FEPC in the midst of war. They also were worried that a filibuster at this time would throw the legislative program into chaos.

Backstage efforts to prevent the filibuster failed yesterday. The Southerners were planning to meet today to complete their arrangements and work out their strategy.

Object of Filibuster

The object of the filibuster is to block a $500,000 appropriation to finance FEPC's activities during the coming year. This fund, already approved in the House by a narrow margin, was the subject of a bitter struggle in the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The Southerners succeeded in subcommittee in eliminating it. Yesterday the full committee restored the appropriation, and the Southerners, realizing they have no chance of beating it in an open vote in the Senate, decided to filibuster. 6-13-44

A filibuster against the war agencies bill would block action on appropriations for such vital agencies as the WPB (War Production Board); OWI (Office of War Information); PAW (Petroleum Administration for War); Office of Strategic Services; National War Labor Board; Office of Defense Transportation, and many other agencies directing the war program.

Amendment Voted

While they failed to block the FEPC appropriation in the Committee yesterday, the Southerners managed to get in an amendment cutting the salary of Chairman Malcolm Ross from $10,000 a year to $8000.

They also came close to winning on an unprecedented proposal to limit the number of employes the FEPC could hire from minority groups. This proposal, by Sen. Richard Russell (D., Ga.), was beaten on a tie vote 7-7. It is expected to be revived in the Senate.

Russell's amendment would prohibit the FEPC from using more than 25 per cent of its appropriation to pay the salaries of persons "who are members of any race or minority group composing less than 15 per cent of the total population of the United States," according to the 1940 census.

Russell indicated the amendment was aimed at Negroes. He said the hearings showed the FEPC staff included 68 Negroes and 48 whites. But critics of the amendment pointed out that under its wording, it would apply also to Jews, and many other minority groups perhaps including Catholics. Many religious minorities would be included.

90 Per Cent in North

The Southerners fought the FEPC in Committee, despite testimony by Chairman Ross that the agency is devoting most of its time to employment conditions in the North.

The 14 Senators who voted to restore the FEPC appropriation were: 6-13-44

¶ Democrats: Carl Hayden of Arizona; Elmer Thomas of Oklahoma; Millard Tydings of Maryland; Pat McCarran, Nevada; Joseph C. O'Mahoney of Wyoming; Theodore Green, Rhode Island; Francis Maloney, Connecticut; Dennis Chavez, New Mexico; and James M. Mead, New York.

¶ Republicans: Chan Gurney, South Dakota; C. Wayland Brooks, Illinois; Clyde M. Reed, Kansas; Harold Burton, Ohio; and Joseph Ball, Minnesota.

Five Southerners and lame duck Republican Rufus C. Holman of Oregon voted against the appropriation. The Southerners were: Chairman Kenneth McKellar of Tennessee; Russell; John H. Overton of Louisiana; John Bankhead of Alabama, and Burnet Maybank of South Carolina.

Other Agencies Cut

Other war agencies didn't fare as well as the FEPC in the Committee. A cut of $2,000,000 was made in the fund for the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs; $1,000,000 was cut from the money appropriated by the House for the Office of Defense Transportation.

The National War Labor Board, which urged the Committee to increase the House appropriation by $596,000 was, instead, cut another $562,700.

Meanwhile, on another bill, the Appropriations Committee voted to repair the damage done by the House to the appropriations for UNRRA (United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration).

The House eliminated authorization for $350,000,000 of the $800,000,000 which UNRRA officials said was the minimum on which the international agency could operate. The Senate Committee voted to approve an amendment restoring the money. Under the rules, however, if any Senator objects it will take a two-thirds vote to approve the additional authorization.

THE BATTLE OF WASHINGTON, II

Southern Bloc Maps Strategy Against FEPC

PM-New York, N.Y.

May Drop Plan To Filibuster Because of Backfire Danger

6-14-44

PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 14.—Southern Senators were using the threat of a filibuster today to try to work out some kind of a deal hamstringing the FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee).

It was difficult to tell just what the Southerners were up to. They were working behind the scenes, conferring among themselves on strategy, but refusing to talk.

Faced with threats of a filibuster, the Senate recessed over today, hoping that by tomorrow something could be worked out. Meanwhile, the Southerners were planning a meeting today on strategy.

Doesn't Make Sense

Despite the bluster of the Southerners, a filibuster on the bill appropriating money for the war agencies doesn't make much sense and apparently they are beginning to realize it. Nothing would be more likely to arouse a public backfire than a filibuster at this time, in the midst of the invasion, against vital appropriations for the agencies directing the war.

The item the Southerners oppose is a $500,000 appropriation to finance the FEPC during the next fiscal year. In order to block that, the Southerners would have to block $1,000,000,000 of appropriations for the major war agencies such as WPB (War Production Board). 6-14-44

Meanwhile, Sen. Richard Russell (D., Ga.) offered in the Senate his amendment which was beaten in the Appropriations Committee to limit the amount of the FEPC appropriation that could be used for hiring members of minority groups. No more than 25 per cent of the appropriations could be used for employing persons "who are members of any race or minority group comprising less than 15 per cent of the total population of the United States" in the 1940 census.

House Hearings

As the Appropriation Bill was stalled in the Senate, a House committee continued hearings on a permanent FEPC. Yesterday's witnesses included Dr. Stephen S. Wise, president of the American Jewish Congress, and Walter White, secretary of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Wise told the House Labor Committee the problems of postwar would be "grave enough" without allowing discrimination to continue employment of workers. Rep. A. L. Miller (R., Neb.), the man who killed off Gen. Douglas MacArthur's presidential boom by too much publicity, asked Dr. Wise if a permanent FEPC would not bring about a situation in America like in Germany, where, he said, Jewish domination of industry stimulated the rise of Hitler.

Dr. Wise replied that Hitler's rise was due to his promise to "so-called Christians" of the loot of confiscated Jewish property.

SOUTHERN ATTACKS SHARP

Three Curbing Amendments Passed—Conference With House to Get Measure

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 20—The Senate, afte ar third day for explosive debate over the Fair Employment Practice Committee, which President Roosevelt established by executive order, passed the $1,03[illegible],000 War Agencies Appropriation Bill this evening, allowing $500,000 for continuing that agency but setting up restrictions which FEPC spokesmen said might materially limit its functions and authority.

The measure went to conference for adjustment of differences with the House.

In the fact of bitter and plain-talking denunciation of the FEPC and opposition to its continuance by Southern members, the Senate voted 39 to 21 to let it have the $500,000 in operating funds for the fiscal year, thus following the example of the House and giving first formal recognition to the controversial agency.

President Roosevelt asked for the money after the Senate, before passing the Independent Offices Appropriation Bill several weeks ago, stipulated that no agency formed by executive order which had been operating a year without going to Congress for its funds could exist after Jan. 1.

Russell Move Is Defeated

The FEPC got its directly appropriated operating funds (formerly supplied from the President's emergency fund) through the defeat by a vote of 39 to 21 of an amendment offered by Senator Richard B. Russell of Georgia, which would have stricken the item from the bill which the Approriations Committee reported to the Senate. 6-21-44

With this vote, Senator Russell asserted, the Senate had attempted to "give legality" to the FEPC. He proposed that Congress prescribe limitations for its operations against employment discrimination

York appealed to his colleagues to reserve further decisions regarding FEPC operations for consideration of pending legislation which would give that agency a statutory standing.

Mr. Russell proposed that FEPC decisions be not permitted to modify the terms of existing contracts between employers and labor unions, a provision which drew the fire of Senators who contended that many unions violate supply and war contracts

Following up charges that the FEPC "discriminates against white people in its own hiring" and that more than two-thirds of Russell proposed that not more than 25 per cent of the part of the appropriation for compensation for personal services be used to pay "members of any race" comprising less than 15 per cent of the country's population. This was defeated, 36 to 15.

Senator Maybank offered an amendment which would prevent the FEPC from allowing volunteers, such as have been aiding in its program, to do anything more for the committee, and it was voted down, viva voce, after a brief debate. 6-21-44

Wage Differential Plea Lost

A 34 to 17 vote killed his proposal that the FEPC be assigned to investigate the wage differentials in government-operated war plants in the North and South.

Debate began with Senator Russell expressing resentment over material inserted in the Congressional Record yesterday by Senator Mead which, the Georgian contended, challenged the sincerity of his constitutional arguments against the powers given to the FEPC by the President's Executive roder. Mr. Mead promptly offered to strike out the offending parts of this insertion from the permanent record, explaining that he had not read it with sufficient care to note the objectionable matter.

FEPC Life Extended Despite Polltax Bigots

Senate Gallery Shocked by Southerners' Violent Racial Tirade

By NATHAN ROBERTSON
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON June 21.—The FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) was assured today of another year of life, but its effectiveness was threatened by amendments added yesterday in the Senate after one of the worst exhibitions of racial and religious intolerance ever seen in Congress.

Friends of FEPC said the restrictions sponsored by the Southerners were destroying the agency.

One of the amendments—offered by Sen. Richard Russell (D., Ga.), leader of the fight against the FEPC—was frankly designed to prevent inclusion of anti-discrimination clauses in war contracts. It was adopted with a record vote.

Gallery Shocked

The showdown on the agency designed to help racial and religious minorities get a fair break in employment came after Sens. Theodore Bilbo and George O. Eastland, Mississippi Democrats, reached a new low in the display of intolerance.

While many in the galleries listened in shocked silence, Bilbo said the FEPC would force Senators' to hire "mulatto" secretaries; that they would never be able to get the "odiferous" smell out of their offices; and that the Negroes should be resettled in Africa with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as their "queen."

Roaming far afield, Bilbo protested that Negroes were buying homes in white sections in Washington, and actually suggested that the white people should "take the law in their own hands" to stop it. He even included some anti-Semitic remarks about the number and influence of Jews in Government departments. 6-21-44

Eastland contributed to the intellectual level of the debate by asserting:

"I have no prejudice in my heart, but the white race is a superior race and the Negro race an inferior race, and the races must be kept separate by law."

No Protest

There was no protest from other Senators as the Southerners ranted against the minorities that make up America. Bilbo started the day off by a rambling speech in which he gave his prejudices on various subjects an airing. Charging that the move for the FEPC was political, he said he was not interested in the Negro vote, adding:

"The Negro doesn't vote in my state and he's not going to. Pass all the anti-poll tax bills you want to, he's not going to vote. If he wants to vote, let him vote in New York."

Claiming that the FEPC was designed to bring racial equality, Bilbo said, "In the heart of every Negro is the dream of social equality and intermarriage between the whites and the blacks." He added that the Negro "gets an economic square deal—as much as could be expected."

Forecasts Trouble

Citing recent racial disturbances, Bilbo blamed them on the FEPC and forecast that "here in Washington, we are headed for trouble." He condemned what he said was a drive by real estate people to put Negroes into white residential aras.

Bilbo said that as chairman of the Senate District Committee he was frequently asked to do something about Negroes moving into white areas, but couldn't. He pointed out, reluctantly, that there was no law to stop it, but added "of course, if this was down South I would know how to handle it." It was then that the Senator virtually invited mob rule in the District, saying: 6-21-44

"There is no way for these people (the white people) to get relief except to take the law into their own hands and give it their personal attention."

He added that he was sure the people of Washington were in favor of segregation and forecast that there was "going to be an end to these conditions in Washington."

Attacks Rabbi Wise

Bilbo then repeated the charge of other Senators that the FEPC was discriminating against the whites by employing so many Negroes, but said it did not employ a single Jew and was "the only organization in Washington that hasn't any Jews."

Noting that Rabbi Stephen S. Wise has testified recently for a permanent FEPC, Bilbo said he was "the last man who ought to complain" about discrimination. He added:

"Mr. Morgenthau operates the financial part of the Government. A very splendid Jew, Barney Baruch, is shaping all of the policies of the Administration, particularly post-war planning. Go down in the departments and there is no lack of Jews. This nationality has received more consideration under the New Deal than any nationality."

Sen. Walter George (D., Ga.) complained that the FEPC was creating racial trouble. Asserting recent legislation was increasing racial and class prejudices, George said "call a halt or we will register a rapid downfall of free government in America."

George charged that the FEPC was communizing America, by taking over management, and was contributing "a long step in the liquidation of private property."

Sen. John L. McClellan (D., Ark.) condemned the FEPC as a "public nuisance." Sen. Eastland interrupted to charge that all Government agencies were "discriminating against white people." McClellan agreed that in any agency where white and Negro women were compelled to work side by side it was "an encroachment on the constitutional liberties of both races." 6-21-44

"Isn't it worse that white women have to take dictation from burr-headed niggers?" Eastland shouted. Even McClellan seemed a little startled by the language, and mildly agreed that he didn't want his daughter to be put in that position.

FEPC Probes Biased Union

PM-New York, N.Y. 6-25-44

PM Exclusive

The Jim Crow policy of the International Seafarers Union, AFL, is again before the FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) in the case of Chief Carpenter John M. Stevens, who has been under enemy fire at Naples, Sicily and the Anzio beachheads.

J. M. Stevens

Stevens, a soft-spoken immaculately groomed man who holds a card in the AFL carpenters' union, has been pulled off two ships by the SIU since June 1 because of his color, although he was a member in good standing.

Before filing his complaint with the FEPC, which, an official said, is planning to hold public hearings on at least a half-dozen complaints against the discriminatory practices of the union, Stevens took his complaint before the SIU membership meeting.

He was told from the floor by a union executive, he said, that the union was not a "social group" nor one interested in social reforms and that neither the President nor the FEPC can compel white men to sleep in the same room with Negroes. 6-25-44

Stevens, who was educated in South Carolina and attended Boston College has resigned from the SIU and joined the National Maritime Union, CIO, which has a no-discrimination policy, in his effort to get back to sea.

Refuse To Certify Case Of Boilermakers' Defi To President

(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON—The Fair Employment Practices Committee split wide open this week on the controversial AFL Boilermakers Union case.

By a vote of 3 to 2, the committee voted not to certify the case of West Coast shipyard discrimination to President Roosevelt although the Kansas Cit. convention of the union had refused to meet the FEPC's demand to allow full representation to Negro workers.

The convention voted instead to maintain its Jim Crow locals for Negro workers and to give these locals representation at the union convention which is four years off.

The obvious face-saving device of the union was used by AFL representative Boris Shishkin on the FEPC to quash efforts to crack down on the union through presidential intervention.

It was learned that Shishkin promised FEPC members that he would take further steps to secure integration of Negroes in the Boilermakers Union but labor experts pointed out that this is impossible since the union's convention is the top authority in these matters.

The refusal to take the union case that charges of job discrimination against the union was used by the FEPC and virtually means that hereafter the committee will consider that Jim Crow locals meet the requirements of the President Roosevelt's executive order in its plants and come under the terms of the President's order.

The action came despite the fact that the FEPC have increased. At a conference Ross introduced the regional directors with that the "public will have to force the issue in large cases as the latter half of 1943.

Backward Step

Why Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill Should Be Supported, Outlined by Randolph

2-5-44

By A. Philip Randolph

Two bills on FEPC are now before the Congress. One is the Marcantonio Bill which is known as H. R. 1732, and the other is the Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill, H. R. 3986.

Now, the minority groups, of which the Negro people are by far the largest, are essentially concerned about securing federal legislation which will be effective in eliminating discriminations in industry and the Government. Naturally, it is to the interest of the minorities to support the bill which will more nearly achieve this objective. The only way by which it is possible to determine which is the more desirable Bill is by an analysis of both.

Findings and Policies

The Marcantonio Bill classifies discrimination in employment as the denial of civil rights and liberties and a waste of man-power.

Whereas, the Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill terms discrimination as a waste of man-power, an obstruction to, and burden upon interstate commerce.

The Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill also declares the policy of the United States to eliminate discrimination in all employment relations subject to the control of the Government, while the Marcantonio Bill limits the policy to employers who contract with the Government, which is a far different thing. The Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill is far broader and more comprehensive in this relation.

Freedom from discrimination is declared by the Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill to be a privilege and immunity of United States citizens which shall not be abridged by the United States, a State or instrumentality thereof. This provision is not in the Marcantonio Bill, but it is obvious to anyone that this is vital and imperative for the protection of Negro citizens and other minority groups from discrimination by the Government itself.

Unfair Employment Practice

The Marcantonio Bill does not include labor unions, while the Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee -LaFollette Bill does. The Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill also makes it an unfair practice for an employer or union to discharge or expel or discriminate against any person who files a charge or opposes unfair employment practices.

The Marcantonio Bill does not touch this phase. Only a casual examination of conditions involving discrimination against the Negro and other minority groups will show the value of this provision. Many a person is the victim of a discharge who opposes unfair practices of the employer. You have the Levy Case in the army who supported and championed the cause of Negro soldiers and was court-martialed for same. While these Bills do not refer to the armed forces, this is simply an example in point.

Scope of Act

The Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill precisely defines its scope and includes employers in interstate and foreign commerce, while the Marcantonio Bill by its "definitions" attempts to achieve somewhat the same result but falls far short.

The Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill sets up a seven member Committee appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate for seven year terms at an annual salary of $10,000. The Marcantonio Bill considers the Committee that body set up by the President pursuant to executive Order 8802. The provisions of the Marcantonio Bill are weak and the Board established non-existent.

The Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill provides for yearly reports to the President and to Congress. The Marcantonio Bill is silent on this point. 2-5-44

Enforcement and Prohibition

Section 5 of the Marcantonio and Section 10 of the Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bills have somewhat similar provisions, except that the Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill is more explicit and not so loosely drawn. The Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill establishes ten days as the minimum, while the Marcantonio Bill sets up seven days.

One of the most important considerations to be given the question of securing the enactment of a Bill, is the possibility of it receiving wide support in the Congress. All persons who are realistic at all about the question, know that a Bill which starts off with the support of groups of Congressmen of the two major parties stands a much brighter chance of support and enactment than does a Bill sponsored by a representative of a party which exists in only one state, namely New York, and which has been able to send only one Congressman from that State to Congress. It does not require any tremendous stretch of the imagination to understand that the Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill, which is being supported by Congressman Scanlon of Pennsylvania, Dawson of Illinois, Coffee of Washington and LaFollette of Indiana, will make much more effective headway than the Marcantonio Bill which is sponsored by Marcantonio of New York, alone. Moreover, the Marcantonio Bill has been before the Congress for about a year and there has been little or no action taken on it. 2-5-44

The Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill, moreover, is backed by the National Council for a Permanent FEPC, which represents a cross-section of prominent liberals, labor leaders and churchmen throughout the Country. Two secretaries have been employed for the pushing of this Bill alone and the mobilizing of nation-wide sentiment back of the Scanlon-Dawson-Coffee-LaFollette Bill. For the foregoing reasons, I, in the name of the National Council for a Permanent FEPC, call upon a minority group to back the Scanlon-Coffee-LaFollette Bill, to put an end to bias in industry and the Government, on account of race, color, religion or national origin.

FEPC Money Center Of Big Controversy On Appropriations Bill

News

Birmingham Ala.

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Racial, sectional and political angles combined Friday to make a $500,000 item for the president's Fair Employment Practices Committee the center of the biggest fight in a House appropriations bill of $1,033,358,367. 5-26-44

The committee was created a year ago Saturday for the announced purpose of preventing discrimination in employment because of race, color, creed or national origin. Its activities have met strong resistance in the South on the contention that it is a political attempt from outside to force changes in traditional customs.

Southern House members, aided by a handful of Republicans, lost the first round of their fight Thursday when they sought to invoke parliamentary procedure by which the FEPC fund could be stricken on a point of order from the cover-all measure appropriating funds for 18 home front agencies.

Their remaining chance is to strike the fund by amendment from the floor; Southern leaders admitted privately they lack the votes to do that.

Rep. Colmer (D., Miss.) contended the effect of FEPC's activities was to "discriminate against the whites."

Rep. Rankin (D., Miss.) called the FEPC "a monstrosity," while a Northern Republican, Taber, of New York, asserted the agency had sought to compel war manufacturers to employ alien Germans.

The CIO entered the fight by importuning members of the appropriations committee to insist on restoration of an $85,000 cut applied to FEPC by the committee Thursday morning. 5-26-44

Few of the other items in the bill are expected to be subjected to much criticism before House passage, tentatively scheduled for Saturday.

Atlanta FEPC Defender Grows-Ignores Chicago, Ill City Councilmen

1-27-44

ATLANTA—(ANP)— Continuing to ignore the Atlanta city council resolution asking Georgia congressmen to seek its removal, the southeastern regional office of the FEPC Wednesday through its director, A. Brice Hunt, announced the appointment of two more staff members, James H. Tipton, Jr., white, as an examiner and Miss Thelma Horton, as a stenographic-secretary.

Mr. Tipton, a native of Worth county, Ga., was serving as principal of the Rayburn county high school, Clayton, Ga., at the time of his appointment. Previously he had been assistant treasurer of the Georgia school of Technology and manager of the Georgia Tech radio program. He is widely known for his liberal attitude toward Negro citizens.

Miss Horton, a native of Athens, is a graduate of Morris Brown college, and until the time of her appointment had served as secretary to W. Y. Bell, Jr., USO regional director.

Previously Mr. Hunt had announced the appointment of John Hope II, son of the late Atlanta university president, as an examiner. 1-29-44

The regional FEPC office is located in one of the largest buildings in downtown Atlanta, a fact which irritated prejudiced white Atlantans, who resented the sight of Negroes and whites working harmoniously in the same office on the basis of equality.

FEPC Appropriation Gets By Opposition

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga.

5-27-44

(Washington Bureau of the Atlanta Daily WORLD and NNPA)

WASHINGTON — The FEPC on Friday survived a determined effort to kill it through striking its appropriations from the war agencies appropriation bill by a solid bloc of Southern Democrats, and a surprisingly large number of Republicans. Its fate is now in the hand of the Senate which must next consider and pass on the measure.

After several hours of debate on the bill 90 percent of which was aimed at the FEPC, the House, sitting in committee of the whole, adopted an amendment striking out the entire FEPC appropriations by a vote of 141 to 103. The agency was seeking less than one percent of the total amount in the bill. Representative Dawson, (D. Ill.) made an impassioned plea for the agency. When the measure was reported back to the house for passage in legislative session, however, the heroic efforts of Rep. Dawson and Rep. Marcantonio of New York to save the FEPC were rewarded. 5-27-44

The amendment to strike out the agency's request as recommended by the committee of the whole was defeated by four votes 123 to 119. The session lasted until after 7 p. m.

THE PRESIDENT'S SUPER BOARD

Defender Chicago, Ill.

The appointment of a three-man committee to resolve the impasse between the Fair Employment Practice Committee and the Southern railroads, seems to us both unnecessary and unwise. The real point at issue is whether or not the employment policy of the Southern railroads violates the President's Executive Order which forbids discrimination in the industries. After a careful examination of the facts, the FEPC found the Southern railroads guilty of racial discrimination and ordered them to change their policy. This they have refused to do, thereupon the case was certified to the White House.

It is our opinion that President Roosevelt should have ordered the Southern railroads to comply with the directives of the FEPC. Such a step would have strengthened the hands of the committee while serving as an incontrovertible deterrent to other industries inclined to defy its authority. The appointment of a three-man committee to arbitrate to believe that another committee of the issue weakens the FEPC's power two or three or five men may be appointed to the new board. We believe that the creation of such a board establishes a precedent that does not augur well for the future of the FEPC. Moreover the feeling is widely shared in some quarters that political expediency dictated that course. True or not the fact remains that no decision in the dispute will be reached soon. In the meantime the findings of one committee are reviewing the findings of another may go on ad infinitum. But it is time wasting, and doubtless money wasting also. The Movement For A Permanent FEPC

Journal and Guide - Norfolk, Virginia
2-12-44

A BILL proposing to make the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee a permanent organization, supported further by statutory authority and assurances of finances to do its needed work, is before the House of Representatives.

The measure was introduced by Representatives Scanlon of Pennsylvania, Dawson of Illinois, and La Follette of Indiana, and in the upper house of Congress by Senators Ferguson of Michigan, Langer of North Dakota, Capper of Kansas, and Downey of California.

This sponsorship of the bill is drawn from a group of well known and influential legislators, and it is to be hoped that sufficient strength can be mobilized behind them from the major parties to insure the passage of the bill.

A similar bill has been introduced by Representative Marcantonio of New York, but Washington observers believe that the Scanlon-Ferguson bill has more likelihood of favorable action in Congress. The Marcantonio bill is regarded by them as not as suitable from the point of view of structure, scope, and policy. Journal and Guide

Furthermore, Representative Marcantonio is affiliated with a party with its major strength in New York City, whereas the other bill is sponsored by members of major parties. This alone has a vital political significance, and it would be the part of political acumen for those seeking to strengthen FEPC to muster their support behind the bill with the greater chance of passage, especially if it meets adquately the problems of discrimination that plague us in the economic field.

Obviously, the southern bloc and other isolated anti-Negro members of Congress will probably oppose any bill designed to improve the economic lot of the disadvantaged Negro group, by such pressure groups as the southeastern railroads and railway brotherhoods (unions), and by such other industrial and labor union groups as are now denying employment opportunities to the Negro and other minority groups. Norfolk, Virginia

Already there is forming a powerful and interested body of opinion behind the passage of the Scanlon-Ferguson bill. Only those blind to the dangers of the present economic plight of minority groups because of race, creed, and national origin will fail to do everything in their power to make known to members of Congress their deep interest in the passage of the bill. 2-12-44

Fair Employment Practices

Courier-Journal-Louisville, Ky. 6-19-44

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal:

A measure which is very important for the morale of our Negro fellow citizens is the appropriation of $500,000 for the Fair Employment Practices Committee, the government agency set up by President Roosevelt to prevent discrimination on the grounds of race, color or religion in the employment policies of war industries.

The measure is now before the Senate Appropriations Committee. If the efforts to knock it out of the appropriations bill now before that committee prove successful, the morale of the Negro people will suffer a very severe blow. 6-19-44

A bi-partisan measure is under consideration by the House Labor Committee for a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee to stop discrimination in job opportunities as a permanent peace-time policy. Such a measure is necessary unless we are willing to continue giving the lie to our boast that our country is a land of equal opportunity.

SENATORS OF SOUTH OPEN FIGHT ON FEPC

Some Republicans Abet Attack on Executive Agency—Vote on Fund Bill Deferred

6-17-44

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, June 16—Passage by the Senate of the $1,027,618,000 War Agencies Appropriation Bill was postponed today until next week as Southern members began their fight against a $500,000 item for maintenance of the Fair Employment Practice Committee. Senator Richard B. Russell of Georgia charged that President Roosevelt overruled a decision of Lindsay C. Warren, Controller General, which would have withheld funds from the agency.

"Records show," Mr. Russell said, "that the Controller General ruled that the FEPC, having no authority in law, could not receive Government funds. President Roosevelt then overruled him and kept the agency alive."

Debate indicated that the Southern group was gaining some support from Republicans, not so much because of the issues of racial discrimination but because the FEPC was created by Presidential Executive Order and supplied with funds without requests for Congressional appropriations.

The first request made by the President for an appropriation for the FEPC's support came, it was pointed out, after the Senate had adopted a Russell amendment to the Independent Offices Appropriation Bill, which would discontinue agencies which did not receive statutory recognition or appropriation by July 1. 6-17-44

Senator Russell alleged that the FEPC "discriminated against white people in its own employment practices," contending that more than two-thirds of its employes here and in the field were Negroes. Further, he argued, only 44 out of 1,000 cases taken to the board for action were sent to Washington headquarters for determination, the action being taken by field representatives.

Among the personnel of the FEPC, Mr. Russell said, were persons who had been associated "with groups branded as subversive by the Attorney General of the United States."

George And Bilbo Score Plan As Disturber Of Race Relations In U. S.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—(AP)—Disregarding embittered Southern assertions that the United States is being pushed into communism or national socialism, the Senate declined on a 39 to 21 roll-call today to kill the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee.

The vote was on a $500,000 appropriation for the FEPC in a $1,030,000,000 war agencies supply bill.

Thirteen Southern senators who opposed the fund were supported by seven Republicans and one Western Democrat, Johnson of Colorado, but 16 Republicans joined with 23 Democrats to override their objections. Senator Pepper, of Florida, was the only Democrat from the deep South who voted with the majority.

The FEPC was set up by President Roosevelt's executive order and was instructed to combat racial and religious discriminations in industry.

The Southerners salvaged only a few minor concessions — war contractors whose contracts were threatened with cancellation because of alleged discrimination would have the right of appeal to the President, and a prohibition was erected against government seizure of any plant for its refusal to conform to rules set up by FEPC.

Agency Castigated

Southerner after Southerner took the floor to castigate the agency as tending to stir up trouble rather than to alleviate friction between the races. White-haired Senator George (D), Georgia, face flushed, thundered that by approving the FEPC fund, the nation would be taking "a long step toward converting our economic system into a communistic or national socialistic system."

Speaking to the Senate in support of an amendment to delete the $500,000 allowance, George said the agency had done nothing but "create disturbances."

"There is no more certain way to destroy this republic than by dividing the American people into classes," he asserted. "Within the last five or ten years a deeper schism has been driven into American life than ever before, a deeper racial prejudice, a deeper class prejudice."

George, saying the FEPC's purpose is not to obtain equal salaries for negroes doing similar work to that performed by whites, added: "I'd be entirely ashamed of myself if I were willing to deny to any man, regardless of his race, color or creed, full, fair and equal compensation."

Seeking Social Equality

The "main purpose" of the FEPC, he continued, "is to establish something like social equality." 6-21-'44

Turning toward the Republican side of the chamber, George declared "this may get you votes in 1944, but it won't in 1946, or 1948, or thereafter." The final aim of the persons backing FEPC, he declared, is taking away the control of private property from the owners.

Before a crowded gallery, the debate was unrestrained.

Senator McClellan (D), Arkansas, declared: 6-21-'44

"When white and negro women are compelled to sit side by side at their work, use the same toilet facilities, eat at the same table, it is an encroachment on the Constitutional rights of both races, if either wants to be segregated from the other!"

At that point Senator Eastland (D), Mississippi, arose to shout:

"Isn't it even worse for decent white girls to have to take dictation from a lot of burr-headed niggers in the departments?"

The debate even brought a suggestion that Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt become "Queen of that Greater Liberia."

Senator Bilbo (D), Mississippi, for years an advocate of resettling American negroes in West Africa, said two and a half million negroes had seconded his idea and added "I do not see why Mrs. Roosevelt or anyone else should object to it."

Declaring that two and a half million negroes want to return to Africa, Bilbo asserted:

"I do not claim any credit for the campaign to resettle the negroes in West Africa," he said. "President Monroe started it, Jefferson encouraged it, Madison, Abraham Lincoln, and President Grant were for it. When such a respectable party of two and one half million persons request the congress to give them this relief, this opportunity, and this break, I do not see why Mrs. Roosevelt or anyone else should object to it. Advertiser, Montgome

"Perhaps, she did not understand my ultimate plan. If I can succeed eventually in resettling the great majority of the negroes in West Africa, I might entertain the proposition of making her Queen of that Greater Liberia."

In fact, Bilbo said, if his resettlement plan ever succeeded, "I might entertain the proposition of making her Queen of that Greater Liberia."

The main argument of the Southerners was that FEPC was aiming for social equality rather than against economic discrimination.

Supporting the FEPC, Senator Lucas (D), Illinois, said:

"Job discrimination is indefensible when manpower bottlenecks are impeding the war effort."

Senator Hill of Alabama, the Democratic whip and usually one of President Roosevelt's strongest supporters, told the Senate the President "had no powers to set up this committee."

Its establishment, he said, "was never authorized by Congress" nor did Congress ever intend that funds appropriated by it should be "used for such an agency."

Walter White And Rabbi Wise Speak For U. S. FEPC

Daily World

By HARRY McALPIN

(Washington Bureau of the Atlanta Daily World and NNPA)

WASHINGTON — The Senate recessed Tuesday until Thursday without considering the FEPC appropriation reinstated to the War Agencies bill Monday by a 14 to 6 committee vote.

In the morning, the House Labor Committee, continuing hearings on bills for a permanent FEPC, heard Walter White of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and Rabbi Stephen Wise as witnesses who made strong statements on the need for establishing such an agency.

White told the committee it has been a privilege during recent months to visit various war fronts where Negro combat and service troops are stationed. He said the most frequently asked question by these soldiers is "whether or not Negroes on returning home will continue to be confined to black jobs."

Negro American fighting men on battle fronts around the world are not fighting in vain. They are asked the committee and that Congress to send word to 700,000 boot 6-14-44

FEPC Gets Charges Against U. S. Air Force

PM - New York, N.Y. 3-3-44

Fired Negro Civilian Instructor Tells of Being Pushed Around

By EDMUND SCOTT

PM Exclusive

A graduate civilian instructor of the Army Air Force Technical School for Instructors, Chanute Field, Ill., who was fired for alleged inefficiency after being shuttled from one airport to another for almost a year, has filed charges of discrimination against the Air Force with the (Fair Employment Practice Committee) FEPC.

The instructor, Henry N. Conyers, father of two young children who lives at 70 E. 119th St., says he was prepared to teach enlisted Army personnel "the theory of electricity as applied to aircraft power systems," but charges that because he is a Negro, he was shifted from Chanute Field to Mississippi, then to Lincoln, Neb., and finally on June 1, 1943, to Sacramento Air Depot, Cal. There, he says, "not for one minute during my first four months was I officially assigned to a class although I received my salary regularly."

Conyers, a mild mannered, soft spoken man who attended the New York Institute of Commerce and Accountancy for three years before entering Civil Service in 1940 with the New York Port of Embarkation, in his complaint to the FEPC, which has been forwarded to the agency's San Francisco office for action, charges that at the Sacramento Air Depot: 3-3-44

¶ "I was obliged to just sit . . . for eight hours a day for a period of approximately 120 days, dangling aimlessly around."

¶ "On one occasion, our department had a class and no instructor for the class—but rather than utilize my service, the class was held up . . . while . . . the chief instructor drafted an instructor from another department to come to our department to instruct the class."

¶ "After three months, my chief instructor turned in an unfavorable 'employees' rating' on me, although never once was I assigned to the duties commensurate with my classification."

¶ "The supervisor, subsequently removed me from the electrical department for which I am trained, to another department for which I had no instructor training, and replaced me with a mechanic."

¶ "Because I refused to take an examination to remain a qualified instructor, which is not the procedure of any Army school, I was dismissed."

¶ "I also refused to take this test because the board of about eight chief instructors . . . chosen to give me this test, consisted of two of my accusers." 3-3-44

Conyers, who attended the Air Force School eight hours a day for 110 days to get his diploma as a junior instructor, said:

"Everywhere I go I have to produce my papers. They show I was dismissed for inefficiency and I can't get a job.

"I wish, therefore, to appeal this miscarriage of justice on the basis that for the good of the Army Air Forces I was shipped 3000 miles from my family 'for the convenience of the Government,' demoted and finally my refusal to accept a drastic reduction in salary resulted in my being discharged for inefficiency.

"I have suffered the loss of four years seniority in civil service, part of which was secured at the N. Y. Port of Embarkation, 43 days sick leave and certain pension rights."

Conyers says that all he wants is to be cleared of the stigma placed on him by his dismissal by the Army, restoration of his classification and his civil service status.

SENATORS PROMISE FAIR HEARING ON FEPC BUDGET

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga. 3-19-44

NAACP Writes Every Solon Asking Views

NEW YORK, N. Y.—(S N S)—Leading members of the Senate have promised the NAACP to give fair and impartial consideration to the application of the Fair Employment Practice Committee for its $585,000 budget.

Following the introduction of an amendment to the Independent Offices Bill by Senator Russell of Georgia, which he announced to the press as an attempt to "wipe out the Fair Employment Practice Committee," the NAACP wrote letters to every Senator asking his views on the continuation of the FEPC.

Senator Guy M. Gillettee of Iowa writes that while he is in full accord with the principle (of prohibiting the transfer of funds appropriated for one purpose to another) "I am strongly in favor of the purpose and objectives of the FEPC." 3-19-44

LaFOLLETTE FAVORABLE

Senator Robert M. LaFollette, Jr., of Wisconsin, writes, "if it becomes necessary for the FEPC to come to Congress for an appropriation, I would certainly be in favor of granting the appropriation sufficiently large for the committee to carry on its good work."

Senator Francis Maloney of Connecticut pledges that when the FEPC comes before the appropriations committee "it will have my careful attention and consideration." Senator Harley M. Kilgore, of West Virginia also pledges "careful consideration."

Senator James E. Murray of Montana writes, "I do not agree with Senator Russell in his quoted purpose of destroying the Fair Employment Practice Committee."

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan says, "I favor a continuation of the Fair Employment Practice Committee. I agree, however, that all of these instrumentalists should be responsible to Congress for the justifications of their appropriations."

WAGNER IN LINE

Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York writes, "As you probably know, I applauded the establishment of the Committee on Fair Employment Practice and am thoroughly in accord with its objectives. To my mind, discrimination in employment because of race, color or creed makes a mockery of the ideals we are fighting to defend. You may be assured that I will not only vote for the continuance of the work of the FEPC but will do everything possible to strengthen it in the performance of its important function." 3-19-44

Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley pleaded that he had not had an opportunity to study the amendment of Senator Russell but declared, "my own inclination is to keep most, if not all, of these agencies in existence, including the one mentioned in your letter, and I shall certainly give earnest consideration to the recommendations and suggestions concerning it."

Dr. Alva Taylor Appointed To Staff Of FEPC

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. 3-3-44

Dr. Alva W. Taylor of Nashville, Tenn., a Public Panel Member of the Fourth Regional War Labor Board and a Public member of Industry Panels in the Wage and Hour Division of Department of Labor, has been appointed to the staff of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice as Consultant, it was announced at the local office today. This appointment brings to four the number of professional appointees in the local office, the other three being Messrs John Hope II and James H. Tipton, Fair Practice Examiners, and A. Bruce Hunt, Regional Director.

DRAKE GRADUATE

Dr. Taylor, a graduate of Drake University and the University of Chicago, for many years has been active in religious, educational, and interracial fields in the South. He is at present Executive Secretary of the Southern Mountain Workers Conference. Secretary-Treasurer of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, and a member of the Social Service Commission of the Federal Council of Churches. He was formerly Professor of Social Ethics in the Schools of Religion at the University of Missouri and Vanderbilt University, and Chairman of the Nashville Interracial Committee.

Dr. Taylor is the author of numerous books and pamphlets on religious, interracial. and industrial subjects, including "Social Work of Christian Missions," "Christianity in Industry in the United States," and "Social Progress and Christian Ideals." 3-3-44

The FEPC receives an investigates complaints of discriminatory employment practices in war industries and the Government service where such discrimination is based upon race, creed, color, national origin, or alienage, and takes appropriate steps to elimiate such discriminatory practices. Since the opening of the Regional FEPC Office during last November, a total of 71 new cases have been docketed, 10 of which had been previously filed with the Committee in Washington. During the same period, a total of 35 cases have been closed. These include cases where satisfactory adjustments have been obtained and employers have agreed to comply with Executive Order No. 9346, cases which were dismissed as being without merit or because of insufficient evidence, cases in which the Committee did not have jurisdiction, and, finally, cases withdrawn by the complainants. 3-3-44

The number of active cases on the docket in the Regional Office is now 156. Included are cases in which it is alleged that complainants have been discriminated against in employment in war industries and the Government service because they are Negroes, Jews, Seventh Day Adventists, Jehovah's Witnesses, Aliens, or of foreign birth.

The other lines in negotiation are the Baltimore and Ohio, the Baltimore and Ohio Chicago Terminal, the Union Pacific, and the Missouri - Kansas-Texas railroads. The B. and O. is checking individual complaints with an eye to ward adjustment. The Chicago Terminal matter is now being handled between management and the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, the union involved. The M. K. and T. has renewed its "pledge of cooperation with the committee", is striving for "tangible progress" and is confident that a solution will be reached. The U. P. is still in negotiation.

On the basis of this record, FEPC has made four observations, namely: 1. the issuance and publication of directives did not prove a bar to negotiations; 2. at least one southern railroad found it not impracticable to reach solutions; 3. at least one railroad workers union expressed a willingness to attempt compliance and is achieving results; 4. negotiations in each case have proved to be complex and lengthy.

In the conclusions, the committee declared that FEPC intervention ended in the 14 railroads cases when they were certified to the President, except insofar as its services may be requested. "With its own responsibilities discharged and the cases no longer before it," the statement concludes: "FEPC believes that practical and peaceful solutions of the issues raised can be handled, and it subscribes to the expressed hopes of both the President and the Stacy committee that this may be the final result."

Senate Acts To Kill FEPC

PM-New York, N. Y.
3-26-44

The $8,000,000,000 Independent Offices Supply bill has been returned to the House after the Senate approved it by voice vote and added a series of amendments aimed at curbing the TVA (Tennessee Valley Authority) and killing the FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee) 3-26-44

Two of the amendments, introduced by Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D., Tenn.), bitter foe of the huge power project, require the TVA to depend on direct Congressional appropriations for future financing and require reappointment and Senate confirmation of all Federal employees earning $4500 or more a year. A third amendment, which would hit the FEPC, bars use of any funds for Federal agencies created by the President unless specific authorizations are made by Congress.

The House, meanwhile, passed and sent to the Senate a $567,995,779 agricultural appropriation bill with a Republican-sponsored amendment aimed at preventing field officers of the Agriculture Adjustment Administration from "coercing" farmers to participate.

Dewey Backers Jittery On His FEPC Sabotage

Daily Worker - New York, N. Y.
3-31-44

"The Challenge of the Minority Question" seemed to be too challenging to Dewey supporters at Wednesday's annual meeting of the New York State Conference on Social Work, Islip State Hospital, L. I.

A Negro expert, speaking on that subject, declared the Governor had not helped New York state minorities "by abandoning the Fair Employment Practice Act" in an attempt to get into White House.

The speaker was Edward S. Lewis, executive secretary of the New York Urban League. Dewey's defenders were Richard Gilmartin, Commissioner of Public Welfare of Suffolk County, chairman of the meeting and Edwin Wallace, Commissioner of Public Welfare of Nassau County. Mrs. Ethel Roosevelt Derby, daughter of the late President Theodore Roosevelt, in the uniform of a Red Cross nurse, also showed annoyance.

Gilmartin regretted that "politics" had been mentioned in a discussion on social work and the plight of Negro, Jewish and other minorities. Wallace insisted that Dewey was "the greatest governor" in the history of this state. Mrs. Derby, noting Mr. Lewis' criticism of the segregated blood bank, absolved the Red Cross of responsibility, getting the immediate retort from the Urban League secretary that she was making an alibi for prejudice.

To Wallace, 3-31-44 Lewis said that Dewey was "great" all right—"a great politician," adding that the people, in a not distant future would see "just how great."

FEPC Says Job Finished On Rail, Union Hearing

Responsibilities At Atlanta, Ga. Fully Discharged,

Smith Unit Told

5-17-44

WASHINGTON—(A N P)—The responsibilities of the FEPC in adjusting complaints against 14 of the original 22 railroads charged with discriminatory hiring policies have been fully discharged to the limit of the authority granted the committee by Executive Order 9346, and the cases are no longer before it.

This is the status explained in FEPC's statement to the Smith committee last week in answer to counter charges filed by the group of southern carriers which have already balked at compliance with "cease and desist" directives issued against him. Chairman Malsolm Ross originally was to have appeared for questioning but was granted permission instead to file an answer.

DENIES 3 CHARGES

The 35-page brief denied the three charges levelled, namely, that directives against northern railroads were kept secret, that in all, 20 cases had been certified to the President by the old FEPC, and that FEPC had changed its procedure after the appointment of a new chairman.

As regards authority, the committee held "that its issuance of directives was an appropriate step toward obtaining compliance with a national policy formulated by the commander-in-chief under his wartime powers." 5-17-44

Further it maintained that the committee does not hold that it has the power to enforce its directives by the imposition of penalties or subjection of the parties to judicial action.

DIRECTIVES "INSTRUCTIVE"

On the other hand, "the directives are held to instruct the parties on the methods of bringing their employment policies into line with Executive Order 9346:" and that "the directives, if certified, also comprise a report to the President on violations . . . so that he may evaluate what steps should be taken to clear the parties of offense against the national policy." 3-26-44

In the conclusions, the committee declared that FEPC intervention ended in the 14 railroad cases when they were certified to the President, except insofar as its services may be requested. "With its own responsibilities discharged and the cases no longer before it," the statement concludes, "FEPC believes that practical and peaceful solutions of the issues raised can be had, and it subscribes to the expressed hopes of both the President and the Stacy committee that this may be the final result.

Hunt Replies To Attack On FEPC

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga.
4-19-44

In answer to an attack made on the Fair Employment Practice Committee, A. Bruce Hunt, Regional Director of the Agency here in Atlanta, makes a reply.

Mr. Hunt stated that three of the employees are male, and that they are employed on a full-time basis.

This is his statement:

"I am classified as a Senior Fair Practice Examiner and act as Regional Director, John Hope II is classified as a Fair Practice Examiner, and James H. Tipton is classified as an Associate Fair Practice Examiner. The different salaries which we earn are explained by the different titles of our positions. The fourth and part-time male employee is Dr. Alva W. Taylor of Nashville, Tennessee, who has the title of "Consultant," and who is also on the staffs of other Government agencies. Dr. Taylor earns the same annual rate of salary as does Mr. Hope.

"We have two female employees. Miss Myra L. Bunting acts as secretary to the Senior Fair Practice Examiner at a salary of $1,800 per annum. Miss Thelma E. Horton acts as secretary to both the Fair Practice Examiner and the Associate Fair Practice Examiner. From the time of her appointment in January, 1944, until April 1, Miss Horton was compensated at the rate of $1,620 per annum. On April 1, her salary was increased to $1,800. 4-19-44

"On Saturday, April 15, Chairman Malcolm Ross issued in Washington a statement which is of interest in connection with the personnel of FEPC and their work. A copy is attached. As pointed out in Mr. Ross' statement, the FEPC is to aid in securing a maximum utilization of manpower so that the goods of war may be produced in the shortest possible time, thereby hastening the day of victory and saving the lives of American soldiers. Here in the South, where war plants advertise daily for workers, the only reservoir of unemployed labor is the Negro. In view of the large number of complaints which have been filed with the FEPC alleging discrimination in employment against Negroes, it is not surprising, as Mr. Ross says, that members of this group should be useful workers in this field.

Post - Washington, D.C.

The House Appropriations Committee showed a wise tolerance, we think, in recommending the allotment of half a million dollars for continuation of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee. If the recommendation is approved by both houses of Congress, as we very much hope it will be, the FEPC will cease to be merely a presidential agency and will have independent status under congressional authorization. This is as it should be. The Post has expressed indorsement, in principle, of Senator Russell's proposal requiring all Federal agencies set up by executive order to secure an appropriation from Congress after they have been in existence for a year. We should regret very much indeed, however, to see this sound general requirement employed, as some intended, to end the FEPC's useful career. 5-27-44

SAVE THE FEPC

Argus, St. Louis, Mo. 1-7-44

If we were to name the first and foremost thing which may be done for the benefit of the Negroes in this country during this year we would say: it is THE CONTINUED MAINTENANCE OF THE PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICE. We make this statement because the Congress of the United States is today again maneuvering to sabotage the FEPC which is giving the Negro a man's chance to work and earn a living based upon ability rather than color or race. We know of nothing that has been mentioned in the present United States Congress affecting Negroes that will set us so far back for years—or maybe, generations to come — as the killing of the FEPC. Congress alone can destroy his committee or make it impotent. Despite the fact that the President of the United States is backing the committee one hundred percent, the congress still has the power to harrass the President, befuddle the people, and finally override the president's executive orders.

THERE IS GREAT DANGER, however, that the colored people themselves will fail to see what an economic loss they as a group will sustain, if congress carries out its threat.

If we do not get integrated in industry now, with the aid of the FEPC using Executive Order 8802 and 9346—both war measures—our future in the industrial life of the nation is too dismal to think about. Of course,, it does not take a prophet to see and realize that, if these gains are not made NOW while Roosevelt is President of the United States, and the war is still on, there is little hope for the future.

Apparently, there is a "Congress crowd" who would rather see prolonged war and millions of lives sacrificed, than to see the Negroes enjoy the same opportunity to work as other Americans. 1-7-44

Do not think the gains we have made in employment during the past two years, particularly in the industrial field, have been "dropped" in our laps because of the manpower shortage alone. It took fighting by somebody; and the fight is still being waged and discrimination in employment on account of race is still being challenged at every turn. Despite the President's order, we see daily in the papers want ads begging for help of all kinds, but "Negroes need not apply." The Congress of the United States, led by the bourbon South, and aided by a group of northern Republicans, is threatening to destroy the FEPC, so that discrimination against the Negroes may continue, not only for the present, but on through the postwar period.

In order to speed up the work of the FEPC and to make its directives more effective, nearly a half million dollars has been set aside for its use. Over one hundred and fifty persons are devoting their time in trying to break up discrimination against Negro workers—and your Congress is trying to kill this committee because it is carrying out the President's orders.

The President has seen fit to create this agency and to give it the power and see that it was provided with the means of presenting a solid front of all Americans against the enemies of our country, and to put into practice his doctrine of "freedom from want" for the people regardless of race, color or creed. The right to work and earn a living is a God-given right which needs neither constitutions nor laws to give it sanction, but it has been declared in the Constitution of the United States to be the purpose of government to guarantee this right to all Americans, black and white, on equal terms. 1-7-44

SHAME on the Congress of the United States. Shame on every man who is trying to deny this right to the Negroes. Shame on every man who would sabotage the war efforts and jeapordize the lives of millions in order to keep these rights and opportunities from one of the most loyal segments of the nation's population.

Let every true American rally and save the FEPC, and help the Negro to remain loyal and be proud of his government.

FEPC Saved in House By Vote of 123 to 119

Constitution-Atlanta, Ga. 5-27-44

WASHINGTON, May 26.—(AP)—A four-vote margin saved one of President Roosevelt's most controversial agencies, the Fair Employment Practices Committee, tonight as the house passed the $1,033,358,367 war agencies appropriation bill.

Less than an hour before a roll-call vote of 247 to 58 sent to the Senate the omnibus measure financing almost a score of home front war agencies for the year starting July 1, the House tentatively had refused to include in the bill a $500,000 fund for FEPC and then reversed itself to restore the item.

FEPC was set up by the President with instructions to assist in ending job discrimination because of race, color, or creed.

The original action, in committee of the whole where record votes are not possible, came on adoption of an amendment to eliminate the fund, the teller vote being 141 to 103 with a large bloc of Republicans joining a solid southern delegation in opposition to the FEPC.

NO RECORD VOTE

In the House proper, however, the amendment was defeated by a 123-to-119 teller vote after Representative Marcantonio, American Labor, New York, had failed to force a record vote. Marcantonio was one of the leaders in the fight to save the FEPC.

Aside from the FEPC fight, only two other amendments were offered and both were voted down. One, by Representative Dworshak, Republican, Idaho, would have cut $5,500,000 from the $58,625,367 OWI fund. The other, by Representative Keefe, Republican, Wisconsin, would have trimmed $660,700 from the War Labor Board's allotment.

Final passage of the bill found many southerners, opposed to the last to the FEPC tiem, voting against the entire measure.

Two days of debate on the omnibus bill had been devoted almost entirely to the FEPC. The fight against it, led by Representative Tarver, Democrat, Georgia, was based on contentions of southerners that the agency, not specifically authorized by congress, was more interested in advocating social racial equality than in preventing discrimination against Negroes.

GEORGIAN'S WARNING

The bitter debate brought warnings of grave racial problems in the future and a ermark from Representative Gibson, Democrat, Georgia, that "there are only two things that are going to save this nation: One is ballots and the other is bullets."

Tarver said there would be no racial problems in the south if it were not for the activities of "pettifogging and troublemaking busybodies in other sections of our country. 5-27-44

"Among this type of troublemakers," he added, "the FEPC is entitled to high rank."

The FEPC, he said, "is engaged . . . in an effort to foist certain ideas of social, not economic, equality, which have long been entertained in Communistic quarters in this country, upon the white people of the country who feel a certain pride in their race . . . and who, while they are willing and anxious that the Negro shall have his economic rights, are not willing, and never will submit, to his being forced upon them as a social equal and bedfellow."

ALABAMAN'S CHARGE

Representative Hobbs, Democrat, Alabama, charged that white workers were being ousted from their jobs in favor of Negroes, while Representative Rankin, Democrat, Mississippi, assailed FEPC as a "Communistic bunch."

Only a few members rose to defend the FEPC and in the main they based their argument on the contention the President was authorized by congress to create such an agency when it enacted war powers legislation.

Representative Dawson, Democrat, Illinois, only Negro member of congress, won applause from both sides of the aisle when he defended the agency as one interested solely in preventing discrimination.

"I too am an American," Dawson told the house. "Every rule that you may use to measure men, apply to me and see if I measure up."

NEGRO SHOWS WAR SCAR

He cited his world war record and pointed to a scar on his forehead inflicted by mustard gas burns. Negroes, he said, "were called to the colors" when the present war broke out, "but they were not called to work," and the FEC was set up to remedy that condition.

Claims of opponents that FEPC was dictatorial, he said, were without foundation because the agency "cannot make anybody do anything."

Representative Marcantonio, American Labor, New York, also defended the FEPC, asserting its sole objective was to prevent discrimination. 5-27-44

The New Yorker criticized Gibson's reference to the use of bullets, asserting such language was "extremely revolutionary." The agency, he added, "is a continuation of the emancipation proclamation."

Army-Navy To Testify At Permanent FEPC Hearings

Hearings Before House Labor Committee Get Started Thursday

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Spokesman for the war and navy departments are scheduled to be the first witnesses heard when the house labor committee opens its hearings on legislation to establish a permanent FEPC, Thursday morning.

Corrington Gill, executive secretary of the Congested Areas committee, has been asked to appear on assistant navy secretary Will appear for his department. He is understood to have more intimate knowledge of the situation than anyone else in his department. The navy is considered the largest single employer in the world.

The labor committee, in its second week of hearings, hopes to have top figures in the department of justice, War Production board, U. S. Maritime commission, War Shipping administration labor and the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs to round out the week.

The hope was expressed by a spokeman for the committee that a good deal more testimony might be taken before the recess for the political conventions, but would not hazard a guess as to what the possibilities would be for house action further in extending the National Council for a Permanent FEPC, which met in New York

Malcolm Ross, FEPC chairman, is scheduled to present his case on Friday, June 9. The labor committee would be for house action to round out the week.

last Wednesday and Thursday to discuss the approaching hearings and a meeting between Ann Arnold Hedgemau, executive secretary, and Mrs. Norton was set for Friday morning in Washington.

Roosevelt Has Chance to Solve Race and Labor Relations Problems

By HORACE R. CAYTON

THE Government has taken over the railroads. Now President Roosevelt is face to face with the responsibility of enforcing his own edict against racial discrimination in war industries. Malcolm Ross, chairman of FEPC, has stated that the railroads must comply with the directive from his committee to cease and desist their prejudicial policies toward Negroes. As the railroads have refused to do this, the committee's duty is to certify the case to the President. This action has taken place. He will have to take some action. On one hand, he is the final authority for enforcing FEPC directives. On the other, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, he is responsible for the operation of the railroads. After some debate internal, as Gilbert and Sullivan would put it, he will have to make a decision which he, in turn, must enforce.

Mr. Cayton

To further complicate an already complex situation, the question of jim crowism on the railroads has been raised and it has been stated that it should be abolished by the President.

MANPOWER NEEDS SHOULD GOVERN

The Army, for its part, following its usual procedure, has stated that it had no intentions of involving itself in the problems of race relations and that it considered the existing race relations frozen for the duration; that is, as far as the railroads are concerned. This all adds up to a big mess and a terribly difficult spot for the President.

OF COURSE, if approached from any logical point of view, the President would automatically do both of these things. He would enforce the directives of his committee concerning the hiring of Negroes in all brackets of the industries because the railroads are operating under a terrific strain, and manpower shortage is one of its most crucial questions. To tap the only available labor pool of Negroes and women is the only way in which this much needed manpower can be obtained.

GOOD TIME TO END JIM CROW TRAVEL

1-8-44

As far as the abolition of jim crowism for Negro travelers is concerned now would also seem a most opportune time for that action. The antiquated system of jim crow cars has impeded the economical use of railroad facilities, has caused needless and endless friction between Negro and white travelers, and has contributed to the low morale of Negro soldiers, sailors, and civilians in the general war effort. Any logical approach to the problem would call for the immediate abolition of discriminatory employment practices and the jim crow customs surrounding Negro travelers. Why then one might ask does not the President seize this opportunity to do just that?

IT IS pretty hard to speculate about the motives of the Chief Executive for taking or not taking any particular action. Several things are present, however, which might indicate why, in my opinion, at least, the President will not act. In the first place, he will be opposed by the Army which is laboring under the assumption that so-called race relations can be frozen for the duration and that we can mobilize all of our economic strength without in any way changing the traditional pattern of race relations. President Roosevelt hasn't had very good luck in changing the Army's jim crow pattern, and it is doubtful that even as Commander-in-Chief, he will be able to influence the "brasshats" who are operating the railroads.

ONLY ONE SOLUTION

In the second place, Mr. Roosevelt apparently does not want to completely estrange himself from Congress. He has a peace treaty to sign sometime in the near future and he doesn't want to be caught out on the same limb that President Wilson was at the conclusion of the last World War. A congressional committee is already making plans for a frontal attack on the FEPC and would certainly oppose any action to enforce its directives at this time.

1-8-44

IF THE President took this issue of race relations seriously enough and could realize its world wide implications, now would be a time when he could go to the bat and demand a re-alignment of political forces of the country. Either the President will in some way muddle through, losing a golden opportunity for the extension of democracy, or he will take some of these issues directly by demanding a new political realignment. This is the only solution to the problem of race relations and the problem of labor relations and the problem of international peace.

Sen. Eastland Hits FEPC as Dictatorship

World-Telegram Newyork, N.Y. 6-19-44

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 19. — Senator James O. Eastland (D., Miss.) declared today that Congressional ratification of the creation of the Fair Employment Practices Committee would mean that "we no longer have a constitutional government but a dictatorship in name and in fact."

Efforts of Southern Senators to kill the agency, which President Roosevelt created by executive order to handle racial discrimination disputes, threatened Congressional hopes of wading through a heap of major legislation by Friday night and recessing through the political conventions. Substantial Republican support lining up with Southern Democrats on the FEPC issue was the complicating factor.

FEPC Fund Hurdles Pitfalls; Vote Today

Daily Worker Newyork, N.Y.

By ADAM LAPIN

WASHINGTON, May 25.—Over the strenuous objection of polltax Democrats and some Republicans, the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices was well on the road today to winning House approval for a $500,000 appropriation.

5-26-44

A final vote is expected tomorrow, but thanks to majority leader John McCormack and Rep. Vito Marcantonio of New York, two tricky parliamentary moves designed to scuttle the small but vital war agency have been effectively blocked.

The House Appropriations Committee approved the appropriation for FEPC this morning, which was $85,000 less than the $585,000 asked by the President.

The President made the request in order to meet the requirements of the Russell amendment, aimed specifically at FEPC, which prevents him from allocating any of his funds to agencies in existence for more than a year which have not been authorized by Congress.

In approving FEPC, the appropriations committee declared that the testimony of Chairman Malcolm Ross was "a clear, fair, dispassionate discussion of a democratic policy of national importance that deserves the earnest perusal and consideration of the House."

TECHNICAL HURDLES

FEPC, like many ather war agencies, is not set up in basic law and thus is technically liable to a point of order when provided for in an appropriation bill.

To take care of this situation, Rep. Clarence Cannon of Illinois, chairman of the appropriations committee, asked on Tuesday and promptly received unanimous consent of the House to waive points of order against the war agencies bill containing the FEPC appropriation.

But today, Rep. Malcolm Tarver of Georgia objected to this agreement on the ground that the full committee had not yet acted when it was reached.

When Speaker Sam Rayburn said the unanimous consent agreement still held, Rep. Francis Case, South Dakota Republican, appealed the ruling on a high-sounding parliamentary basis without mentioning FEPC.

5-26-44

Majority leader McCormick promptly moved to table Case's appeal, and this motion was carried 175 to 54. Polltax Democrats and Republicans who supported Case were decisvely beaten.

But Rep. Cannon in a surprise move asked "in fairness to everyone" that the agreement be vacated and that points of order be allowed specifically and solely against FEPC.

Rep. Marcantonio balked this move by objecting.

"All this parliamentary maneuvering is aimed at FEPC," he declared. "So is this unanimous consent request."

Cannon assured Marcantonio that FEPC would be safe and would not be subject to a point of order.

"I'm taking no chance," Marcantonio retorted. "I object."

From CIO President Philip Murray came full support for the full appropriation asked by the President in a letter to all members of the Appropriations Committee.

OWI And FEPC

Administration critics, particularly in Congress and in some political campaigns, have directed especially heavy attack against the Office of War Information and the president's Fair Employment Practice Committee. Much of the adverse comment on the FEPC centered around the fact that it operated on funds from the president's emergency fund and had never had the approval of Congress. It is consequently interesting and significant that the House appropriation committee, in recommending funds for the OWI for the next fiscal year, commended that agency for "making a valuable contribution to the war effort . . . and in direct aid of the military operations." And the FEPC won implied endorsement from the committee in its recommendation that $500,000 of a requested $585,000 operating fund be granted.

How account for this explicit and implicit attitude toward the two agencies in view of the extensive criticism to which they have been subjected?

Another Laurel For The FEPC

Daily World—Atlanta, Ga.

In its strident march toward victorious and triumphant democracy for all American citizens, the Fair Employment Practice Committee emerged with another laurel to its long chain last week, when an attempt to discharge 35 Negro women employes by the Pinaud Cosmetic Company was foiled by the Cosmetic, Soap and Perfumery Workers Union. 7-14-44

Benjamin Pross, Business Manager of the local A. F. of L., said of the attempted walk-out: "All workers, whether they be Jew or Gentile, Negro or white, receive the same protection from the Union. As far as the union is concerned, said Mr. Pross, a union member is a union member and will be treated on an equal basis." The white and colored women returned willingly to their jobs and all things are now satisfactorily settled.

The proud record of FEPC in this story can be duplicated throughout the country. In the western area over the past three months it has handled with reasonable success 193 cases growing out of discrimination. Two important railroads, the Pennsylvania and the Chicago and Northwestern have agreed to upgrade Negro employes from waiter to steward, thus flicking another scale from the long preserved occupational caste-wall in Philadelphia, the Office of War Manpower Commission announced that 68,436 Negro men and women were employed in the local Camden Market. This figure is considerably higher than the 17,602 Negroes employed during the entire 6-month period from July to December, 1943. The Chicago and Northwestern Railway has promoted Negro car cleaners to carmen's helpers and dining car waiters to steward. Thus the barriers against the employment of Negro workers, male and female, are breaking down rapidly under the double impact of a severe manpower crisis and the FEPC.

Despite this impressive record, the fight from certain quarters continues. Senator Russell of Georgia, together with Senator George, Congressman Ramspect and Gibson have pledged and actually are, fighting it in any "way they can". The recent hearing before the Senate saved the agency by the narrowest possible margin, due to the bitter and prolonged opposition from some southern Democrats are reactionary Republicans. Occasionally, a southern newspaper takes an editorial stand against the work and existence of FEPC, which turn out to be both shameful and shocking. 7-14-44

But to quote from the opening statement of Bartley C. Crum before the Railroads Hearings: "I submit, that in the emergency of the war, it is imperative that Negroes be allowed full and equal participation in all phases of the war program. We cannot measure the detrimental effect of race discrimation on the war program merely in terms of man-hours lost but by our own failure to use the loyalty and skills of Negro workers. This loss is compounded by an active undercurrent of bitterness among Negroes and other minorities."

We believe that the work of the FEPC will be continued. We believe that there will be a permanent FEPC. For as great as may be the impact of the war, the stress and strain of unemployment after the war will be more disastrous to Negro workers unless there is a government agency such as FEPC. This agency must not be killed or rendered impotent and Negroes north and south must look with suspicion on those who would rob them of this economic protection. 7-14-44

—By ROY WILKINS

Declares War on FEPC

War has been waged against the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice (FEPC) throughout its career, but on February 28 a public declaration of hostilities was made. From now on, FEPC is fighting for its life in a wide-open battle.

Mr. Wilkins

On February 28, a subcommittee of the Senate appropriations committee voted unanimously, in the language of the Associated Press, "to abolish President Roosevelt's Fair Employment Practices Committee." 3-11-44

The legislation was offered by Senator Russell (D., Ga.) as an amendment to the Independent Offices appropriation bill amounting to $8,500,000,000. Russell told reporters, "I hope it wipes out the Fair Employment Practice Committee."

That is plain talk that anyone can understand. The proposal is general in nature and is designed to prevent the transfer of funds to agencies a year or more old which have not been authorized directly by Congress. FEPC and about thirty other agencies are affected, but only FEPC was mentioned by name as the agency to be wiped out.

What Do They Mean?

Joining Senator Russell in condemning FEPC was, as might have been expected, Senator Maybank (D., S. C.) However, the serious aspect of the action is that the sub-committee was unanimous in adopting the Russell proposal. Here are the men who voted for it: Democrats, Carter Glass, (Va.), Kenneth McKellar, (Tenn.), John H. Bankhead, Ala.), Harry S. Truman, Miss.), Theodore F. Green, (R. I.), James M. Mead, (N. Y.), Russell and Maybank; Republicans, Gerald P. Nye, (N. D.), Styles Bridges, (N. Ham.), Wallace H. White, Mr. (Ma.), C. Wayland Brooks, (Ill.), and Clyde M. Reed, (Kans.) 3-11-44

Does Senator Mead of New York want his vote here interpreted as a desire to abolish FEPC? How about Truman of Missouri and Green of Rhode Island? Both of these men have thousands of Negro voters in their states. Also, the Republicans in Illinois, Kansas and Maine. Is this what the Negro voters may expect from Republican leadership?

Needless to say, the war on the FEPC is a war on Negroes.

We need FEPC or something like it or we will be completely at the mercy of prejudiced employers as of old—back in marginal economic slavery.

Ickes Warns Against FEPC Demobilization

Daily World—Atlanta, Ga.

8-6-44

CHICAGO—(SNS)— Equal wages and job rights for minority races—opened as a war time necessity—must continue throughout post-war America, Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of Interior, states in the August issue of NEGRO DIGEST published here.

In a candid article entitled, 'Will Fair Employment' be Demobilized?' Ickes cautions against allowing military demobilization to mean the demobilization of opportunity for any group of Americans to earn a decent living.

With veiled reference to opponents of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee, he warns that the idea of fair employment for all races must not be confused with "social equality," "segregation," or "Intermarriage."

"I have little patience with those who, in order to retain and justify their narrow and bigoted view, mix into this question of economic opportunity everything that they can think of in order to befog the issue....." Ickes remarked.

"If a man is good enough to carry our flag thro the shriek of shells and machine-gun fire of the battlefield." he continues;" if a man is competent to operate a machine producing essential goods in time of war, then he and others like him are entitled not by tolerance or by suffrance, but by right to equal opportunity to secure work."

ing sole responsibility.

It is an acknowledged fact that one-sided presentation of news does not make for national unity nor community good will. We believe that newspapers should be instruments for the public good. We further believe that partial presentation of news is grossly unfair to the total community. By and large the southern press has failed to tell the public the truth, the whole truth, about the FEPC. Such practice does not contribute to the development of sound community relationships.

The executive order establishing the FEPC states that, among other things, there shall be no discrimination in employment in war industries. The Atlanta Constitution states that Senator Russell "has no quarrel with the FEPC as created" and urges Mr. Russell to "keep this before the senate of the United States until the FEPC is abolished or forced to do only the job it was created to do." The Constitution's principal concern seems to be one of jurisdiction and authority. It states that "By no stretching of the point or imagination can it be said the FEPC had any business whatsoever dealing with the street railway business in Philadelphia."

In its necessary working relationship with the War Manpower Commission, the FEPC has accepted the War Manpower Commission's list of essential war industries as an operating definition. Included on that list are railroads and local street railway systems. We believe that "by no stretching of the point or imagination" can this war be won without the essential services of these two industries, and therefore agree with the War Manpower Commission in their inclusion on the list. We further believe that any law or order must be interpreted in order to be put into action. The FEPC, like all other organizations, must establish a basis for operation. What better definition of "war industries" can be had than that set forth by the War Manpower Commission, which is the agency responsible for the mobilization and utilization of the nation's manpower to win a war?

Therefore, it is our considered opinion that the FEPC is attempting to do "only the job it was created to do." And in this particular instance, we respectfully submit to the Atlanta Constitution that its position is not warranted by the facts.

Equal economic opportunity is one of the most important problems facing the American Negro today. Indeed, it is a major problem facing the nation and the world. Regardless of its critics, the FEPC represents the most tangible evidence on the part of our government to secure economic justice for those who face racial, religious, and national barriers. The test of any civilization is the degree to which it protects the rights of those who are unable to protect their own. The FEPC has done much to protect the rights of all minorities.

We believe that the majority of southern white people know that there must be equal economic opportunity for all if the problems of our region are to be solved. We believe that the majority of southern white people would support any effort to bring about economic justice, including that of the FEPC, if given an opportunity through a full and impartial presentation of facts. We believe that the southern white press has an obligation to all citizens to make such a presentation.

In the interests of a fair presentation of the facts, we request that this letter be published in full, and that it be placed as prominently in your paper as have been your criticisms.

Atlanta, Georgia

THE F. E. P. C.

Editor, Constitution: In spite of the fact that the majority of the nation's newspapers have long supported the efforts of the FEPC, the southern white press has continually attacked this agency. It has been gratifying that until recently, the Atlanta Constitution has taken little part in the majority of these attacks. However, on August 7 and August 11 it added its voice to other southern critics, attempting to place upon FEPC the blame for the Philadelphia strike. Instead of waiting for the facts in the case to be revealed by the federal grand jury, and instead of recognizing that this strike has been condemned by many of the nation's leading papers as an undemocratic demonstration with many underlying causes, these southern critics have chosen to indict the FEPC as having sole responsibility.

Permanent FEPC

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY has put itself neatly on the spot on the racial question by adopting a plank which sidesteps every hot issue in this field.

Faced with the alternative of antagonizing already hostile Southern Democrats or offending the Negro voters, who have been predominantly Democratic since Mr. Roosevelt took office, the Administration's strategy was to take a chance on Negro loyalty based on the record of the last 12 years rather than risk a further split in the party.

An examination of the Negro press since the convention shows considerable bitterness over this turn of events. Last week's Afro-American, a paper with a large colored readership in both Washington and Baltimore, lined up in three parallel columns the racial plank of the Democrats in 1940, the highly generalized "postcard" version of 1944, and this year's Republican plank. The Republican position is obviously a strong one, promising as it does abolition of the poll tax, antilynching legislation, elimination of discrimination in the armed forces, and the establishment of a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission.

"This 1944 Democratic convention plank," says the Afro-American, "is not only disappointing to colored Democrats, it is unsatisfactory to colored people. Certain it is that the great Democratic Party which bid openly for the colored vote in 1940 has withdrawn the glad hand in just four years."

Strategic Importance

The Negro vote is not of great strategic importance in Democratic Maryland, and is nonexistent in the District of Columbia. But this sort of reaction is typical also of such places as New York, Chicago and Detroit, where a large bloc of Negro votes may help to swing the election one way or the other. Michigan went Republican by only a fraction of 1 per cent in 1940.

Harry McAlpin, Washington correspondent of the Negro Newspaper Publishers' Association, in a syndicated story takes the view that the Republicans have a wide lead in the race for Negro votes. The only way the Democrats can catch up will be to back antidiscrimination legislation such as the bill for a permanent FEPC. "Negroes want such legislation," he says. "To rebuff them twice in a row wouldn't be too smart."

Congressional hearings on legislation to establish a permanent FEPC are scheduled to take this month. The House Committee on Labor and Education, chaired by liberal Representative Mary Norton, will see that the question gets a fair hearing. The corresponding committee of the Senate, chaired by Senator Thomas of Utah, has designated a subcommittee headed by Senator Dennis Chavez of New Mexico—an outstanding defender of our Mexican and Spanish-American minority—to hold hearings. Thus committee reports favorable to a permanent FEPC may be expected.

Whatever the form taken by the legislation, it will have a good chance of passage. The Republicans are committed to support such a bill, although many of them may have had in mind purely advisory or otherwise watered-down powers for the FEPC. Democrats from outside the South will find it difficult to oppose the bill.

The present FEPC has done its job with fairness and restraint. In the first 18 months of its existence it handled nearly 10,000 complaints of discrimination in employment and has recently been adjusting about 250 cases per month.

The FEPC deals mainly with Negro cases, but it handles many others. About 9 per cent of all complaints involve religious discrimination against Jews and other minor sects, 6 per cent involve national origin, and 5 per cent discrimination against aliens.

In October the FEPC is scheduled to hold hearings in the Southwest on cases of alleged discrimination against Mexicans, our second largest minority group. At present 172 cases involving Mexicans are pending, or 8 per cent of the entire case load.

Insure Order

A permanent FEPC will help to insure the orderly solution of racial difficulties in the dangerous period of demobilization ahead. What happened after the last war should be sufficient warning. As the Swedish scientist, Gunnar Myrdal, says in his "American Dilemma:" "The homecoming Negro soldier met the suspicion and fears of the Southern whites. In the North, their new footholds in industry were contested by anxious white jobholders in the postwar depression. A wave of lynchings swept the South and even more bloody race riots swept the North . . . There were riots in 26 American cities in 1919."

History may repeat itself unless we prepare to deal with racial disputes over jobs through the orderly processes of government. The FEPC has become a symbol of fair treatment to our various minorities. Quite apart from political considerations, we owe the fighting men of these groups a guarantee that they will not encounter unfair discrimination when they come home. Any sidestepping of this responsibility can only lead to bitterness.

STRIKE LAID TO FEPC BY SOUTHERN GROUP

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3 (AP)—A bitter fight over the Fair Employment Practices Committee was revived today as Southern Congressmen blamed the Philadelphia transit strike on that agency and Representative Manaco, Democrat, of Georgia, led off the attack on the FEPC—if this committee is not disbanded there is no way to prevent violence there forecrat, Alabama, said "the bloodshed and lost man-hours in defense industries in Philadelphia is the direct result of the operations of the FEPC." He said the Philadelphia racial disturbances were the opposite of a possible return to race riots like that in the first World War.

Representative Gibson, Democrat, of Georgia, said the agency and "agitators" for the strike, and said racial problems cannot be solved by legislation, an FEPC or Federal orders.

WE MADE ROOSEVELT CREATE FEPC

Call—Kansas City, Mo.

Franklin D. Roosevelt is entitled to credit for the new places we have under his administration, not for the new jobs in industry. His only part in our getting them was the executive order which put the Fair Employment Practices Committee to work. But we Negroes made him do that! Ours was the arm wielding the hammer. Our insistence, not F.D. R's voluntary action, broke the government's practics which made empty words of talk about equality. 9-15-44

Right here in Kansas City the move originated that stopped the federal education and employment bureaus from passing the buck whereby Negroes were refused training "because they would not be employed" and refused work "because they were not trained." Now that we are offered party pledges for our support, we dare anybody to take from us credit for what we did! We are a real power and we insist upon being respected as such! The white man who would cheapen us is our enemy! The Negro who does it is both fool and knave!

Through the 12 years Negroes were a strong factor in Roosevelt's triumphs, he never once was the outspoken champion of our equal rights which Wendell Willkie was in 1940 or Henry Wallace was in July, 1944. Give his acts full value, but no encroaching on credit which is the Negro's!

9-15-44

We call attention to this matter with no hope of stopping politicians from following their usual practices of claiming everything. But let no Negro belittle his own. These 1944 platform bids for our vote will never be repeated if we are weaklings instead of a sturdy self-reliant group that told the President that we insist on our share of work with the same insistance that the government insisted on our sharing of the fighting.

White Supremacy Urged During Debate on FEPC

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.

7-1-44

By HARRY McALPIN

WASHINGTON—(NNPA)—Declaring themselves to be free of prejudice against colored people, six Southern Senators last week argued for white supremacy during the debate on the appropriation for the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

Leaders in the fight against the bill were Senators Theodore G. Bilbo and James O. Eastland, of Mississippi; Richard B. Russell and Walter F. George, of Georgia; Lister Hill of Alabama, and John L. McClellan, of Arkansas, all Democrats.

Warning the body that they might be forced to select colored girls as stenographers, Bilbo declared, "When they get one, all the B.O. powders on earth will not dissipate the odoriferous aromo permeating their offices."

Government Agencies Hit

McClellan, who with Bilbo declared social equality and intermarriage to be the dream of every colored person, deplored the practice in government agencies of permitting colored and white girls to work, eat and use the same rest rooms together. 7-1-44

Following his outburst, Eastland jumped to his feet to say, "Is it not worse that white girls should be forced to take dictation from a group of burr-headed 'n----rs' and 'n----r' supervisors in the departments?"

Despite efforts by Russell and Hill to prolong the debate until time for the Republican Senators to leave for the GOP convention, the bill was passed, twenty-three Democrats and sixteen Republicans voting against twenty-one opponents.

Southern daily speaks out for permanent FEPC

Tribune — Los Angeles, Calif.
9-25-44

DURHAM, N.C.—A strong editorial in the Durham Morning Herald, Sept. 11, pulled no punches in striking at the social equality argument against the creation of a permanent FEPC. Declaring such theories unfair, undemocratic, and un-American, the editorial pointed out that "Equal opportunity has nothing whatever to do with 'social equality' — whatever those words mean. Equal opportunity means just what it says — a chance for every one according to his character and abilities, plus equal pay for equal work. This, and no more, is what the Fair Employment Practices Committee has stood for and does stand for.

"Now a strong fight is ahead if a permanent FEPC is not to be blocked. Hearings in the House and Senate committee rooms show that the Negro is still being discriminated against. He still does not get the same pay the white man gets for the same work. He is still the first to go when there are cutbacks. And the Philadelphia transit strike showed that the blame isn't entirely management's. It goes deep into the ranks of union men and women who ought to know better.

9-25-44

"There are no new arguments against discrimination. There are just the old ones. It is unfair. It is undemocratic. It is un-American. Or, if such an appeal falls on deaf ears, we may add that it breaks down wage levels by creating a sub-marginal class. It creates racial strife in which the white man suffers just as much as the Negro—maybe more. It hurts us among our friends abroad. Wise, civilized and patriotic Americans will take their stand against it."

Twisted Logic Heard in D. C.

8-11-44

By HARRY McALPIN

WASHINGTON, D.C.—(NNPA)—In the neatest bit of twisted logic heard on the floor of Congress since Bilbo, Eastland and McClelland made their tirades against the FEPC in June, Rep. Henry Larcade (D. of La.) made a plea for unity in America by attacking those who urge democracy for all and defending the Philadelphia strikers.

The first 72 words of his "diatribe" sounded like the argument of any believer in human decency and democracy. Those 72 words would have been worthy of a Lincoln.

They were: "Mr. Speaker, at a time when this country is engaged in the greatest war of all time, and has been and is fighting for its very survival and existence, and at a time when unity should be the watchword of every citizen so that this country can put forth its every effort in the war effort, we are confronted with the sad spectacle of those who. . . ."

At this point, any one listening or reading his speech would have thought Larcade was going to lambast the strikers in Philadelphia for crippling the war production of the second most critical area in the nation because they objected to eight Negroes being hired as bus operators and street-car operators. But such persons don't know Congressman Larcade. He said instead:

8-11-44

"We are confronted with the sad spectacle of those who are taking advantage of the situation to foster their ideals, misguided though they be, with a view of agitating certain reforms and social evolutions which are disrupting and disorganizing our present life and customs, not only in the South but also in the North."

He then accuses government agencies and the administration for fomenting the agitation and creating situations such as the Philadelphia transit employees' strike. "There is in progress a strike in the City of Philadelphia, the City of Brotherly Love," he says, "which threatens to have dire consequences, and which may result in bloodshed."

So far as the South is concerned, said Larcade, all that we ask is that we be let alone to handle and solve this problem in our own way. We have done it in the past and we will do so in the future."

Then he delivers the inevitable threat which usually pours forth in such rantings—"Mr. Speaker, this is a serious matter, and I am frank to say that I am taking this opportunity to warn all of those who are fomenting this matter that they are doing their country a great disservice. And so far as the South is concerned we will never surrender our principles on this question, no matter what the consequence.

8-11-44

He warned all who "are agitating this racial question" that they must be responsible for "blood on their hands from the innocent and misguided who they are inflaming in an impossible effort."

Ross to Attend

Malcolm Ross, FEPC Chairman, will be one of three sitting at the hearing in the Bar Assn. Bldg. The others are Boris Shishkin of the AFL and Charles H. Houston, attorney.

In one case, Lawson said, segregation of Negroes resulted in a ship missing a convoy and being tied up for several days at Norfolk, Va. The ship in question employed Negro stewards. At the last minute, two were dropped. The only qualified men at the time were white stewards. The STU refused to approve them because they would not mix steward staffs.

Lawson said discrimination had resulted only in not the delay of cargo ships, but also in ships sailing short-handed, "thus endangering the lives of every man aboard."

Charges Against SIU

The SIU will be charged with:

¶ Discriminatory specifications to the Manning and Recruiting Organization of the War Shipping Administration when requesting men.

¶ Signing of contracts barring Negroes from specific jobs. (Lawson said Negroes were hired mainly for jobs as stewards and messboys.)

10-6-44

¶ Acquiesence by the operators of the ships in following discrimination set by the union, No company, however, will be involved at the hearing.

Although the SIU has been notified by the FEPC of the hearing, union officials have not replied as yet.

The union, which claims 30,000 members, 25,000 of whom work on the East Coast, says it has about 2000 Negro members.

Sessions Held in Secret

Call — Kansas City, Mo.

Believe House Committee in Favor of Agency

8-31-44

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON. (ANP) —The Fair Employment Practice committee was attacked, defended and justified in various official quarters here over the week-end as the struggle to keep this agency in business took on serious proportions. Among the outstanding developments in this respect were these:

Outstanding Developments

1. The house appropriations subcommittee began formal hearings on the agency's request for $585,000 on Thursday, and by Saturday morning had completed the hearings, having listened to all the top officials of the anti-bias committee.

Although the sessions were executive, it was learned and later confirmed by an attache of the house group that Rep. William L. Dawson (D) of Chicago had appeared and entered a strong statement in behalf of FEPC.

Others testifying were Chairman Malcolm Ross, Deputy Chairman George M. Johnson, Will Maslow, director of field operations; Theodore Jones, administrative assistant; John A. Davis, chief, reveiw and analysis.

3-31-44

2. Senate Republicans, flinching at the derisive remarks of Sen. Russell (D) of Georgia, reversed their earlier position and defeated the Buck amendment which would have excluded FEPC from the bill designed to compel independent agencies a year or more old to come before congress for an appropriation.

Sen. Buck (R) of Delaware, at the request of Edgar G. Brown, had entered the amendment to the Russell measure and called it up on Friday. On a record vote it was upheld 36 to 22. Eleven Democrats and 24 Republicans supported while 19 Democrats and 3 Republicans opposed.

On the vote to reverse, the score was 33 to 25 with 24 Democrats joining with nine Republicans to switch, and eight Democrats and 16 Rep[illegible]ns holding fast.

Adopt McKel[illegible]endment

3. The senate adopted the McKellar amendment to the" independent offices supply bill which would call for senate confirmation of all jobs paying $4500 or more in salary. FEPC has bauot 25 jobs subject to this requirement.

3-31-44

Reports are that the house subcommittee did not show an unfriendly attitude to those who testified. Competent and informed sources say that Majority Leader John J. McCormack (D) of Massachusetts and Minority Leader Joseph Martin (R) of Massachusetts both had given the nod to the appropriation bill, accounting for this attitude.

Lashing out at the Republicans who had voted in favor of the Buck amendment, Russell declared that "the interest and votes of the great body of colored folks in many states has had considerable to do with the action the senate has just taken." He added that "the influence of these voters is such that in a case in which a constitutional principle is involved, principle can fall and be crushed into the earth, so long as the votes of senators are cast in accordance with the wishes" of the group.

3-31-44

Senator Bennet Clark (D) of Missouri could not see that the Buck amendment was necessary since the FEPC, by virtue of having submitted a budget, had eliminated itself from the effects of the Russell proposal. Russell, however, still clung to the possibility that the appropriations committee might deny the agency funds.

This poll tax business is a tempest in a teapot and I think the south [illegible]ould maintain its guard [illegible] the storm blows over and [illegible] the two races can agree [illegible] among themselves."

Discussing racial relations, the governer asserted that "much of the difficulty we encounter comes from misguided preachers and pseudo-up[illegible] writers, politicians and [illegible] seekers," has resulted in a spirit of suspicion on the part of Negroes.

On the poll tax question, Sparks asserted that "one point of attack which is often made by the [illegible] is that the poll tax disenfranchising poll tax is what is particularly called the south. . . Our northern administration laws, not poll taxes, are the real barriers to Negro voters.

Gov. Sparks Hits F.E.P.C. Again

Daily World — Atlanta
10-12-44

AUBURN, Ala. (SNS) — Predicting a "monopolistic trend" after the war, Governor Chauncey Sparks said here Tuesday that the south must "guard" the small industries which it has and "provide others through reconversion and throught our own personal and natural resources."

Speaking before the twenty-sixth annual convention of Alabama Kiwanians the governor also discussed the question of racial segregation the poll tax issue and the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

He described the FEPC as "a thing as hostile to the genius of American government as anything

Southerners Defeated In Fight to Kill F.E.P.C.

Courier-Journal-Louisville, Ky.
6-21-44

Washington, June 20 (AP) —Disregarding embittered Southern assertions that the United States is being pushed into communism or national socialism, the Senate declined on a 39-to-21 roll-call today to kill the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee.

The vote was on a $500,000 appropriation for the F.E.P.C. in a $1,030,000,000 war agencies supply bill.

Thirteen Southern Senators who opposed the fund were supported by seven Republicans and one western Democrat, Johnson of Colorado, but sixteen Republicans joined with twenty-three Democrats to override their objections. Senator Pepper of Florida was the only Democrat from the deep South who voted with the majority.

Minor Concessions Salvaged.

The F.E.P.C. was set up by President Roosevelt's executive order and was instructed to combat racial and religious discrimination in industry.

The Southerners salvaged only a few minor concessions — war contractors whose contracts were threatened with cancellation because of alleged discrimination would have the right to appeal to the President, and a prohibition was erected against Government seizure of any plant for its refusal to conform to rules set up by F.E.P.C.

Southerner after Southerner took the floor to castigate the agency as tending to stir up trouble rather than to alleviate friction between the races. White-haired Senator George (D., Ga.), face flushed, thundered that by approving the F.E.P.C. fund, the nation would be taking "a long step toward converting our economic system into a Communistic or National Socialistic system."

George Warns G.O.P.

Turning toward the Republican side of the chamber, George declared, "This may get you votes in 1944, but it won't in 1946, or 1948, or thereafter." The final aim of the persons backing F.E.P.C., he declared, is taking away the control of private property from the owners.
6-21-44

Senator McClellan (D., Ark.) declared:

"When white and Negro women are compelled to sit side by side at their work, use the same toilet facilities, eat at the same table, it is an encroachment on the Constitutional rights of both races, if either wants to be segregated from the other!"

Negro "Dictation" Resented.

At that point Senator Eastland (D., Miss.) arose to shout:

"Isn't it even worse for decent white girls to have to take dictation from a lot of burr-headed niggers in the departments?"

The debate even brought a suggestion that Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt become "Queen of that Greater Liberia."

Senator Bilbo (D., Miss.), for years an advocate of resettling American Negroes in West Africa, said 2,500,000 Negroes had seconded his idea and added, "I do not see why Mrs. Roosevelt or anyone else should object to it."

In fact, Bilbo said, if his resettlement plan ever succeeded, "I might entertain the proposition of making her Queen of that Greater Liberia."
6-21-44

Lucas Supports F.E.P.C.

The main argument of the Southerners was that F.E.P.C. was aiming for social equality rather than against economic discrimination.

Supporting the F.E.P.C. Senator Lucas (D., Ill.) said:

"Job discrimination is indefensible when manpower obttlenecks are impeding the war effort."

Senators Barkley of Kentucky and Willis of Indiana voted against striking out the fund. Senator Jackson of Indiana was paired against, while Senator Chandler of Kentucky was not listed in the vote.

Wrangle In Congress Over FEPC Renewed As Hearings Opened

Herald-Tribune, N.Y.
6-1-44

WASHINGTON— (AP) —The congressional controversy over the Fair Employment Practices Committee was renewed Thursday as the House labor committee opened hearings on legislation to set up a permanent federal agency patterned after FEPC.

Three Southern members of the labor committee, Reps. Ramspeck (D., Ga.), Fisher (D., Tex.) and Abernethy (D., Miss.), predicted consideration of the measure would "only promote disunity in wartime."

Chairman Mary T. Norton (D., N. J.) disagreed, declaring, "I regret this emotional disturbance created over the FEPC" and adding "We hope to conduct these hearings on a high plane without all the bitter shouting and hurrahing which occurred in the House last week.

"This issue does not deal just with the Negro, as some of the Southerners seem to believe," she told a reporter. "It vitally concerns every minority group in the country and we are determined to hold fair hearings and develop all the facts."
6-1-44

A. Philip Randolph and Dr. Allan Knight Chalmers, co-chairmen of the national council for a permanent FEPC, sided with her, asserting in a statement, "We think it essential that the question of discrimination be faced now to insure that the causes for which our boys are fighting overseas shall also be won at home."

Initial witnesses included authors of two bills to set up the permanent FEPC, Reps. Scanlon (D., Pa.) and Dawson (D., Ill.).

Their measures, along with one by Rep. Lafollette (R., Ind.), would provide for establishment of a seven-member Fair Employment Practices Commission with power to prevent discrimination in employment because of race, color or creed.

F.E.P.C. Gets Senate Praise And Blame

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky.
6-20-44

Washington, June 19 (AP)—The President's Fair Employment Practices Committee was alternately condemned and praised in Senate debate today.

Southern Democrats, led by Senator Eastland of Mississippi, pictured the agency set up by President Roosevelt to handle racial discrimination disputes as a vehicle of communism, while Senator Chavez (D., N. M.) called it a valuable link in the chain of good will the Nation is seeking to forge with Latin-American neighbors.

Appropriation At Stake.

Hours of speechmaking eliminated all possibility of a vote before tomorrow afternoon on an amendment by Senator Russell (D., Ga.) to strike from the $1,030,000,000 war agencies appropriations bill a $500,000 allowance to finance F.E.P.C. activities beginning July 1.

Asserting Chairman Sidney Hillman of the C.I.O. Political Action Committee is the "driving force" behind the F.E.P.C., Senator Eastland described Hillman as "just as much a Communist as Stalin himself," and added that if given the appropriation, the agency would use it to "deprive management of control of business" by a course of "intimidation and coercion."
6-20-44

Chavez Defends Agency.

Chavez, asserting that opposition to the agency is based upon "a misunderstanding of its fine work," declared its activities have done more to bring about actual good will from Latin America "than the many millions spent by the co-ordinator's office, by Lend-Lease agencies, or by the former Board of Economic Warfare combined."

He declared he had witnessed commendable progress by the F.E.P.C. in ending racial discriminations against citizens of Mexican and Latin-American extraction, particularly in the Southwest.

THE BATTLE OF WASHINGTON, II

PM N.Y. N.Y.

Southerners Drop Filibuster But Prepare to Fight FEPC

6-15-44

By NATHAN ROBERTSON
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 15.—Southern Senators prepared today to debate the appropriation for the FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee) for at least two days, but denied they were going to filibuster against the appropriation.

Talk of filibuster against the FEPC appropriation subsided yesterday after a strategy meeting of the Southern poll taxers at which cooler heads apparently prevailed. Spokesmen for the group said they realized they could not afford to filibuster at this time against a bill carrying appropriations for the war agencies.

But the Southern Senators said they were planning two days of debate to protest against continuation of the agency for the prevention of discrimination in the employment of war workers.

Target for Today

Sen. Richard Russell (D., Ga.) said the debate would be aimed at the use of executive orders to create agencies, which he called "a new technique in government."

"This will be a clear-cut test," Russell said, "of whether Senators are sincerely for orderly procedure in government or for bureaucracy created by executive order. I don't believe the President has the constitutional right to create an agency. That should be done by Congress."

Friends of the FEPC pointed out that the same objection Russell was raising against the FEPC could be made against 13 of the 17 agencies for which appropriations are carried in the War Agencies bill. The FEPC is one of the smallest of these agencies with an appropriation of only $500,000.

No Volunteers

At their strategy meeting, the Southerners agreed not only to fight against continuation of the FEPC but also to support two hamstringing amendments. One by Sen. Burnet Maybank (D., S. C.) would prevent the use of volunteer workers by the FEPC. The other by Russell would limit the hiring of members of minority groups.

The Maybank amendment is aimed at the use of social workers. The Southerners say many volunteer social workers have been used by the FEPC to investigate complaints.

Russell's amendment would prohibit the use of more than 25 per cent of the FEPC appropriation for the employment of members of any race or other minority group comprising less than 15 per cent of the national population.

Hill, Bankhead, Other Southern News-Bham, Ala. Senators Lose Fight Over FEPC

6-21-44

BY FRED TAYLOR
Washington Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Sens. Lister Hill and John H. Bankhead were joined by a few other senators, in the forefront of Southern senators who waged a losing fight Tuesday against the president's Fair Employment Practices Committee, with Hill taking the floor in the afternoon to denounce the FEPC as hindering the war effort.

The scrap by the Southerners, including seven Republicans, was made in an attempt to lop off the $500,000 House-approved appropriation for the FEPC, which was voted by the Senate 39 to 21

"Congress never authorized the FEPC and never intended that any money appropriated should go for such an agency," Sen. Hill remind ed his colleagues, in denouncing its powers never having been de- fined and no limits placed thereon.

"It was set up under the guise of helping the war effort. Instead it by executive order un- for appeal from its decisions. The committee, not having been by an act of Congress and violation of and contrary to our war powers

The committee makes no contribution whatever to this end, but on the contrary, impairs it."

FLORIDA'S SEN. CLAUDE PEPPER was the only Southern senator voting to continue the FEPC. 6-21-44

But the Southern battlers, some of whom contended before the Senate that continuation of the FEPC would be another step toward plunging the nation into communism, won a few points in getting last-minute amendments adopted. One provided that war contractors, who might be faced with cancellation of contracts because of any alleged discrimination, would have the right to appeal to the president. Another set up a prohibition against government seizure of any plant for its refusal to conform to rules established by the agency.

Sen. Bankhead, who had been tied up several days with House-Senate conferees over highly controversial OPA legislation, was unable to join Sens. Hill, George, Bilbo, Eastland and others in speaking against the FEPC appropriation, but he took time out from the committee deliberations to vote against it. 6-21-44

BANKHEAD EMPHASIZED HIS OPPOSITION to the agency and expressed regret funds were appropriated to continue its operation.

Senate Votes FEPC Budget

Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—(AP) Overriding the impassioned protests of southern senators, the senate refused by a vote of 39 to 21 today to strike from a catch-all appropriation bill a $500,000 fund for the President's fair employment practices committee.

Shortly before the vote, Senator George, Democrat, Georgia, told his colleagues grimly that approval of the FEPC found would be "a long step toward converting our economic system into a Communistic or national socialistic system." 6-21-44

George said his conclusion was based on his conviction that the committee intended to take away from businessmen the right to control their own businesses by telling them whom they could hire, fire or promote.

The committee was set up last year to prevent racial discrimination in war plants and government agencies.

RUSSELL AMENDMENT

The senate later adopted an amendment requested by Russell to prohibit government seizure of any plant for its refusal to conform to rules set up by the FEPC. The vote was 27 to 25.

Russell said among other things it would prohibit seizure of railroads which failed to conform to regulations of the FEPC.

"It ought to be enough to take government business away, without taking over industrial plants or other properties," he said.

Denouncing what he said were efforts to "divide the American people into classes," Senator George called for the abolishment of the President's fair employment practices committee. George said the agency had done nothing but "create disturbances."

GEORGE'S DENUNCIATION

"There is no more certain way to destroy this republic than by dividing the American people into classes," he asserted. "Within the last five or 10 years a deeper schism has been driven into American life than ever before, a deeper racial prejudice, a deeper class prejudice." 6-21-44

George, saying the FEPC's purpose is not to obtain equal salaries for Negroes doing similar work to that performed by whites, added: "I'd be entirely ashamed of myself if I were willing to deny to any man, regardless of his race, color or creed, full, fair and equal compensation."

The "main purpose" of the FEPC, he continued, "is to establish something like social equality."

Here is the vote:

For striking the fund—(21)

Democrats for (14): Bankhead, Bilbo, Byrd, Connally, Eastland, George, Hill, Johnson (Colo.), Maybank, McClellan, McKellar, Overton, Russell, Stewart.

Republicans for (7): Brewster, Rushfield, Gurney, Holman, Millikin, Robertson, White.

Against striking the fund—(39)

Democrats against (23): Barkley, Chavez, Gerry, Gillette, Guffey, Hatch, Kilgore, Lucas, Maloney, McFarland, Meade, Murdock, Murray, O'Mahoney, Pepper, Radcliffe, Thomas (Okla.), Thomas (Utah), Tunnell, Wagner, Wallgren, Walsh (Mass.), Walsh (N. J.).

Republicans against (15): Aiken, Burton, Butler, Capper, Cordon, David, Ferguson, Reed, Revercomb, Shipstead, Taft, Vandenberg, Weeks, Wherry, Willis.

The following pairs were announced: Bailey, Democrat, for striking the FEPC fund and Clark (Mo.), Democrat, against. Caraway, Democrat, for and Truman, Democrat, against. Smith, Democrat, for and Jackson, Democrat, against. Andrews, Democrat, for and McCarran, Democrat, against. O'Daniel, Democrat, for and Buck, Republican, against. Ellender, Democrat, for and Tydings, Democrat, against.

Not voting but announced as opposed to striking out the fund:

Brooks, Langer, Tobey, Wiley and Danaher, Republicans; Green, Downey and Wheeler, Democrats, and La Follette, Progressive.

FEPC Due to Get Senate OK Despite Polltaxers

PM. New York, N.Y. 6-20-44

Both Sides Anxious to Reach Decision to Speed Adjournment

By NATHAN ROBERTSON
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 20—The FEPC (Fair Employment Practice Committee) is expected to win another year of life in the Senate today despite the bitter opposition of Southern polltax Senators.

The Southerners have been tossing the wildest kind of charges against the FEPC for the past few days, but there is little sign that they have picked up many votes outside of their own ranks.

Only two or three Republicans to whom the Southerners are appealing for help stayed to listen yesterday as Sen. James O. Eastland (D., Miss.) charged that the FEPC was part of a communist plot to take over the management of business. He tried to paint all of the leading officials of the agency as communist.

The FEPC was defended by Sen. James A. Mead (D., N. Y.), Arthur Capper (R., Kan.) and Dennis Chavez (D., N. M.). Mead warned the Senate that to destroy the FEPC now in the midst of war for the Four Freedoms would "leave America the laughing stock of the world."

Adjournment Sought

Although Southern opposition has held up the vote now for a week, both sides claimed they wanted a decision today so the Senate could get on to other business and adjourn for the conventions this week end. Sen. Theodore Bilbo (D., Miss.) was the only remaining Southerner scheduled to speak. But an attempt to fix a time for a vote was blocked yesterday ml Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D., Tenn.). 6-20-44

Friends of the FEPC were confident of the outcome of the vote in view of the withdrawal by Sen. John Danaher (R., Conn.), of his amendment for a permanent FEPC. Danaher, a strong supporter of the agency, who has been working in close collaboration with Chairman Malcolm Ross, withdrew the amendment at the agency's request, so that the issue would come on the FEPC appropriation.

Eastland reached a new high in demogoguery in his speech against the FEPC. He charged that the FEPC was created in violation of law and was being used to "coerce and intimidate business interests." He said if the Senate approved the appropriation for the agency it would be "placing our stamp of approval on a dictatorship."

"If Congress cannot stop that procedure," Eastland said, referring to the activities of the FEPC, "our Republic is dead."

Uses Red Bogey

Contending that virtually all of the members of the FEPC and its high officials were Communists, Eastland said "these Communists, if given this appropriation will use it to displace management and control over American industry." Eastland added that "my job as a Senator is to protect the business of this country from Communism."

The vaguest kind of "evidence" was used by Eastland to link members of the FEPC, and its officials, with Communism. Most of it came from a statement placed in the Congressional Record by Rep. John Rankin (D., Miss.), which tried to paint Boris Shiskin, of the American Federation of Labor, a member of the FEPC, as Communist because he once belonged to the Washington Book Shop. John Brophy, of the CIO, was condemned because he once wrote an article for Equal Justice, the organ of the International Labor Defense, and once "sent greetings" to the National Negro Congress.

Sen. James Mead

Eastland charged that Sidney Hillman, head of the CIO Political Action Committee, would have "great influence" over the FEPC and denounced him as "just as much a Communist as Stalin himself." 6-20-44

Defends Appropriation

Chavez, in the first defense of the FEPC, said the $500,000 appropriation for the agency would do more good than the millions of dollars spent by other agencies to better relations with Latin America.

Protesting discrimination against Mexicans and others of Spanish ancestry, Chavez cited a war hero named Martinez who was awarded a Congressional Medal of Honor for his valor at Attu.

"You will give Martinez a medal of honor for dying," Chavez said, "but refuse to give his brother or his father a job, and then refuse to appropriate for the FEPC which is trying to do something about it."

Sen. Mead said the FEPC was created to see that every man, woman and child could "make his contribution to the war effort." He said a survey had shown that 51 per cent of the corporations had policies discriminating against Negroes at a time when their services were desperately needed for the war.

Fair Employment Group Called Illegal By Russell

Courier-Journal-Louisville, Ky. 6-17-44

Washington, June 16 (AP)—President Roosevelt's Fair Employment Practices Committee was accused in the Senate today of attempting to impose "government by blackjack" by withholding war contracts from employers who do not comply with its antiracial discrimination orders.

Chairman's Pay Is Cut.

Senator Russell (D., Ga.), leading a fight to cut off the F.E.P.C.'s $500,000 appropriation, made a bid for Republican support by referring to the agency as "approval. clear-cut example of government by executive decree" and, then, amendment to cut the F.E.P.C. facing the G.O.P. side of the priation bill, the Senate voted to chamber declaring:

"We all know," he said, "that the war contract in these days is the are in the position of having to accept the F.E.P.C. dictates or go out of business. It amounts to government by blackjack."

Chairman Ross Is Slated To Be First Witness

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga
3-23-44

By ERNEST E. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Hearings on the budget of the Fair Employment Practice committee will begin today, it is learned, and Chairman Malcolm Ross will be the first to appear before the house appropriations committee.

Thus far opponents of FEPC have been the more outspoken among those members of the congress who have ventured comments at all. Comments solicited from various members of the sub committee handling the supply bill, however elicited the general opinion that there are some who will maintain an open mind.

TABER OPPONENT

Reps. Starnes of Alabama and Taber of New York, the latter a Republican, have already identified themselves with the opposition, as well as has Sen. Russell in the upper chamber.

Viewed with concern also is the resolution which has been placed in the hopper by Sen. McCarran, Democrat of Nevada, which would establish a commitee to investigate 'all executive orders of the President, and directives, rules and regulations issued by or under authority of any department or independent agency of the executive branch." Particular regard would be paid to the "source of constitutional or legislative authority" upon which directives and rules are based, 'their validity and the effect and manner of their enforcement."

Sen. Russell has already declared that he intends to eliminate FEPC "any way I can." Rep. Taber said the FEPC "hasn't made a very good reputation for itself,' and expressed his "suspicion of it'

STARNES BITTER

Starnes said the agency has "no warrant in either law or logic." He contended that "no government, federal or state, has any right to tell any sort of private business what persons it shall hire or fire. It's known that colored charwomen have been forced into government positions as clerks and secretaries," he added. 3-23-44

Rep. Ludlow (D) of Indiana said he is "very much opposed to discrimination in government and in industry." He added that he is "certainly in favor" of the work of the committee and will maintain an "open mind."

Another open mind was that of Rep. Woodrum of Virginia. "If I had to pass on it. (FEPC) now on the basis of what I know now I wouldn't think it much good." He said he got his knowledge from reading recent comments in the newspapers. He prefers to hear the committee first before judging. Woodrum said he expects to be a conferee on the Russell amendment if it gets to a deadlock with the house, and offered that as further reason for keeping an open mind.

FAMILIAR WITH WORK 3-23-44

Rep. Jed Johnson of Oklahoma said he is "very familiar with the committee," and didn't care to discuss it. Rabaut of Michigan referred to his record and assured that his action now would be no different than the record would show. He promised "fair and just cosideration," and said he believes FEPC has done some good.'

Other members of the sub-committee could not be reached. Two of them were out of town.

FEPC

Post - Washington, D.C. 3-7-44

The President's Fair Employment Practices Committee was created by executive order and financed out of presidential funds. Congress has never given it either an authorization or an appropriation. Presumably, it would cease to exist, therefore, if Congress enacts the Russell amendment forbidding executive transfer of funds to agencies a year or more old unless they have been specifically authorized by Congress. Indeed, this consequence appears to be one of Senator Russell's purposes. We have already expressed editorial approval of the general reform proposed by the Senator. But elimination of the FEPC seems to us an exceedingly unfortunate by-product.

The FEPC was established in the summer of 1941 at a time when Negroes felt keenly resentful of discrimination against their race in war industries. Some of them had projected a "march on Washington" as a form of protest. This explosive demonstration was called off when the President set up the FEPC, which was generally accepted by Negroes as evidence that the Federal Government recognized the justice of their grievances and would take effective steps to remedy them. It cannot be said that the FEPC has been more than moderately effective. Working in an area of deeply entrenched prejudices, it sought patiently to open job opportunities for Negroes. Our manpower shortage and the need for all-out production strengthened the clear logic of its efforts. It did not solve the problem of employment discrimination in the United States; but at least it satisfied Negroes that a solution was being sought. 3-7-44

A year ago the FEPC was rejuvenated and given additional powers. Under the chairmanship of Malcolm Ross it has pressed, still patiently but with fresh vigor, to utilize the skills and energies of Negroes in the war effort. Not long ago it called a number of the country's railroads and certain labor unions to account for their flagrantly discriminatory practices. No doubt this is what has brought down upon the agency the wrath of some Soutnern Congressmen. From the point of view of the national welfare, indeed from any democratic point of view, it is a wholly misguided wrath. The FEPC is simply trying to bring about a fuller mobilization of the Nation's manpower for war and a fuller realization of the principle of human equality on which the Nation is founded.

It would be genuinely tragic if race prejudice caused the liquidation of this agency. To American Negroes whose loyalty to the United States and devotion to democracy has remained steadfast in the face of bitter deprivations, the FEPC is a vital symbol. To renounce it would be to slam a door upon the legitimate hopes which our own American litany has engendered and encouraged. 3-7-44

Republicans Join Poll-Tax Group Against FEPC

Daily Worker - New York, N.Y.
3-3-44

By Adam Lapin

(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Republicans in Congress are ganging up with die-hard poll taxers from the south in a double-barrelled drive against the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee.

On the Senate side of Capitol Hill, Republicans led by Senator Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota, supported in an appropriations subcommittee the amendment offered by Senator Richard Russell of Georgia to kill FEPC.

On the House side, Republican Congressmen are actively cooperating with the smear investigation of FEPC being conducted by Rep Howard Smith of Virginia.

This clear-cut record is expected to have important political reverberations among the Negro people despite Republican claims to increased Negro support in New York and other parts of the country.

GOP GANGS UP

Several weeks ago the three Republican members of the Smith committee, Reps. Fred A. Hartley of New Jersey, John Jennings of Tennessee and Clare Hoffman of Michigan, signed a Smith committee report challenging the authority of FEPC.

Now the Smith committee has under way a full-fledged investigation of FEPC in which all three Republican members are playing an active role.

After winding up an attack at the War Shipping Administration for giving equal job opportunities to Negro seamen, the Smith committee today tackled FEPC's order requiring the employment of Negroes on 16 Southern railroads.

Principal witness during the day was Sidney Alderman, counsel for the Southern Railway Company and spokesman for other railroads which have defied FEPC.

Before Alderman could even complete his lengthy statement which took several nours, Rep. Jennings interjected to express the view that "a general strike and tie-up" would result if the FEPC's order were enforced. 3-3-44

NEGRO ATTORNEY TESTIFIES

Late in the afternoon Charles Houston, noted Negro attorney, appeared on behalf of two groups of Negro railroad workers. He answered Alderman and testimony by Frank L. Mulholland, attorney for the Railway Labor Executives Association, defending discrimination on the railroads.

Hoffman walked out soon after Houston began presenting the facts about discrimination against Negroes.

Jennings snorted angrily once at the Negro attorney, and then followed Hoffman out of the room.

Hartley remained and asked Houston a series of questions which indicated he didn't think FEPC had authority to do anything.

During the WSA hearing yesterday, Jennings said:

"I feel like the colored man ought to have the right to work but let us be frank about it." 3-3-44

Addressing himself to Marshall E. Dimock, head of WSA's Recruitment and Manning organizaaion who had explained the rotating hiring system whereby all seamen are given work regardless of race, Jennings continued: "Don't you think for the time of the war we ought not have a rigid rule that would slow up the war effort in order to arbitrarily force two races to sleep together when they do not want to sleep together?"

HOFFMAN NEGRO-BAITING

Rep. Hoffman, long notorious as a labor-baiter, assumed the new role of a Negro-baiter.

When Craig Vincent, East Coast representative of the Recruitment and Manning Organization, said he believed in the social equality for Negroes, Hoffman demanded to know if this included "social intermingling" and "intermarriage."

Objecting to WSA's policy of non-discrimination which is in accord with FEPC directives, Hoffman asked: 3-3-44

"Do you think sending them that colored man helped in the war effort? Did you not realize that was going to make discord on the ship?"

The Republican congressmen showed as much zest in going after FEPC as the two poll taxers on the committee, Chairman Smith and Rep. Hugh Peterson of Georgia.

Frederick N. Myers, of the National Maritime Union and Nathan Jacobson of the Marine, Cooks and Stewards Union of the Pacific, were given a prefunctory hearing late yesterday to state anti-discrimination policies of their union.

Rep. Smith passed a note around among committee members not to ask any questions.

But Rep. Hoffman said he wanted Myers to come back this morning so he could ask about strikes allegedly called by the NMU on the West Coast.

Myers promptly showed up today, but he wasn't asked any questions.

Hoffman had been tipped off in the meantime that the NMU hasn't called any strikes on the West Coast or anywhere else.

FEPC Settles 157 Complaints

Daily Worker N.Y., N.Y.

A total of 308 complaints of racial or religious discrimination in war employment was disposed of by the New York Regional Office of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee between Jan. 1 and May 31, according to Edward Lawson, regional director. 6-5-44

Of these, 157 were satisfactorily adjusted, Lawson announced, while 119 were dismissed as without merit following careful investigation. Twelve were withdrawn by complainants; 12 dropped because of insufficient evidence, and eight dismissed because the committee lacked jurisdiction.

During the same period, Lawson added, 412 new complaints were received. Of these, 305 were against war industries, 8 against government agencies, 27 against unions. The largest number of complaints, 332 came from Negroes charging discrimination. Seventy-one alleged discrimination for religion, and the remainder charged their national origin was a bar to wartime employment opportunities.

Unity on Bills Vital For Permanent FEPC

Daily Worker — New York, N.Y.

2-3-44

By Eugene Gordon

The Negro and the Jewish people, and the foreign born—not to mention other interested parties, including the progressive allies of these groups—have been saying for a long time that there ought to be a permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee and that it ought to have statutory authority.

Congressman Vito Marcantonio, on Feb. 5, 1942—just about a year ago—introduced into the House of Representatives a bill "to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, color, creed, religion, national origin, or citizenship." This was the kind of bill the people had been saying they ought to have.

This bill was named H. R. 1732. It was turned over to the Committee on Judiciary.

Congressman Thomas Scanlon of Pennsylvania, some time later, introduced into the House H. R. 3986, aimed at doing the same things the Marcantonio bill wanted to do. Congressman William L. Dawson, the House's lone Negro member, got together, later still, with Congressman Scanlon. Dawson explained that he had some ideas for a bill. The two men agreed to combine their ideas in Scanlon's H. R. 3989.

SCANLON DAWSON BILL

Scanlon and Dawson, when they finished, had a new bill. It is now commonly called Dawson's. It is properly called the Scanlon-Dawson bill and is named H. R. 4004. It went by mistake to the Committee on Labor and is still there.

So this is the way matters stand now with respect to bills aiming at making FEPC permanent: 2-3-44

H. R. 1732, Marcantonio's bill, is still in the Committee on Judiciary; H. R. 4004, the Scanlon-Dawson bill, is still in the Committee on Labor. The Marcantonio bill is on the way out of the Committee on Judiciary, several Congressmen's signatures having been signed to Discharge Petition No. 18. Discharge Petition No. 18—when it gets 218 Congressmen's signatures—will force H. R. 1732, the Marcantonio bill, upon the floor of the House to be discussed and voted on. Both Scanlon and Dawson have signed Discharge Petition No. 18. Now, H. R. 4004, the Scanlon-Dawson bill, has no discharge petition in its favor, so far.

There seems to be two different groups in the country fighting for two different bills. That is not really the case, however. The group which has been rooting for support of Marcantonio's H. R. 1732 and the group which is behind the Scanlon-Dawson H. R. 4004 want precisely the same thing, and that is a permanent FEPC with power to speak with legal authority to employers who incline to discriminate because of race, color, creed, religion, national origin, or citizenship.

Marcantonio is said to have agreed to support an amendment to his bill, if that amendment would improve it. People who have seen both the Marcantonio and the Scanlon-Dawson bills say that H. R. 4004 (Scanlon-Dawson) is better in some ways than Marcantonio's. They ask why these good points can't become a part of Marcantonio's, in the form of an amendment. They say that this might be the best thing to do, after all, since H. R. 1732 is already on the way out of the Committee on Judiciary.

Unity behind one of these bills must be brought about soon, because certain elements which hate unity are now slinking in and taking advantage of the seeming discord.

Quiz Senators On Anti-FEPC Vote

Daily World - Atlanta, Ga. 3-5-44

WASHINGTON, D. C.(S N S)—Members of the Senate sub-committee on appropriations were asked this week whether their unanimous vote supporting an amendment of Senator Richard B. Russell of Georgia meant that they favored the wiping out of the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

After his amendment to the Independent Offices appropriation bill had been supported unanimously, Senator Russell told reporters: "I hope it wipes out the Fair Employment Practice Committee." 3-5-44

The Senators who voted for the Russell amendment are Carter Glass, Va., Kenneth McKellar, Tenn., John H. Bankhead, Ala., Harry S. Truman, Mo., Theodore F. Green, R. I., James M. Mead, N. Y., B. R. Maybank, S. C., and Senator Russell, Democrats; Gerald P. Nye, N. D., Styles Bridges, N. H., Wallace H. White, Jr., Me., C. Wayland Brooks, III, and Clyde M. Reed, Kan., Republicans.

The NAACP letter of inquiry said: "It was a shock to read that you voted to abolish the Fair Employment Practice Committee. We are, therefore, asking you to give us your comment on the action taken by the sub-committee. We would appreciate also if you would indicate your position on the work of the FEPC and more specifically whether you favor an adequate appropriation to continue this vital work."

FORT BENNING, Ga.—(ANP)—Discrimination in the army based upon a concerted policy that denies recognition to qualified colored service men, was brought to light again this week when Dr. Clinton E. Knox, a Harvard Ph. D., and Louis Jones, who holds an M. A., were transferred to the quartermaster division at camp Polk, La. 1-14-44

Dr. Knox received a Ph. D. in history at Harvard and taught at Morgan college prior to his induction. Proficient in French, German and Egyptian, while Louis Jones, former assistant of Dr. Charles Johnson at Fisk university, received no better consideration.

While both Knox and Jones have been given new assignments, it is said to be questionable whether either will be given ratings and assignments in accordance with their academic training in the army.

"What the FEPC means to the railroads," was the subject of an address delivered Sunday afternoon at a mass meeting in Zion Hill Baptist Church, by A. Bruce Hunt, regional director for the Fair Employment Practice Committee (FEPC) in offices in Atlanta.

The meeting, which was largely attended in spite of the inclement weather conditions, was held under the sponsorship of the Ladies' Auxiliary Local No. 20, of the International Association of Railway Employees. It began at 8:30 o'clock.

In the course of his address which was helpful to those whose duties and functions come under the jurisdiction of FEPC in the matter of wages, hiring, firing and upgrading, Mr. Hunt said, "Negro labor on the railroads can help to see justice done Negroes in every department of industry, particularly the railroads." 3-22-44

TOWARD FREEDOM

Defending the FEPC

Daily Worker, New York, N.Y. 4-8-44

By Doxey Wilkerson

President Roosevelt continues to fight for FEPC. Let labor and all other people's organizations rally to his support in this struggle. The threatened destruction of FEPC would be a disastrous blow to war production and to the growing anti-fascist unity of the American people.

The Committee on Fair Employment Practice was first authorized in June, 1941, by Executive Order 8802, and was later reorganized and strengthened in May, 1943, by Executive Order 9346. It now consists of a chairman and six members, representing labor and management in equal numbers. The committee maintains central offices in Washington, D. C., and nine regional offices. It employs a staff of 113 workers, more than half of whom are in the field.

At a time when the nation faces a critical shortage of manpow[er] to back the coming invasion of E[u]rope, when the home-fron[t] con-flict between the political for[ces] of democracy and fascism grow increasingly acute, it is well to [re]call the purpose, accomplishments, and still undone tasks of FEPC. They serve to highlight the urgent need for real mass struggle to protect this vital war agency from the three-pronged attack it now faces.

In Executive Order 9346, President Roosevelt declared that "the successful prosecution of the war demands the maximum employment of all available workers regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin." He established "a new Committee on Fair Employment Practice, to promote the fullest utilization of all available manpower, and to eliminate discriminatory employment practices." To the four categories of discrimination listed in the Order, he later added unwarranted discrimination against non-citizens.

JURISDICTION

The committee has jurisdiction over complaints of employment discrimination on the part of all agencies of the Federal Government, all employers holding government contracts, all other employers engaged in essential war production, and the unions of workers in such agencies and establishments. 4-8-44

FEPC receives and handles a tremendous volume of complaints of employment discrimination. There were 1,016 cases pending on July 1, 1943. An additional 1,930 cases were docketed during the following six months. During this same period, 989 cases were satisfactorily closed, leaving a case load of 1,957 pending complaints on Jan. 1, 1944.

Over three-fourths of the 1,930 cases docketed during the last half of 1943 concerned employment discriminations based on race or color, directed chiefly against Negroes. It is notable, however, that there were 189 cases (10 per cent) of discrimination against religious groups, chiefly Jews; 132 cases (7 per cent) involving non-citizens, and 99 cases (5 per cent) involving foreign-born citizens. Some 1,264 of the complaints were against private employers; 584 were against government agencies; and 82 were against labor unions, almost entirely AFL.

Despite its limited staff and the magnitude of its job, FEPC gets results. That is why it is fought so bitterly by southern "white supremacy" Democrats and defeatist-led Republicans. That is also why the democratic, win-the-war forces of our country must fight back with all the vigor they can command. FEPC is an indispensable instrument of victory for the Negro and other minority peoples, for organized labor, and for our embattled nation as a whole.

In every major crisis the President has fought for FEPC. Last spring, when the committee was disintegrating following WMC Commissioner Paul McNutt's suspension of the railroad hearings, the President reorganized and strengthened the committee, removed it from WMC jurisdiction, and authorized the railroad hearings to proceed. Last fall, when Comptrollor-General Lindsay Warren ruled that FEPC directives did not have the force of "orders," the President promptly reversed the ruling and declared that FEPC directives must be obeyed.

GREATEST THREAT

Now, FEPC faces the greatest threat in its history. The reactionary Howard Smith Committee is pushing forward its smear "investigation," and thereby tying up top FEPC officials to prevent the effective conduct of their work. The Senate recently passed the Richard Russell amendment which would kill FEPC unless it receives a Congressional appropriation for its work after June 30, 1944.

But the President continues to fight for FEPC. Probably anticipating the Senate's action, he asked Congress for an appropriation of $585,000 to enlarge the field staff and carry on the essential war functions of FEPC. It is against this appropriation that the reactionaries now turn their fire. It is to the support of this appropriation that the progressive forces of the country now must throw their political power. 4-8-44

Send thousands of letters telegrams to the House Appropriations Committee, demanding approval of the $585,000 FEPC appropriation. Send copies and letters of support to President Roosevelt.

This is the way to preserve and strengthen FEPC's much-needed services in providing the manpower necessary to back up the coming Allied invasion of Europe.

This is also the way to strengthen the political unity of organized labor, the Negro people and all other democratic forces for victory in the 1944 elections, for victory in the war, and for victory in the peace which will follow.

Gibson Flays Racial Group

Constitution-Atlanta, Ga. 4-15-44

WASHINGTON, April 14.—(AP) Bitterly attacking the fair employment practices committee (FEPC), Representative Gibson, Democrat, Georgia, told congress today the agency "most flagrantly violates its own reputed functions of non-discrimination" by hiring more Negroes than whites as employes.

He termed FEPC "a totally useless, vicious bureau that breeds disunity," and declared it has a total of 61 Negro employes drawing $173,560 yearly, compared to only 45 white employes drawing $143,600 yearly.

"Compare that with the percentage of Negroes against the percentage of whites in this country," Gibson declared in a statement which he obtained unanimous house consent to publish in the Congressional Record. 4-15-44

He declared the 106 FEPC employes are the highest paid, on a per capita basis, of any bureau or department of the government.

Ramspeck Pledges To Abolish FEPC

Daily World-Atlanta, Ga. 5-3-44

In their regular session Monday, Atlanat's city councilmen heard a letter from Congressman Robert Ramspeck of the Fifth Georgia District.

The representative of the United States Congress informed council through the letter that he had urged President Roosevelt to abolish or to move away from Atlanta the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices to which council had objected shortly after offices were established here in the 10 Forsyth building, headed by A. Bruce Hunt as chief examiner. At that council was passed a resolution which was sent to all representatives of Congress in Washington asking that they use their influence in ridding Atlanta of the agency ,which council stated at that time "may cause trouble between the races in this city."

Shortly after council made the protest of FEPC here, Senator Richard Russell, Georgia's junior member of the upper house of Congress, took a leading role in the nation's capitol in movements to abolish the President's Committee, set up through executive order mainly for the purpose of aiding Negroes and other minority groups in employment matters in all sections of the country, especially in industry. 5-3-44

Although Senator Walter F. George, Georgia's senior Senator, to whom the council also sent representations objecting to the office setup here, was out of his office in Washington Monday, his secretary, it was learned, informed council it would be brought to his attention on his return. There has been no statement from other Georgia Congressional representative recently, but is was learned that the majority are for abolishing FEPC, at least the Georgia regional office here.

Negroes in Plea To Save FEPC

PM-New York, N.Y. 5-18-44

Twenty-seven prominent Negroes last night wired members of the Senate urging them to approve full appropriations for the FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Committee), emphasizing that the agency was helping to insure 100 per cent production efficiency in backing the invasion. 5-18-44

Signers of the telegram included Walter White, executive secretary, NAACP (National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People), Paul Robeson, A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters; Dr. Channing Tobias, secretary, YMCA; Rev. Adam Clayton Powell, and New York Councilman Benjamin Davis.

Senator Speaks at Ceremonies in Honor of A. P. Randolph, Porters' Leader

5-3-44

Congressional authorization of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee was advocated last night by Senator Robert F. Wagner during ceremonies at Carnegie Hall honoring A. Philip Randolph, Negro union leader.

Senator Wagner compared the problems faced in the campaign for Negro rights with those that had to be overcome in his drive for labor legislation. He pledged his personal efforts to obtain a permanent committee.

The Senator recalled arguments raised in the debate preceding enactment of the National Labor Relations Act that such things had to be done "gradually" and would be solved "in their own way" rather than through premature efforts "to turn the world upside down."

'Same Words Being Used'

"Exactly the same words are being used," he declared, "with regard to the problems of the United States aging Negroes in the present war. They, too, are being told that the same words are being used by the perpetrators of the wrong." He offered his own experience as "an encouragement to labor's black army, it becomes more people who are in control shouldsary to improve the lot of the Negroes, Senator Wagner commended Mr. Randolph, who, as in be allowed to settle the problem greatest contradiction and scandal in their own way.'

known" and that American Negroes wanted "first-class citizenship in our times."

"They are through with jim-crow," he added. "They reject and denounce anti-Semitism. They condemn anti-Catholicism. They demand equal treatment for Japanese-Americans with Germans and Italians. Yes, the most humble and oppressed of all minorities are ready to sacrifice and suffer for the salvation of their spirits."

Asserting that German prisoners of war received better treatment than American Negro troops, he asked for the elimination of "discrimination and segregation in the armed forces."

Peace Conference Bid

Mr. Randolph also asked for a permanent committee on fair employment practices, urged that Negroes and labor be represented at the peace conference and that the President or Congress create a national commission to study all racial and minority problems here and abroad.

He announced that the "March on Washington Movement," which campaigned for the FEPC, would hold a conference June 25-26 in Chicago, at which an attempt would be made to assess the present status of the Negro.

Other speakers at the meeting included Laurence T. Hosie, who made the presentation of the Clendenin award to Mr. Randolph in behalf of the Workers Defense League; Prof. Maynard Krueger, of the University of Chicago, and Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, president of the National Council of Negro Women. Newbold Morris, president of thhe City Council, presided.

The presentation ceremonies were followed by a concert of artists headed by Duke Ellington and Maurice Rocco.

HOUSE VOTES BILL WITH FEPC FUNDS

Times-Newyork N.Y. 5-27-44

After 2 Defeats of $500,000 for Agency, It Is Finally Left in Measure by 123 to 119

By C. P. TRUSSELL

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, May 26—By a four-margin vote of 123 to 119 the House gave the first Congressional recognition this evening to the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee by allowing it $500,000 for maintenance in the $1,033,358,367 War Agencies Appropriation Bill.

Then it passed the measure, 247 to 58, and sent it to the Senate for another contest over the agency which Mr. Roosevelt set up last year to prevent discrimination in war hiring because of race, creed or color.

On two preliminary tests, made with the House in committee status, the FEPC, which was denounced by Southern Democrats as "a trouble maker," and "creator of racial prejudice and dissension," and by Republicans as "another creature of executive order rather than of law," appeared to have been put out of business.

In the Independent Offices Appripriation bill, now in conference, agreement has been reached on an amendment which would permit agencies created by executive order and not having attained Congressional authorization to continue until Jan. 1 only unless appropriations are made for their maintenance. The amendment, sponsored by Senator Richard B. Russell of Georgia, concededly had the FEPC as a principal target.

Exemption of FEPC in Prospect

The appropriation voted by the House, if it gets through the Senate, will exempt the FEPC from the provisions of the Russell amendment and perhaps pave the way for it to receive a statutory rank, as is provided in bills now pending. 5-27-44

Voting tests on the FEPC followed bitter fighting for much of two days in the House, after the appropriations measure, covering the 1945 supply accounts of eighteen war agencies had been taken to the floor under a unanimous consent agreement that points of order would be waived. It was not until this consent had been given that foes of the FEPC learned that the bill included the agency's operating fund, which would have been subject to a point of order as it has not been authorized by Congress.

Representative Vito Marcantonio, American Labor Party, New York, took the leadership in getting the appropriation through, as Southern Democrats opposed the continuation of the agency. The FEPC has previously been supported by funds allocated by the President from funds under his control.

Role of Agency is Told

Mr. Marcantonio contended that the FEPC had only one mission, the prevention of discrimination in employment because of race, creed or color. Representative Sam Hobbs of Alabama declared:

"Under this infamous, nefarious FEPC, the majority of the American people, the bulk of the taxpayers, are being discriminated against every day. The FEPC is denying white people the right to work or is ousting them from employment."

Representative Robert Ramspeck of Georgia, Democratic whip and chairman of the Civil Service Committee which has investigated the operations of Federal agencies, said that the FEPC "has done more harm and created more race prejudice than anything in my memory."

Representative Malcolm C. Tarver of Georgia offered an amendment which would strike the FEPC appropriation from the bill.

On a standing vote, taken in committee status, the Tarver amendment was adopted tentatively by 139 to 95, with Republican members giving it unexpectedly strong support. Mr. Marcantonio demanded tellers. Again about half of the Republicans supported the Tarver proposal and it again was adopetd tentatively by 141 to 103. 5-27-44

Southerners Against Measure

When the roll was called for final passage there was recorded perhaps the largest vote against a war appropriation measure since Pearl Harbor. Of the fifty-eight who voted against the bill, all but seven were from Southern States.

The measure went to the Senate without change from the amounts approved by the Appropriations Committee. An attempt by Representative Henry C. Dworshak, Republican of Idaho, to cut $5,500,000 from the $58,265,357 appropriation of the Office of War Information to eliminate a contingency fund for its Overseas Branch, was defeated, 121 to 69.

Representative Frank B. Keefe, Republican of Wisconsin, failed in an attempt to deny funds to maintain the labor production office in the War Production Board, which he contended was duplicating functions of a similar agency in the Labor Department.

A Large Bloc Of Republicans

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky. 5-28-44

A $500,000 appropriation to continue the Fair Employment Practises Committee got through the House by the skin of its teeth last week. This narrow escape of the committee from extinction brings to mind the following facts: The continuance of the committee is a matter of special and immediate concern to American Negroes, since the committee's function is to proceed against employment discrimination because of race, color or creed. The Republicans in Congress, stimulated by a lively hope of winning back to the Republican fold this year Negro votes lost since 1932, have been making loud professions of interest in Negro welfare. The Republicans in the House are almost as numerous as the Democrats. Democratic opposition in the House to the F.E.P.C. is limited to the Southern bloc. Solid Republican support of the F.E.P.C. in the House could count on enough Democrats loyal to President ROOSEVELT to put the committee out of any danger.

These are the facts. Why, then, the committee's close call? We read in The Associated Press' report: "The original action in committee of the whole, where record votes are not possible, came on adoption of an amendment to eliminate the fund (for the F.E.P.C.), the teller vote being 141 to 103, with a large bloc of Republicans joining a solid Southern delegation in opposition to the F.E.P.C." (The italics are ours.) In other words, the House at first decided actually to kill the F.E.P.C., and this decision was made possible by "a large bloc of Republicans." 5-28-44

However, under the House's procedure, reconsideration was possible later and this time the appropriation squeaked through by 128 votes to 119. Neither time did the House permit a roll call vote, so that it is not possible to report the exact line-up between parties. But certainly there was no sign of a Republican fight for the bill at any stage, and, when it was in committee of the whole as we have seen, the reporters in the House press gallery noted "a large bloc of Republicans" banding with the Southern Democrats.

It is the same old alliance that helped to kill poll tax repeal in the Senate. It is also an alliance which the Republicans are going to have to try to explain to the Negro in the coming campaign.

Marcantonio and FEPC

Daily Worker-New York, N.Y. 5-29-44

CONGRESSIONAL enemies of the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee were set back on their heels last week after flooding the House with oratory throughout the day in an attempt to wipe this vital war-time legislation off the books. 5-29-44

It took a People's Congressman—Rep. Vito Marcantonio—to lead the battle against the combined efforts of the southern polltaxers and northern Republicans. A veteran in the struggle against this un-American clique in the House, Rep. Marcantonio managed through brilliant strategy to save the President's FEPC by a hair-line vote—123 to 119. That narrow margin of four votes must sound the alarm to labor and the public generally.

The measure next goes to the Senate. Here everyone must be on his toes, for the nation recently learned a bitter lesson in the polltax fight. It is not enough merely to appreciate the invaluable role being played by Rep. Marcantonio in defending and maintaining the FEPC. The future of this measure is in your hands. Wishful thinking won't preserve it. Mass support will.

FEPC FORCES CAPTAIN TO REHIRE 7 SEAMEN

Courier-Pittsburgh, Pa. 1-1-44

NEW YORK (ANP)—Quick intervention on the part of the New York regional office of the FEPC last week corrected discrimination against six Negro and one Chinese seamen, who had been discharged by the master of a United States Lines ship for no apparent reason other than their race.

The seven men were signed on the S.S. Calobre, in Baltimore recently, presumably for an ocean voyage. However, when the vessel arrived in New York City a few days later, all were discharged, on orders of the captain, and only the white members of the crew were retained. Because they had been given no adequate explanation of their discharge, the seamen charged that they had been discriminated against by the captain,

Name Father Roche Examiner For FEPC

5-11-44

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Appointment of the Rev. Richard Joseph Roche as an associate examiner of the Fair Employment Practice Committee was announced immediately. All today by Chairman Malcolm Ross. In order that the qualifications of the non-white workers appeared to be settled immediately, a clear case of discrimination. Conferences with officers of the ship could be settled immediately and of the United States Lines concluded with an agreement that seven of the men would be interviewed again and if found to be qualified, all seven men would be reinstated. The reinterviews were conducted at the request of the U. S. Navy in the presence of a representative of the FEPC investigation because of their race, in violation of Executive Order 9346, and requested an FEPC investigation through their union.

SEVEN REHIRED

Samuel Risk, FEPC examiner, accompanied by a patrolman from the National Maritime union, boarded the ship immediately and rehired.

Father Roche was born in Haverhill, Mass. His home is at Haverhill, Mass. Oblate College, Newburgh, N. Y. attended Boston University and also received his M. A. degree from that institution.

Mr. Ross said that Father Roche would be assigned to the central office staff, where he will review and analyze cases handled in the field.

Mrs. Pearl Maddox, who has five nephews in the armed forces, two overseas, is shown as she told the President's FEPC in session at St. Louis last week that she answered ad for women workers at the Amertorp Corp, subsidiary of the American Can Company, makers of torpedoes for for the Navy, and was turned down on account of color. "I was willing to do anything, even clean toilets, to help the war effort," she said. The Amertorp was one of eight firms against whom charges were aired. Lack of Federal Authority to Compel Race Hating Management to Keep Contracts Features 2-Day Hearing

Afro American — Baltimore, Md.

WHAT—FEPC (President's Fair Employment Practice Committee) hearings.

WHERE—St. Louis, Mo., Customs House Building.

WHEN—August 1 and 2.

RESULTS: Three plants — including Amertorp Corp., Bussman Mfg. Co., Wagner Electric Co.—cited for refusing to hire colored women, remained defiant. Four other plants, St. Louis Shipbuilding, Carter Carburetor, McQuay-Norris and McDonnell Aircraft, were charged with refusing to hire colored women or upgrade colored men workers. Three promised to conform, one remained defiant. U.S. Cartridge Co., said it could not end jim crow building and status of colored workers.

FEPC has no power, save publicity, to compel war plants to obey the President's executive orders outlawing discrimination in employment. Every war plant with government orders has a signed contract with the government that it will hire qualified people regardless of race, color and creed.

But when race-hating plant managements refuse to keep their word, the government doesn't stop payments on the contracts. It permits the race haters to keep right on breaking their government contracts with impunity.

The FEPC, as the agency of a powerful, hypocritical government, is so weak it is pathetic. 8-12-44

WASHINGTON, D. C.—An agreement to upgrade Negro car cleaners to helpers and dining car waiters to stewards has been reached with the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice announced on Monday.

It was further revealed that five Negroes have been employed as stewards with retroactive seniority rights of six months to a year.

Although the Chicago and Northwestern company was involved in the FEPC hearings last September, the complaint of the waiters was not included because of late submission. The matter was negotiated by the Chicago office of the FEPC. 3-11-44

RESIGNATION ACCEPTED

The President on Monday announced official acceptance of the resignation of P. B. Young Sr., as a member of the Fair Employment Practice Committee and the appointment of Attorney Charles H. Houston of Washington to fill the vacancy. He also announced the resignation of Samuel Zemurray of New Orleans, La., as a member of the Committee and the appointment of Charles Horn, president of the Federal Cartridge Company of Minneapolis, Minn., as a member of FEPC. 3-11-44

Mr. Houston threw a light upon the controversial subject of the meaning of FEPC "directives" last Thursday when he conceded to the Smith committee investigating FEPC for Congress that FEPC had no authority to issue directives to war contractors adjudged guilty of violating the executive order.

Representing the Association of Railway Employees and the International Association of Colored Railway Trainmen and Enginemen, Mr. Houston testified that the directives being attacked by the railroads are, in view of the nature of the FEPC set-up, nothing more than recommendations.

MUST PERMIT EMPLOYMENT

He told the committee that "if you permit the authority of the United States to be flouted and say you will not permit employment to citizens of the United States, then you are digging the grave for thousands in the next generation." 3-11-44

The real function of the FEPC, Houston declared, is to bring the problem of racial discrimination to the attention of the public. "Like slavery," he said, "it is a problem that must be faced sooner or later, and isn't going to be put off."

Chairman Smith suggested that if the unions really wanted to eliminate improper conditions they ought to do something about the Negro employes they represent but don't permit to belong to the unions. He said that "doesn't square with our American way of life."

He was quick to add, however, that he was not "talking about race equality," because "I come from a part of the country where they don't believe in it."

Reps. Clare Hoffman (R) of Michigan, Jennings (D) of Tennessee, and Peterson (D) of Georgia, sat through a long day listening to Alderman and Frank Mulholland, counsel for the railroad brotherhoods, attack the FEPC; but began to leave when Houston began to speak for the Negro unions and on behalf of the FEPC.

In the meantime, the hostile attitudes expressed by Counsel Sydney Alderman for the railroads and Mulholland for the brotherhoods have raised considerable speculation concerning the statement made early last week by Judge Walter P. Stacy, chairman of a special railroad employment committee appointed by President Roosevelt to study the impasse between the FEPC and the railroads. Judge Stacy had said: "The course being pursued after three days of conferences and discussions in Washington this week has the approval of the railroads, the unions and the chairman and counsel of the FEPC."

He declared further that "the committee is of the opinion that progress has been made up to the present time and is hopeful that a solution may be reached that will be acceptable to all the parties concerned."

mittee, through its chairman, Rep. Mary T. Norton (D. of N. J.) has announced a favorable report of the Scanlon bill for a permanent FEPC without amendments.

The bill, as reported, carries provisions making it posible for the FEPC to seek enforcement of its directives in the federal courts. It also includes provisions outlawing discriminations by labor unions, a part of the bill objected to by the American Federation of Labor.

Doubt Early Passage

Any employer having in his employ more than five persons who is (1) engaged in interstate or foreign commerce; (2) under contract with the United States or any agency thereof; or (3) performing work, under subcontract or otherwise, called for by a contract to which the United States or any agency thereof is a party, is subject to the Act. It applies likewise to any labor under which has five or more members in the employ of one or more employers covered.

The Scanlon bill (H R. 3986) favorably reported by the committee is identical with those introduced by Reps. William L. Dawson and Charles LaFollette.

The next move is for the Rules Committee of the House to give the bill the right of way in the House. Observers here believe such action is unlikely, and that a petition of 218 Congressmen will be necessary to get the measure on the floor. There is little likelihood that this will happen this session of Congress. The bill, however, will be reintroduced early in the 79th Congress, and action is expected early during the session.

Pleased With Action

A. Philip Randolph and Knight Chambers, co-chairmen of the National Council for a Permanent FEPC, in a statement following favorable report of the bill, said: 'Recommendation of the bill for a permanent FEPC by the House Labor Committee soon after the election campaign is a reason for confidence in campaign pledges.

Both the Republican and Democratic leadership promised enactment of the bill after the election, and both Democrats and Republican supported the bill in committee. We look forward to early enactment of this fundamental measure for the implementation of basic American rights on the same broad, bipartisan basis as in the House Labor Committee."

Makers of 50 per cent of the fuses used in this country, a subsidiary of the McGraw Electrical Co., has contract for electric fuses with the U.S. Army Air Forces, Signal Corps and the U.S. Navy. Has 1400 employees, 300 men and 1100 women. Employs 8 colored men, all janitors.

Company defense: Can not employ colored women because of the deep-seated and universal unwillingness of the people of St. Louis and Missouri to integrate the two races. Consistent segregation is the law in the city and State and the plant has no facilities for segregation and even the U.S. Employment Service maintains jim-crow offices. Further, there is ample white female labor to meet our needs.

MR. TRIMBLE—What happened when you applied?

MISS THORNTON — They said "we're all filled up."

G. B. PEARSON

Supervisor of U.S. Employment Service.

MR. TRIMBLE—What kind of orders for workers did you receive from his company?

A—They all specified "white workers only."

GEORGE B. HOGAN

Counsel for company.

MR. HOUSTON—The committee is as concerned with the war as is the Bussman Co. Our colored and white boys need fuses and we want you to continue to manufacture them. I can't believe that, as more Americans are killed, management can't go to these employees and show them the necessity for abandoning their prejudices.

Mr. Hogan

MR. HOGAN—You want us to hire 20 white and 10 colored instead of 30 white. Why?
